Mars, although one of the group in conjunction with the moon during the earlier days of the month, does not reproduce the picture, and so we find him still an evening star when the year goes out. At that time, however, he is only twenty minutes away from the sun and is drawing closer and closer to that body, so that early the coming year we shall have him one of the morning galaxy.

Saturn starts the month as an evening star, but on the 17th falls in with the sun, and when he emerges from the conflict it is as a morning star we shall find him. It will, however, be some little while before he makes his appearance sufficiently pronounced to attract our attention.

Neptune is in opposition with the sun on the 16th, after which he becomes an evening star. It may be hardly necessary to explain that the term denotes the status of the sun and planet to be such relatively that the earth is between the two and that all three are almost in a straight line. This is the most favorable opportunity for earthly ones to observe the planet and its special features.

Venus comes to us now at that charming hour when night is not yet and day is no more; when softly the twilight casts its tones or its fantastic reflections over everything and invites to a revery which blends vaguely with the play of light and shadow. All hail, peerless queen!

LEGAL NOTES.

SUIT BY LIFE INSURANCE POLICY HOLDER.—Crocker Gifford, a policy holder in the Family Fund Society, a co-operative and assessment life insurance association, brought an action in equity on behalf of himself and others similarly situated against Knight L. Clapp and others, its Directors, for the recovery of moneys diverted from a special fund, designated by the constitution of the company as a safety fund, which he alleged was misapplied to the payment of the expenses of the society and of usual and expected death claims generally. The corporation has been dissolved, and is in the hands of a receiver. The complaint did not contain allegations that the receiver had refused to bring such a suit when properly requested so to do, or had neglected his duty in that regard. The First Appellate Division has reversed an interlocutory judgment of the Special Term overruling demurrer to the complaint. The Court holds, in an opinion by Justice Patterson, that the complaint was demurrable on the ground that the plaintiff had not legal capacity to sue, and that whatever cause of action existed against the Directors who voted for the misapplication of the safety fund inhered in the receiver. If the receiver had refused to bring a suit when properly requested to do so, or had neglected his duty in that regard, the plaintiff and the other beneficiaries would have the right to bring a suit in equity against the Directors responsible for the diversion of the trust fund, but the averments in the complaint setting forth merely that the plaintiff, before suing, applied to the Court to compel the receiver to bring the suit, were not sufficient where it was merely alleged that plaintiff before suing, applied to the Court to compel the receiver to bring the suit or to authorize the use of his name in an action, and that such application was opposed by the receiver and denied by the Court. The presumption was that the denial was for some good and sufficient reason.

CIVIL SERVICE.—Francis G. Ward, who, at the outbreak of the Spanish-American war, was holding the office of Water Superintendent in the City of Buffalo, at a salary of $3,000 a year, enlisted in the military service, and accepted a commission in the United States Army as Lieutenant Colonel of the Two Hundred and Second Regiment. A resolution had been passed by the Common Council of that city that an employe of the city who enlisted in the service during the war should not lose his position by reason of his military service, and later a like resolution was passed by the Board of Public Works, which gave Col. Ward a leave of absence during his term of service, without pay during his absence. When Col. Ward's military service was terminated by honorable discharge, his application for reinstatement to his position was refused. He then sought a peremptory writ of mandamus requiring his restoration. A denial of the application has been sustained by the Appellate Division of the Fourth Department, which held, by Justice Spring, that as under the provisions of the charter of the City of Buffalo no person elected or appointed to any salaried office should, during his term of office, hold any other public position whatever, except that of notary public, and that by the acceptance of any other public office he should thereby cease his office under the act, the acceptance of Lieutenant Colonelcy operated to render the office of Water Superintendent vacant. The appointment of a successor was held to be effectual to remove the prior incumbent of the office. The Court also held that the vesting by the charter of the unrestricted power of appointment and removal of the Water Superintendent, that officer held his office during the pleasure of the board, and might be removed without notice or an opportunity to be heard on charges preferred.

PASSENGER ALIGHTING FROM A CAR.—Alida McAlan, in her suit against the Trustees of the New York and Brooklyn Bridge to recover damages for personal injuries, testified in the trial that, while a passenger on one of the Brooklyn Bridge cars, supposing the car had come to a full stop, she started to get off the rear platform, the gate at the side of which was open; that, as a matter of fact, the car was still in motion, and that in alighting she was thrown to the platform of the station in such a manner as to receive the injuries of which she complained. The guard on the car testified that he did not open the gate, but that it was opened by a passenger, just as the train was about to stop. A dismissal of the complaint in the Trial Term of the Supreme Court, Kings County, has been held by the Second Appellate Division, on appeal, to have been an error. Presiding Justice Goodrich, who gave the opinion, held that the defendant was responsible for the premature opening of the gate by the passenger, without objection on the part of the guard, and that it could not be said, as a matter of law, that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence.

LIQUOR TAX CERTIFICATE.—Joseph W. Baker, a hotel keeper in the village of Herkimer, "under a mistake as to requirements of the liquor tax law," paid on the alleged demand of the County Treasurer, Lorenzo O. Bucklin, an excessive amount for a liquor tax certificate. The County Treasurer thereupon paid one-third of such amount to the State Treasurer and the other two-thirds to the village, as required by the statute. In an action brought by Baker against the successor of such County Treasurer in his individual and representative capacity to recover the excess of payment so made, the Appellate Division of the Fourth Department, by Justice Smith, holds, affirming the judgment below dismissing the complaint, that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover, as such payment was a voluntary one, made under a mistake of law, and the defendant had no authority to devote to the payment of plaintiff's claim other excise moneys in his hands.

ADVANCE IN PRICE OF PAPER.

International Company Official Says It Will Be a Natural One.

Officers of the International Paper Company in this city were loath yesterday to discuss the report from Cincinnati that within a fortnight there will be a further rise in the prices of paper of from 20 to 25 per cent., due to the scarcity of wood and coal.

The only official expression that could be secured was this: "The demand for paper is very great at present. This company, while it is meeting all its contracts, is going carefully in the way of taking new business, though on this new business it already is getting higher prices.

"As to whether there will be a further rise will depend on natural conditions. Certainly we are not seeking to force prices up artificially or unnaturally. We are taking a conservative course, and if there is a rise, it will be a natural one. That is all I care to say."

From another source, however, it was learned that a further increase in prices had already practically been decided upon, but how great it would be could not be learned.

BROOKLYN MAN A SUICIDE.

William Reimer, recently a mixer in the Mollenhauer Sugar Refinery, at South Eleventh Street and Kent Avenue, Brooklyn, cut his throat with a razor in the presence of his wife and five children yesterday afternoon, and died soon after his admission to the Eastern District Hospital.

Reimer, who was thirty-six years old, resided on the second floor of a double brick tenement at 32 Division Avenue. During the last few weeks he had acted queerly toward his fellow-workmen, who then ignored him.

Reimer resented this, and last Tuesday, in a quarrel with Peter Geffken of 124 Grand Street, who worked beside him, he knocked Geffker senseless with a piece of wood. When the injured man revived he refused to make a complaint against Reimer, who was discharged from the employ of the company.

CITY'S GREAT SCHOOL ARMY

PUPILS REGISTERED, 385,474

The Board of Education has transmitted to Mayor Van Wyck its report for the fiscal year 1899. The school year reported on is the first during the whole of which the Department of Education under the Greater New York charter has existed. While, therefore, it is the second annual report of the board under the new charter, it is the first annual report for a complete school year. The following general statistics in regard to the city schools are given:

Total number of schools and departments, not including the Nautical School, 496; number of instructors or class teachers, 8,844; the number of Principals, Principals' assistants, and heads of departments not teaching, 630; the number of teachers of special branches, 300; the number of pupils on register, 385,474; the average daily attendance, 347,670; the number of regular sittings in school buildings, 407,423; the average number of pupils to a class teacher, 44. The amount of money expended for school purposes was $15,316,865.48, of which $1,219,049.14 was received from the State. The estimated general and school population is as follows:

	General.	School.
Manhattan and Bronx	2,117,104	298,000
Brooklyn	1,231,348	284,244
Queens	134,139	33,000
Richmond	67,280	14,172
Total	3,550,053	729,416

This shows an increase of 27,254 in the school population in a year, and to meet this annual increase from fifteen to twenty-five new schoolhouses must be erected each year.

The schools and departments under the jurisdiction of the several School Boards are as follows:

	Training.	Elementary. High.	Elementary.	Truant.	Total.
Manhattan and Bronx	1	3	242	1	247
Brooklyn	1	4	117	1	123
Queens	1	9	84	0	94
Richmond	0	3	29	0	32
Grand total	3	19	472	2	496

The report gives a list of school buildings for which plans are completed or nearly completed. It also gives a list of school buildings in course of construction.

The board, on Feb. 20, 1899, awarded a contract for a new schoolhouse in Manhattan, the first contract awarded for a school building since consolidation. Since then contracts have been awarded for eight other new school buildings and four additions in Manhattan and the Bronx, and for three new buildings and eight additions in Brooklyn, involving a total expenditure of $3,107,280. These new buildings and additions have 547 classrooms, and accommodations for 27,300 pupils. Of the $7,673,640 of corporate stock issued in March last, Manhattan and the Bronx received $4,083,640. The School Board paid $631,262 of this for twelve sites. Within seven weeks it expended $2,820,098.82. At the close of the fiscal year it had a balance of $595,101.62. Brooklyn, which received $2,873,000, made contracts for three new schoolhouses, additions to existing buildings, &c., involving an outlay of $904,293. Steps were also taken for the acquisition of seventeen sites by condemnation proceedings.

The report goes on to say that means should be provided as speedily as possible for obtaining other much-needed sites in parts of Manhattan and the Bronx, where the schools are overcrowded. Funds should also be provided immediately for improving fifteen sites already owned by the city in congested districts in those two boroughs.

During the past school year 8 new school buildings have been opened in Manhattan and the Bronx, containing 290 classrooms and accommodations for 12,000 pupils; 2 in Brooklyn, with 57 classrooms and accommodations for 3,037 pupils; 7 in Queens, with 35 classrooms and 1,400 seats, and 2 in Richmond, with 36 classrooms and 1,640 seats, making a total of 19 schoolhouses, 388 classrooms, and seating capacity for 18,077 pupils. New schools in Manhattan and the Bronx, which will be ready for occupancy in September next, will provide for 15,000 more pupils.

Although the Maxet committee is to resume sessions Tuesday, it has not yet been able to secure a meeting place. "While no arrangements for any meeting place for the committee have been made as yet," said Mr. Moss last night, "we shall have a place in time to announce it for Tuesday morning's session."

COFFEY AND COLE AT PEACE.

The expected clash yesterday between Senator Michael J. Coffey and Ashley W. Cole, President of the State Railroad Commission, because of aspersions cast upon that body by the Senator three weeks ago, did not come to pass at the hearing in the Brooklyn Rapid Transit troubles, at the Borough Hall, in Brooklyn. Senator Coffey, at a meeting held by indignant Brooklyn citizens to denounce the railroad company because of its new system of fares and transfers, said that the Commissioners would not effect any relief, because they "were owned body and soul by the railroads." Mr. Cole, at a meeting held two weeks ago, characterized the statement as a lie and the Senator as a dummy.

Shortly after the commission was called to order yesterday morning to hear further grievances on the part of the patrons of the Rapid Transit Company, Senator Coffey entered the room and took a seat near the door. Then James P. Farrell, President of the Fort Hamilton Citizens' Protective Association, announced that Mr. Coffey was present and would appear before the commission if desired. Senator Coffey immediately presented himself before Mr. Cole.

"Do you wish to make any statements?" asked Mr. Cole, in a mild tone.

"I do not think I should make the first statement," was the answer.

Mr. Cole replied that it might be better to wait until the case were decided before discussing their differences.

"Then I shall decline to discuss what the papers have said about me," said Senator Coffey smoothly, "and I think it would have been better for you to have ascertained just what I did say before you criticised me."

"That is fair," rejoined Mr. Cole in the same even tones; "and I want it understood, Senator, that I did not call any person a liar, or did I refer to any person as a scoundrel. What I did say was that if you were correctly reported you had cast aspersions on this commission, which should be proved or retracted."

That was all. The tension was relieved and Senator Coffey quietly took his departure. Some of those present who had looked for the next thing to a bout appeared to be disappointed.

Later on toward the close of the hearing the meeting turned into a sort of "love feast," as between Mr. Cole and Harry A. Hanbury. Mr. Cole retracted a statement made at the previous hearing, during which he referred to Mr. Hanbury as a "loafer," although he said he would not repeat the words, as they were offensive. The whole controversy, he said, had arisen from a misunderstanding. This Mr. Hanbury accepted, and thus peace was restored.

Mr. Farrell presently precipitated a laugh by remarking that he had expected "something would happen" when Mr. Coffey appeared during the early part of the hearing.

"You like a scrap, then?" put in Mr. Cole, quizzically.

"I do that," was the reply, whereat good nature was thoroughly restored.

The hearing began at 10 A. M., and was continued until nearly 5 o'clock, with an intermission of an hour and a half. Several witnesses were examined from the South Brooklyn contingent, who have been complaining of the change of system, and also a delegation from Corona. The points brought out did not differ materially from those of the previous hearing, with the exception of a sharp attack upon President Rossiter by John McKay, a citizen of Bay Ridge.

Mr. McKay charged that Mr. Rossiter was "doing the dirty work" of Wall Street men interested in the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company. He was called to order by Mr. Cole.

Upon Mr. Cole's suggestion it was decided that the commission and one of its Inspectors, together with representatives from the South Brooklynites and a representative of the company, shall inspect the system on Wednesday. They will meet at 7 A. M. on that day at Sixty-fifth Street, Bay Ridge.

Resolutions at Trenton Calling for Uniform College Examinations.

TRENTON, N. J., Dec. 2.—The Association of Colleges and Preparatory Schools of the Middle States and Maryland concluded its annual convention here to-day. These officers were elected: President—Dr. John G. White, New York; Vice Presidents—T. H. Lewis, Westminster, Md.; H. T. Spanger, Collegeville, Penn.; M. Woolsey Stryker, Clinton, N. Y.; A. H. Berlin, Wilmington, Del.; Thomas W. Sidwell, Washington, D. C.; Dr. James M. Green, Trenton; Secretary—Dr. Merrick Whitcomb, Philadelphia; Treasurer—John B. Kieffer, Lancaster, Penn.

A resolution was presented by Prof. Nicholas Murray Butler of Columbia University, and adopted, providing that the association urges the early establishment of a joint college admission examination board to be composed of representatives of colleges and preparatory schools in the Middle States and Maryland, and that the colleges be requested to co-operate in adopting a uniform standard of admission.

MARCONI SYSTEM FOR HAWAII.

Wireless Telegraphy to be Used for Messages Between Islands.

HONOLULU, Nov. 23.—Contracts have been made for connecting all the islands of the Hawaiian group by the Marconi system of wireless telegraphy. J. J. Cross, who went to New York for the purpose of negotiating with the inventor of the system, returned on the steamship Australia. He says that he has obtained the exclusive right to use the invention here, with an agreement from the inventor to provide an expert to put the system in working order.

Marconi, he says, claims that perfect communication between all the islands of Hawaii can be established at a small expense. Work is to be begun at once. The apparatus is to arrive here by Feb. 1, and the system will be in operation by March 1.

Ether Wave to Replace the Rudder.

LONDON, Dec. 2.—An invention has been tested at Weymouth for steering any craft, whether submerged or otherwise, by means of an ether wave on the wireless telegraphic principle. The model was subjected to a variety of tests, and followed the current wave as surely as if guided by a rudder. In addition to steering in straight lines, various figures were described. If further tests are successful, it is likely the system will be adopted by the Admiralty. Its effect on modern warfare is inestimable, as it is asserted that the system not only can be applied to torpedo and other craft, but can be attached to mines and other destructive agencies, firing them without visible means at the most vulnerable spots.

CAUSE OF KENTUCKY FEUDS

Isolation, Ignorance, and Whisky Said to be Responsible.

RAILROADS MUCH NEEDED

Rivalry of the Whites and Garrards, the Earliest Settlers, Led to Many Later Killings.

Special Correspondence THE NEW YORK TIMES.

MANCHESTER, Ky., Dec. 1.—Clay County knows that it has a bad name. The visitor finds that knowledge affecting its people who have never participated in the brutal assassinations that have characterized its two feuds of recent date. Decent and law-abiding men, some of them fairly educated, a few well educated, and others quite destitute of education, deplore it and denounce it altogether. It does not seem becoming, fair, or reasonable for a casual visitor to undertake in a day to account for Clay County's feuds. But even a little inquiry appears to justify the epigrammatic explanation sadly suggested by a man of education who lives among them: "Isolation, ignorance, and whisky are responsible for all our troubles and our bad name."

Manchester is an old town, older than its more important and most accessible neighbors, Barbourville and London, each twenty-four miles away, over difficult and unpleasant roads for wagons. Long before the day of the railroad it was prosperous, for a mountain town. Its salt works, run in a primitive fashion, furnished salt for a wide area of country, some of it going into Virginia and Tennessee, floating down to Frankfort by way of Goose Creek and the Kentucky River, the route by which the lumber went then and still goes. The salt works still operate in the plain, old way, but their product is consumed at home. Lumber is the staple of the country, and a profitable business is that of making and shipping staves.

THE WHITES AND GARRARDS.

Among the earliest settlers were the Garrards and the Whites. Both families became wealthy and influential. They also became social and political rivals. Each has opposed the other "from time immemorial." John White of Clay County was Speaker of the House of Representatives from 1841 to 1843. Henry Clay had a high opinion of him. His nephew, John D. White, has been in Congress and is trying to get in again on a contest with Boreing, another Republican. The Garrards, owning the old salt works, are now headed by Gen. Garrard, a man past eighty, who appears to cherish all the inherent traditions that have kept the Whites and Garrards rivals for years, and recently parties to one side or the other of the local feuds. Gen. Garrard is impetuous, to put it mildly. He has "no use" for Whites. In the course of years the county has divided into White and Garrard factions. If a man friendly to or favored by the Garrards got into trouble the Whites helped him out, and so vice versa. Hostility between the leaders was not always active. Not until very recently did it lead to murder. Now and then the Whites and Garrards even exchanged visits. But a murder case some years ago, resulting in the escape of one partisan from hanging for the crime, kept up a smothered bitterness and resentment.

The Whites and Garrards did not come to exchanges of shots. Both these families are of education, possibly not commensurate with their wealth, and are above the perpetration of murder. But the ignorant and brutal factionists adhering to one side or the other felt no restraints of cultivation. Garrard is a Democrat. The Whites are Republicans. The following is in both parties: The rivalry or hostility was disturbing, but not worse, until Garrard Baker was killed, many years ago, by "Jim" Wilson. The vendetta was in the Baker blood. It had appeared in the Strong-Amy feud in Breathitt County on the maternal side, and it required troops and courts to restrain and stamp it out. Garrard Baker's son swore at ten years of age to avenge his father's murder. Eleven years later "Jim" Wilson was killed, and his murderer was not discovered.

THE BAKERS AND HOWARDS.

The Bakers and Howards, traditional foes, were in business partnership a few years ago in the lumber trade. "Lou" Baker, the leader, bought a judgment for $40 upon a note secured by A. B. Howard, known as "Bal" Howard, and the head of the Howard faction. The Howards asserted that the note had been satisfied, and the contention over it provoked ill-feeling. Quarrels about the lumber business resulted in a shooting match, in which the disputants on each side were wounded. On April 7, 1898, a party of Howards was waylaid, and Burd Storer was killed from ambush, "Bal" Howard was wounded and escaped, and Wilson Howard lived long enough to name several Bakers as parties to the assassination. J. B. Howard of Manchester, County Assessor, a man of peaceful inclinations, next day killed G. W. Baker, father of "Tom," the faction leader. The Bakers were arrested for killing the Howards, and escaped in consequence of insufficient evidence against them. J. B. Howard was found guilty, a new trial was secured, the jury disagreed, and the accused man is under bonds.

This county, divided in its adherence between both factions, was greatly excited. The Howards were favored by the White faction. On June 5, 1898, ex-Sheriff "Will" White, brother of Sheriff B. P. White, Jr., was killed not far from this town by "Tom" and "Doc" Baker. "Tom" Baker was tried at Barbourville, and found guilty, with a life sentence of imprisonment. The Court of Appeals set aside the verdict. "Tom" Baker returned to this county, and was rearrested on warrants based upon new evidence. He was brought to Manchester under guard of 150 militia from Barbourville, and on June 10, 1899, while standing in a tent door in the grounds of the Court House was shot through the heart, his wife standing by him as he dropped dead. The soldiers were thoroughly alarmed, but they charged the house of ex-Sheriff White, just in front of the Court House, searched it, and found a gun containing an empty shell, but could find no one who had been seen to fire it. A general outbreak seemed imminent, but the troops managed to escort several feud prisoners to Barbourville without interference. Mrs. Baker, widow of the murdered man, is reported to have sworn to bring up her sons to live to avenge their father's death. The remaining Bakers left the county, and apparently the Baker-Howard feud was interrupted.

THE PHILPOTT KILLING.

Meantime another feud had broken out. On Jan. 1, 1899, J. C. Philpott was killed by Aaron Morris, until then his friend. In falling Philpott killed Green Bundy, Morris's father-in-law. The Philpotts are an influential family, and the Morrises belong to the Griffin family, also influential. Morris was tried in Manchester and sentenced to twenty-one years' imprisonment. He was released after a year's imprisonment by the action of the Court of Appeals in granting a new trial that resulted in his acquittal. Returning to his home, a few miles from Manchester, in June last, he was with a party of Philpotts when Deputy Sheriff G. W. Thacker met the party on the road and served a legal paper on Robert Philpotts. The wagons halted to prepare a necessary bond, Aaron Morris, Green Harvey, and Hugh Griffin arrived on horseback, guns were produced, and presently Morris and Hugh and Harry Griffin were dead and only two of eight combatants escaped injury.

The Philpotts were arrested, and acquitted on the ground of self-defense. Deputy Sheriff Thacker, the only witness, and James Smith, his brother-in-law, were ambushed near the original battleground on Sept. 4 and shot, Thacker being killed. Smith feigned death and escaped. "Ed" and Floyd Chadwell were arrested, and are now in Manchester jail awaiting trial for participation in this murder. "Jim" and "Sol" Griffin were arrested later for participation in the killing, and brought under military guard and in a covered wagon from Barbourville, to be placed in the little jail, where with the Chadwell boys they are awaiting bail or trial. Gov. Bradley ordered the troops out to convoy the prisoners, and the escort arrived in Manchester one Sunday afternoon, to find the hamlet of 200 persons as calm as a church.

I have told this story, which is not new, for the benefit of those who have hitherto escaped or avoided it. It is repeated because of the revelation it affords of characteristics and conditions. Students of the people and their derivation hesitate to attribute the tendency to feuds to Scotch-Irish, German, or Irish ancestors. J. Stoddard Johnson, who is quoted as an authority, says it is not a legacy from progenitors so much as it is a deterioration the result of environment. It is easy to accept this theory. Isolation, the barrier of a long and bad road between the Clay County centre and a better civilization, is a very apparent disadvantage to the people. Ignorance, attributable in part to the indifference to education of men and women who come of a line of unlearned ancestors, with superstition and prejudice as a matter of course, is in part attributable to the wretchedly inadequate school facilities. Whisky—not the seasoned product consumed in more accessible places, but the raw product of private and illicit stills—is the deadly stimulant that arouses all the commonly dormant evil propensities.

FEW SCHOOLS IN CLAY COUNTY.

Clay County is not unlike several other interior Kentucky counties in being ill-provided with schools. There are 100 school districts in the county. Most of them are inferior in location and equipment to that of Manchester, I am told here. In this town the school is just alongside the Court House. It is a plain, little boarded building, with one large room, in the centre of which is a big stove, around which are desks for the twenty or thirty pupils and their badly worn and elementary books. The allowance by the State for five months of schooling here is $100, which goes to the teacher. Every other expense must be met by the town, and it does not meet many extra expenses. Residents of this county and of Laurel, which adjoins it, told me that nine-tenths of the people, adults and children, are unable to read and write. There appears to be little thirst for learning. Illiterate parents will keep their children from school if by so doing the parents or the children can earn a little money. The thing that is scarcest here is money, and it is the thing most coveted, for which the greatest sacrifices are most cheerfully made. Of food they lack little. The poorest people can raise corn enough to feed a few hogs, poultry is seen about all the rude little cabins, game is abundant, and where there are streams they abound in fish. No one ever dies of starvation here.

Only the exceptionally prosperous and the rarely educated aspire to live in better houses than the cabins made of logs chinked and daubed, usually of one room, sometimes of two, and as a rule lighted only by the doorways. As the dwellers in these primitive houses do not read, they do not need windows, they argue, as they know their houses well enough to find their beds at dark, and do not need lamps to enable them to read. They go to bed at dark and get up at daylight. Men go about in weather-beaten sack coats over woolen shirts, with wool or felt hats of uniform droopiness over matted hair. The women, as a rule, wear sun bonnets of black, with frocks of cotton goods as free from pretension of style or attractiveness as can be imagined. One will meet women on the road, riding horseback alone far from any house. They are said to be quite safe. Women are never troubled here. Now and then a woman is met with a pipe in her mouth. She is apt to be a woman past youth many years, and not well favored. More frequently the woman with the snuff stick is seen, and she does not take it from her mouth to salute the passing stranger, but keeps on swabbing her gums with it as she nods and says "Good evenin'."

MEN GENERALLY ARMED.

While in Manchester, and on the way into Clay County from London, your correspondent, bearing in mind the stories about marauding parties, armed scouts patrolling the roads, in search of intruders, "bushwhackers" looking for victims of the ambuscade, and predatory ruffians abroad simply for blood, looked for and asked about the custom of going armed. The only firearms I have seen in Clay County were two shotguns, carried by a very amiable town barber and his friend, who had been out to bag a few squirrels. Many of the better-educated men never carry or use arms. But it is admitted that the carrying of "guns," by which pistols and revolvers are meant, is general, and unwise as well as unnecessary. It was admitted to be a curious fact that this custom is general all over a State whose men pride themselves upon their "honor," but go equipped as if expecting that every Kentuckian they meet will give or receive some affront deserving or demanding instant death. Yet one of the gentlest, most honorably spoken men I met here, an educated man with a profession, declared that "no gentleman will insult me, and I cannot be insulted by one not a gentleman."

I am told that Clay County is not addicted to intemperance. Up to this time I have not seen a drunken man in Southeastern Kentucky. London, the county seat of Laurel County, is "dry." It is more difficult to get whisky there than it is in Portland, Me. When it is got, it is worse than the Portland whisky, a pale yellow pungent sort of alcohol, with the wicked trick of darting with lightning speed through the circulation. Half way out from London to Manchester, up a by-road, the whisky thirsty buy "drams" of this detestable "moonshine," at half a dollar the dint and a nickel for the bottle. Manchester is also "dry." None of the houses of entertainment have either "red liquor" or "moonshine" for guests. Seasoned spirits is a luxury brought in for private consumption by the relatively wealthy. The men who drink native, uncured whisky most freely are those who are in the lumber country. They are not unlike the rough lumbermen in upper New York and in Canada, but probably are more generally ignorant of book knowledge, and they are almost uniformly courteous and hospitable, with a drawling, cooing manner of speech that is never encountered except in the South.

REMARKABLE ILLITERACY.

Appearances here are sometimes misleading. The man who drove me out to Manchester from London, a white man of the country, was well-dressed, polite, well-informed about the roads, horses, business, and local politics. His apparel indicated a degree of prosperity far greater than that of some of the most fortunate hillside farmers along our jolting road. He was forty-three years of age. His conversation was pleasing, although it had a full local flavor, and it was quite free from oaths. Not once did he offend in that respect. But this mature man could not read or write. He did know the alphabet, and could "spell out" some prints with painful labor. The revelation was a bit more shocking in consequence of the respectable appearance of the man, who was treated respectfully everywhere. This man had been all his life a resident of London, growing up in ignorance of his own speech with rather more than the usual rural facilities for acquiring elementary education about him.

What Manchester needs most, next to schools which the children should be compelled to attend, and which should be a great deal better than the schools of the county now are, is the civilizing railroad. It has been too much by itself. Little wonder that a part of the population, and that an ignorant part, has been provoked to commit murder as an outgrowth of the resentments of rival families that have lived chiefly, it would seem, to cultivate their own resentments instead of the intelligence of their less fortunate neighbors. If it were not for the leaders here of factions, Clay County might have escaped its reputation for being dangerous. It is time the law has been enforced with a laxity to promote disrespect for it. Considering the circumstances, it is fair to say that the people are better than they have been represented. They are capable, by natural intelligence, of better things. They deserve better things of the State.

MANHATTAN'S MOTIVE POWER.

B. E. Greene, in Electrical Review, Says Delay in Adopting Electricity Was Justified.

B. E. Greene says of the Manhattan Railway Company in The Electrical Review's current number:

"The criticisms by the public at large and almost all the newspapers that the company unnecessarily delayed the change of motive power are absolutely without foundation.

"Up to almost the present time the state of the electrical art has never justified the expenditure of the vast sum necessary for the change. No system had been sufficiently developed to offer any guarantee that the money would be well spent—that the entire equipment would not be soon relegated to the scrap heap, and something else substituted at a further large expense.

"As late as three years ago Mr. George Westinghouse, Jr., advised the Manhattan officials not to hurry.

"The Manhattan Directors have used exquisite judgment in postponing the change till the present time. Now the system which they have adopted has been thoroughly tested in actual practice. The bugs have been discovered and corrected. It is standardized. Both the manufacturing companies are now ready to stand for what they deliver. Every engineer of prominence in the country coneurs in this view.

"Mr. Henry M. Whitney of Boston and Mr. Thomas Lowrey of Minneapolis could give illuminating discourses on this subject. The equipment of the West End system has been changed at least four times, and of the Twin City system not less than three times. The latter was nearly bankrupted by the expense, and Mr. Lowrey has had to wait eight years to see his system win itself out and its re-establishment as a good profit-earner.

"It is not true, as has been claimed, that the original appropriation of $18,000,000 is inadequate for the work of the Manhattan equipment owing to the advance in price of supplies. The money is ample. The cost of some things has advanced since the Directors voted in favor of the change. Copper, however, one of the important items, is cheaper. The appropriation is not only large enough to cover all purchases, but to provide for an overhauling of the structure from end to end, including the stations.

"Now, what can be expected of this system when the change of motive power is completed?

"In Philadelphia the Union Traction Company has increased its gross receipts from $8,100,000 in 1894 to $11,100,000 in 1898, and reduced operating expenses from $5,446,604 in 1894 to $4,608,163 in 1898.

"In Pittsburg the Consolidated Traction Company for the same period has increased gross receipts from $1,500,000 to $2,000,000 and reduced operating expenses from 60 per cent. to 44 per cent.

"In this city the Metropolitan system's gross receipts have grown from $8,745,495 in 1894 to $11,363,227 in 1898, and operating expenses reduced from 60 per cent. to 50 per cent.

"The Union Traction Road in Philadelphia is operated on 40 per cent. of gross income. The Manhattan system should do even better than this. The operating expenses for the year just closed were a trifle over 56 per cent.

"The increase in revenue, as indicated by comparisons mentioned above, should be not less than 30 per cent., showing a total of about $12,000,000.

"Deducting fixed charges of $2,717,289, as per current report, there would be left for the stockholders $4,882,711, or 10 per cent. on the entire issue. This is a conservative rather than an optimistic estimate."

THE HANDSOMEST LARGE EMERALD in the city weighs 14 carats, surrounded with 14 perfect blue-white diamonds, as lady's brooch or pendant, $6,000. LINDO BROS., Broadway and 29th St.

RELICS FOUND IN A CAVE.

Boy While Hunting Near Millerton Makes the Discovery.

POUGHKEEPSIE, Dec. 2.—A Millerton, N. Y., newspaper says that last Saturday Robert, son of Charles Dakin, was out hunting on Indian Mountain, near that village, somewhere in the wildest part. He discovered a cave. He crawled down and into the hole, struck a match, and discovered that he was in quite a spacious room.

He struck another match and found many relics, such as pottery, turtle shells, teeth of animals, and other things.

He filled his game bag with the relics, crawled out, marked the spot, and continued hunting for squirrels. The pottery is especially interesting. Nobody knows how ancient it is, but it is probably of Indian make.

At the Play and With the Players

The most dramatic incident in the theatrical version of "Ben-Hur" is the return of missing Judah, after an absence of eight years, to the ken of his father's slave, Simonides, at Antioch. Simonides, intrusted with the management of the vast commercial interests of the house of Hur, has become as rich as Caesar since the family's seeming obliteration. Judah, accused of crime, has been condemned to the galleys, and the average life of a galley slave does not exceed a year. The mother and sister have disappeared from view. There has been no one to molest Simonides in the enjoyment of the great wealth his own thrift and sagacity have accumulated. Moreover, the heir, returning, knows nothing of the fortunes of his house, and knows of Simonides, whom he has never met, only as an old friend of his father.

When, therefore, he suddenly reappears, the temptation that besets Simonides to keep his secret for the sake of his beloved daughter, who must on its revelation stand in danger of subjection to slavery, is sore and almost irresistible; but under Esther's influence he overcomes it, proclaims himself Ben-Hur's slave and makes an accounting.

This episode is comprised in two scenes, one passing in the house of Simonides, the other in the tent of the Sheik Ilderim. With its main thread is woven the mutual attraction of the newly found Prince of Hur and Esther, and the momentary allurement of the young man by the wiles of the beautiful Egyptian. With the materials in this episode a capable dramatist might construct a moving and poetical drama within the richly colored pictorial environment of which the play of human passions might be graphically portrayed. But the episode is only one of half a dozen comprised in this big spectacular piece, and it is not developed to its full dramatic value.

"Ben-Hur" on the stage is panoramic, pictorial, musical, terpsichorean, religious, (in as reverent a way, probably, as a stage play can be religious,) and only fitfully dramatic. In many years I have seen no more beautiful and tasteful pictures than some of these painted by Messrs. Gros and Albert and contrived in every detail with all the skill the modern stage commands. The conduct of the revels in the Grove of Daphne at Antioch and by the Fountain of Castalia; the deft management of the lights, the color-harmonies, could not be surpassed. All the music, composed for the spectacle by Prof. Edgar Stillman Kelley, is played and sung so as to make it serve well its purpose as accompaniment to the action and illustration of the passions and the mystery of the epoch.

To the great majority of spectators who see this new production, the two big mechanical scenes, the first representing Ben-Hur and the Roman officer adrift at sea on a raft, the second showing, with live horses and a swift revolution of wheels, the famous chariot race, will irresistibly appeal. Few who go to the Broadway Theatre this Winter (and the play will easily survive the season) cherish vivid remembrances of similar mechanical devices on the stage. People who saw Neil Burgess's production of the preposterous "Year One" are very few, while the like of the ocean scene, with all the stage, excepting a few feet of space beneath the flies, where the horizon is pictured, given up to a waste of tumbling canvas waters, has not been seen here since Charles Frohman's production of "She" at Niblo's. Before that it was the making of "The World," which, in its turn, was the making of Sir Augustus Harris, in London, and the salvation of one bad season at Wallack's, in New York.

But there are a few mature playgoers to whom mechanical devices of this sort no longer appeal. So far from being dramatic, such stage pictures are essentially the reverse. They destroy the very illusion they are intended to create in the minds of the sincere dramatic student. Horses galloping from nowhere to nowhere on sliding platforms in front of a quickly rolling panorama; painted canvas shaken from beneath, do not satisfy the imagination that receives the greatest enjoyment from the actor's art. But the multitude is always best pleased with toys.

"Ben-Hur," in spite of its intermittent dramatic quality, and the subordination in it of acting to spectacle, still demands the services of well-trained actors, men and women of presence and eloquence. But, alas! on the latter-day stage, which produces good actors of modern prose comedy, apt comedians for farce and burletta, the supply of actors who have the authority, the grace, the charm, the vocal power, for such rôles as these of the Jews, Romans, and Egyptians of the first century is very small. Vocal deficiencies distressed an acute ear in Wednesday night's performance. Yet I doubt if bad voices were more strongly in evidence than in Irving's recent performance of "The Merchant of Venice."

Mr. Henry Lee has never been distinguished for musical utterance, and his disposition to mouth his words and rant is saddening. He is often at his very worst in the long rôle of Simonides; yet there is appreciable dramatic force in his portrayal of the old man. Miss Mabel Bert has a thin, flat voice, such as one's imagination cannot associate with an aristocratic matron of Jerusalem, but there is artistic feeling in her denotement of pride and maternal love.

Mr. Morgan rises splendidly when the situation carries him, as in the effective climax of Act I., and a few other passages, and he always looks well, whether in Jewish or in Roman garb, but his portrayal of the title rôle did not leave the impression one expects from the work of so good an actor.

But these critical remarks should not deter any one from seeing "Ben-Hur." There is, after all, some admirable acting. Mary Shaw, for instance, is exactly suited as the old nurse of Judah, and her denotement of grief, despair, bewilderment, and hope in the last act is highly effective. Miss Riccardo acts the temptress well. Mr. Corrigan and Mr. Mordaunt are well suited as the Egyptians.

The relation of the drama to the New Testament story, and the scene on the Mount of Olives; its employment of one of the most sacred of hymns, and its indication, by the rays of the calcium illuminating a cloud of tinsel dust, of the presence of the Redeemer in the crowd, are delicate subjects for discussion in this column. The playwright and the stage manager have been as cautious as possible. Probably few very devout persons ever go to the theatre. Nobody will find any sort of offense in the stage version of "Ben-Hur," unless he believes that sacred subjects should never be treated in the theatre.

What a very long step it seems from the manoeuvres of Messala and Iras to the manoeuvres of Jane Nangle and Connie Gage; from the heroics William Young has builded on Gen. Lew Wallace's fluent and florid dialogue to the prosaic colloquialisms of Henry Arthur Jones; from the cruelty and splendor of Pagan life at the very dawning of Christianity to the pettinesses of English social life at the latter end of the nineteenth century of Christianity! "The Manoeuvres of Jane" is a comedy which is not in Mr. Jones's earlier and most optimistic vein or yet in his Congreve and Wycherley mood illustrated in "Rebellious Susan" and "The Liars."

It cannot be called witty, but its view of life is humorous and its study of character has something of the quality of caricature. Lord Bapchild, as he is elaborately and amusingly portrayed by Mr. Ferdinand Gottschalk, is a caricature of the young Briton of the present hour who stands for goodness as opposed to the wickedness of the "swagger" set. Why any British dramatist should care to poke fun at the Exeter Hall and model farm branch of his nation's aristocracy I do not know. But Mr. Jones has done so with vim. He has also, I hope, caricatured the British parent in Nangle, and the contriving British matron, with a system for everything, in Mrs. Beechinor, while eavesdropping Pamela is clearly a creature of farce.

One who is in the mood can enjoy a very agreeable evening at Daly's while Mr. Daniel Frohman keeps this piece in his bill. Miss Mannering has rarely acted with better facility; Miss Tyree does her two scenes, one with the little faded flower, the other with the incorrigible back hair at the inn, remarkably well. Miss Busley as the meddlesome brat is spry and impish, and the older members of Mr. Frohman's admired troupe are as efficient as ever. There were a few unaccountable crudities in the first performance, that have since disappeared, of course; and if one's taste inclines him to the ironical view of human weakness he will find this work entertaining.

In estimating the comparative merits of "A Greek Slave," now in sight and hearing at the Herald Square Theatre, I should compare it, not with "The Mikado" and "The Geisha," but with other musical extravaganzas presented at the same house, "The French Maid," for instance, and "Ali Baba." It is musically much better than either of those and pictorially it is entirely satisfying. Its "book" is of the customary inane quality. Its comedians have to work very hard. Nobody cares a rap for the story it tells.

But on the first night it was obviously satisfying to a very large audience. Dorothy Morton's singing was received with joy, Hugh Chilvers and the gentleman who led the saturnalia with a baritone voice were evidently, or almost, in the arms of their friends. Mr. Carle may have been as mournful as his enemies say he was, but the folks around me laughed heartily, even at his joke about the Hellespont, which was almost the feeblest joke I ever heard in a theatre. There was laughter a-plenty, and there was an abundance of applause as honest, doubtless, as most first-night applause ever is.

As for Miss Minnie Ashley, her triumph was decisive and brilliant. With few natural gifts, except the gift of girlishness, which really is a gift even in a girl; with a small singing voice, a semblance of artless amiability, and a fair measure of nimbleness and grace, she took the honors. People will go to see "A Greek Slave" just to see Miss Ashley. But, believe me, for folks who like the recent brand of Londonese musical comedy, "A Greek Slave" has charms of its own.

The afternoon high art functions, which sometimes overcrowd a week already crowded with theatricals when the season is at its height are doubtless enjoyable to some persons upon whom they entail no sort of responsibility or labor. For such there was sufficient interest in Mr. Franklin Sargent's tentative performance of Mrs. Craigie's tragic poem "Osbern and Ursyne" at the Empire Theatre on Tuesday to repay them for the cost of attending it, (car fare, I suppose,) and, perhaps, they derived from it even a mild aesthetic thrill. To the "professional" first-nighter, however, it was all so much more labor thrown away, for obviously Mrs. Craigie's tragedy, in spite of its appreciable literary merit, is not for the theatrical market. No public performance was required to determine that fact. As there was no considerable and astonishing merit to be revealed in the performance itself, the influence of the experiment upon the artistic good of the public (for whose aesthetic and moral welfare we all labor, bless our hearts!) was about as great as that of an afternoon tea in a studio.

Of course, there was Miss Florence Kahn, who has lately become a "personage" because of the agitation of some of her friends. But Miss Kahn's merits are more than counterbalanced by her faults. She is young and will learn many things, if she is not spoiled by ignorant flattery and ribald overpraise.

There was yet another special afternoon "function" in last week's theatricals, for "The Girl with the Auburn Hair" introduced her pious "turn" at Keith's Union Square Theatre about 4 P. M. last Monday. The Girl and her "turn" are neither notable nor dramatic. In truth, the act is musical, and this department must not meddle with music more than it can help. But a visit to Keith's is worth while. The audiences are as large as those one finds at the high art "functions," and they pay for their seats. They comprise many women and children, and are as bright, alert, and demonstrative as any audiences at more pretentious entertainments.

The quality of the performances at these "continuous" shows has been greatly improved of late, and one of the items in the bill at Keith's was a condensed version of the old comic drama called "The First Night" (from "Le Père de la Débutante") in which Felix Morris acted the garrulous old Frenchman. But the "turn" which seemed to me to receive the most favorable consideration, always excepting the admirable biograph, was that of a "song-and-dance team" of the old, old, indescribable pattern, which has dominated our variety stage since the earliest days of Tony Pastor.

Augustin Daly used to say Charles Coghlan was the finest Orlando he had ever seen, and Mr. Daly's memory could recall the prime of Lester Wallack, who used to act Orlando, the beardless youth, with handsome d'Orsay whiskers in the old Broome Street Wallack's, George Jordan, and Edwin Adams. I know I am not alone in considering Coghlan's Melancholy Jaques the best portrayal of that sadly abused rôle in our era. He acted Jaques in New York, in an otherwise inferior performance of "As You Like It," at the Fifth Avenue Theatre, in February, 1889, and surely to many who were privileged to see it that interpretation of the poet's fancy was a revelation and a boon. His Jaques was no theatrical elocutionist, no spouter, no dull-visaged embodiment of mock-melancholy. His melancholy belonged to his nature, not to his superficial manner. He had the graces of the courtier and man of the world. There was humor in his bantering with Orlando, and his laughter in the narration of his meeting with the fool in the forest indicated real merriment. But the cynicism, the veiled bitterness, the conviction of the hollowness and mockery of life were all there.

This was ten years and more after Coghlan's Orlando had pleased cultivated playgoers. In that earlier period the elegance and charm of his acting were most highly appreciated by the best judges of histrionism.

"Watch him, my boy," said William P. Davidge, dropping the character of Touchstone as he stood in the wings with the youth who was cast for Sylvius, and pointed to Orlando, who was on the scene. "Watch him! Study the way he speaks! Try to get his repose! Look at his arms and hands! There's a model for you!"

And Davidge was of the "old school," and as good an actor in comedy, pastoral-comical, comical-pastoral, or scene undividable as the best of them.

In no other characters of Shakespeare, however, excepting these two in the pastoral comedy, was Coghlan very successful. He ought to have been a fine Benedick, but that rôle never fell to him. His Shylock and his Hamlet were accounted intelligent and well-meant — creditable failures, in short. His Mercutio, later in his career, was found to be disappointing in London. His Antony, never seen here, brought him no new honor. His scholar-like Macbeth, revealed to New York in January, 1889, was not satisfying. It was all in perfect taste. The "business" was beyond reproach. The poetic ideal striven for was correct and true. But the lift and the grip of tragedy were not in it. The dagger soliloquy was spoken so gently and slowly that it almost put the audience to sleep.

In the old comedies of intrigue and their more recent imitations Mr. Coghlan had many triumphs. His Charles Surface would surely have satisfied Charles Lamb as well as it satisfied the English and American critics of acting in the seventh and eighth decades of this century. There was, perhaps, a touch of modernity in it, but it was only a touch. The courtly manner, the freedom of movement, the buoyancy, were not lacking. In romantic drama he was not always quite so successful because of his persistent slowness of speech and gesture, and most of us cared more for his Alfred Evelyn, his Sangfroid, his Felix Featherstone in Grundy's delightful "Snowball" than for his Claude Melnotte, his Clancarty, or his Jean Renaud. When he was first seen here he was accounted cold and formal by people who were fond of the exuberance of the school then in its decline.

He was a handsome man in 1876, of an unusual type, well put together, easy and graceful in every motion, with a face that suggested the diplomatist and the man of affairs rather than the lover and the hero. In all matters of taste his acting was beyond cavil. He spoke the language perfectly, with no fads of pronunciation and no vulgarisms of inflection, and his good taste was shown also in his dress and his manners.

His Melnotte was always spoiled by overdeliberateness. Coghlan never had a mind for Bulwer's heroics. Yet in "Money" he was nothing short of perfection. The sententious dignity and the priggishness of Evelyn were not offensive as he denoted them, and yet they were in evidence, for he seemed to bring back the manners, literary and social, of the Bulwer era along with the fashions in dress, which he insisted upon, though the other players wore the garments of our centennial year.

To the younger generation Charles Coghlan was chiefly identified with the rôle of the self-possessed man of the world in modern comedy and drama, with the elder Beauclerc in "Diplomacy," Colonel Pearce in "Lady Barter," his own version of the "Demi-Monde" of Dumas fils; Captain Bradford in "A Wife's Peril," ("Nos Intimes,") and Lord Illingworth in "A Woman of No Importance." Some of the characters of this quality he impersonated were good, some bad, men, but they were all essentially men of modern society. And in the portrayal of such rôles Coghlan had no superior.

He came of a talented race, he had studied his art diligently, he had won renown, and barely missed the highest honors the contemporary English stage can give to any man. Yet he died, before his sixtieth year, poor, all but forgotten, in the middle of a season of work as hard, uninspiring, and thankless as a day laborer's. Now that he has gone a few of us may strew flowers on his bier, but his career fiercely and pathetically illustrates the wisdom of Heinrich Conried's remarks reported on this page today.

Recent new theatrical publications, bearing the imprint of R. H. Russell, include a quarto with ornamental covers entitled "Julia Marlowe as Barbara Frietchie, the Frederick Girl, in the New American play by Clyde Fitch," which contains handsome illustrations of scenes and incidents in the drama now current at the Garrick Theatre, and a set of admirable portraits of Miss Marlowe as Lydia Languish, Rosalind, Constance, ("The Love Chase,") Viola, Juliet, and other characters of poetic drama and modern plays.

Mr. Russell also publishes a handsome Maude Adams calendar for 1900, on whose broad leaves Juliet in various moods stands for the sombre months and Lady Babble typifies the Spring and Summer. Maude Adams's acting edition of "Romeo and Juliet," now brought out in book form by the same publishing house, contains the text and main "business" of the tragedy as it was so beautifully acted at the Empire Theatre last Spring, with illustrations by Ernest Haskell and Charles Allan Gilbert. The collectors will soon make copies of this book scarce, while the other publications are well calculated to catch the holiday trade.

EDWARD A. DITHMAR.

A TALK ABOUT ACTING.

Mr. Conried Does Not Encourage Aspirants to Histrionic Honors.

Manager Heinrich Conried of the Irving Place Theatre has the reputation of having a heart so kindly to aspirants for histrionic honors that he is willing to take a little time now and then from his other pressing duties to give instruction to ambitious damsels who may have a glimmering ray of talent hidden away somewhere, to be discerned only by an appreciative eye. This isn't quite true, but Herr Conried is generous in the examinations he gives the stage-struck individuals who pour their hopes into his willing ear and gives them some practical advice to bring out the supposed talent. But even then the result is not usually favorable to the aspirant, and Herr Conried's recommendation is "don't." He was talking about these aspirants and their chances the other day.

"They come to me," he said, "on an average of one a day. They usually have a rosy view of the stage. They think that if they enter the 'profession' all they will have to do will be to make themselves look pretty, wear pretty clothes, spend two or three hours on the stage, have a good time, and no work.

"That is the idea with the women. The men who want to go on to the stage, I find, are those who are driven to it. They have failed in business, they are students who have not passed their examinations, doctors who have no practice, and they turn to the stage because they have nothing else to do and they think it will pay.

"I never advise any one to go on the stage. I say never do it, unless you are willing to give up father and mother, sister, sweetheart, wife, everything for it. There are not many men who go on the stage because they can't keep off it, because they feel that they must do it.

"But when any one comes to me to know if I think they can do anything, I will not pass judgment upon them unless I know really what they can do. Perhaps I am too conscientious. You never can tell what any one can do by hearing them read something they have read before. Any one might have learned to read one thing well. So I give them something to read that they have never seen, and if they have one ray of talent they will show it then. They may not be educated. People who make good actors are not always. But they will show through all the roughness if they have temperament, emotion or any of the things that are needed on the stage. I never send any one away without a trial, unless it might be a girl who is cross-eyed or has some pronounced physical defect, when I know it would be ridiculous for her to try. After the would-be actor or actress has read the piece I have selected I read it to him or her and then say go home and study that, and come back to me again and see what you can do. If they can do anything then I give them another trial.

"No, I have been a manager for twenty-one years, and I haven't in that time found any one who could really do anything. There is one woman now who might do well on the stage, but I do not come to be examined for it. She came to me after a lecture I had given at Columbia College to tell me how much I had helped her in what I had said. She is a reader, and she comes to me frequently for help when she is taking up something, but she is not going on the stage. Probably her family would object, as mine did when I went on the stage. People think you are going to be ruined utterly when you go on the stage, and lose your morals entirely, and there may be some foundation for their fears.

"No, it is for no reason morally that I would object to any one going on the stage, but there is the prejudice against it, which is almost as bad. What social position does an actress have? She has none. You hear of the big social entertainments, but you never see the names of the people of the stage mentioned in connection with them, and what measure of success do they attain? I have been an actor for twenty-eight years, I have been credited with having something more than ordinary ability, and people know what I have done as a manager. I study all the time. I work twelve and fourteen hours a day. If I had taken up the profession of medicine and made a specialty of any one things—the eye, the ear, the nose, anything—and devoted that amount of time to it, supposing that I had the brain and wit to do that, wouldn't I in this time have attained a degree of eminence? But what can be done in this profession?

"In Germany an artist has a much better position. There after the military comes the stage. There are four or five positions that are worth trying for. They are in the Court theatres, positions for life, with orders and decorations. You are received by royalty and held in high esteem. That is something to work for, and if you have talent it is recognized.

"All the well-established theatres play the same plays—Shakespeare and Molière as well as Schiller and Goethe. There is only one theatre in each town, except the larger ones, like Berlin and Dresden. Towns of 60,000, 80,000, and 100,000 inhabitants have only one theatre, partly supported by the Government. The manager has to show that he is mentally, morally, and physically able to manage before he is given a permit license. Then every year he has to give his plays, Shakespeare, Schiller, Goethe, and music, Mozart as well as Wagner, and the stage is looked upon with the church and school as an educational factor of the community.

"The actor has a chance, because he must have talent to succeed at all. Here an actor can be coached in a certain part and put on the stage, and the play will run for two years. In Germany, where there is a different play every two or three days, you must know how to act if you get on. Here, if you get to the head of your profession and know how to act, you become a star, unless some one—a speculative manager—will make you one.

"No, as to the classes, I don't have them. It would only take a small example in arithmetic to show whether it would be profitable to do it for financial reasons, but there are several women on the stage who when they take up new parts come to me for advice, and I do what I can for them."

MRS. KENDAL'S DRESSES.

There is a pretty sentiment about the gowns in "The Elder Miss Blossom" that the public very likely does not see. In fact, the public is not really intended to see it, any more than to get the general effect in the ensemble of the play, for one of Mrs. Kendal's ideas about the stage dress of the present day is that it is frequently too elaborate and takes the attention of the audience from the important work of the play.

She has found that the brilliancy of colors and the glitter of spangles have distracted her own attention in watching other actresses, and so the gowns in her own plays she has as simple as possible and in keeping with the characters and sentiment.

The elder and younger Misses Blossom have gowns that, off their respective wearers, might give some idea of their individuality, the elder woman in the street costume of a soft, deep gray-green mohair, the younger one in a youthful little frock of dove color in the first act, and for the morning scene a pretty pale pink, while the elder woman wears white with only a touch of color in the skirt. Mrs. Kendal chooses all the gowns that are worn with great care.

"I think all women are like flowers, or should be," she said in England, when this play was first brought out, "and I select gowns with the thought of flowers in mind. Miss Campbell is a young girl, the rose of the play, one might say, so she wears a pretty pale pink frock, with the pale green of the leaves in the trimming, and a hat trimmed with mignonette and roses. My gowns, on the contrary, are rather in the colorings of the heliotrope, as sweet of scent as the rose, but in my opinion typical of an older woman."

Mrs. Kendal is devotedly fond of flowers. She has them always in her rooms at the hotels where she is stopping, and frequently in her dressing room, and she carries them as far as possible into her effects in dress. She wears bonnets made of flowers, roses, lilacs, and heliotrope, and in selecting materials she chooses colors that are to be found in flowers and their foliage.

Her gown in the first act of the play shows Miss Blossom to be a very attractive woman. It is almost princesse in effect, fitting like a glove. The bonnet of blue, with two little standing wings, has the strings which we talk of here, but see chiefly in the shop windows, and it is particularly becoming to Mrs. Kendal. Miss Campbell's first gown is of cloth, trimmed with pipings, and with a blouse of white satin under the short jacket.

The rose gown of which Mrs. Kendal speaks is of crêpe de chine, trimmed on the frills of the skirt and on the waist with rows of green baby ribbon, and the hat as Mrs. Kendal describes it. Her first hat, with the bird of paradise plumes, has a bunch of cherries under the brim. Miss Campbell is a pretty, dainty-looking girl, and looks like a flower in either of them.

It takes some time to prepare Mrs. Kendal's costumes. They must suit her exactly as to looks and comfort in wearing. She had three parasols made before she was suited with the one she now carries in the play, and sometimes there are as many hats before one is satisfactory. Among the little daintinesses of her costumes are the gloves and handkerchiefs. She never wears the gloves but once, and has a fresh handkerchief for every act.

The costumes for this play, aside from the bit of sentiment in them, were intended to be gowns of a style that the well-bred Englishwoman would wear, the best class of women wearing the quietest gowns, and simplicity the keynote of them all.

VARIOUS DRAMATIC TOPICS.

Why "Maneuvers," some people have been asking all the week. "The Manoeuvres of Jane" in most, not all, of the manager's announcements is called "The Maneuvers of Jane." Yet Jane's "manoeuvers" are clearly "manoeuvres." Though Webster's Dictionary gives preference to "maneuver" the other is the commonly favored form.

"The Choir Invisible," dramatized by Frances Hastings, kept going "on the road" four weeks. It received many favorable newspaper notices. Henry Jewett, who was the principal actor and the manager as well, writes that he is hoping for a chance to present the play in New York before the end of this season.

Nellie McHenry has revived the old piece in which she and Nate Salsbury used to frolic together, "Green Room Fun." It has been brought "up to date," after a fashion, and the songs are generally new, but it has an old-fashioned flavor they say. This was almost the first of the modern variety farces.

"Hunting for Hawkins" is the title of a new three-act farce by Guy F. Steely of Chicago, which has been produced at the Davidson Theatre in Milwaukee. The plot turns upon mistaken identity, but the farce is said to possess some fresh humor and to act very well.

Henry Miller is getting some glowing press notices in his tour with "The Only Way." One Baltimore critic declares him the superior of Joseph Jefferson, the equal of Mansfield, and "a blending of E. S. Willard and Henry Irving." He might as truthfully have added that in the rôle of Sidney Carton President McKinley and Gov. Roosevelt could not hold a candle to Mr. Miller. However, this sort of thing indicates that Mr. Miller is winning renown, and the news of his triumph is gratifying.

Both were well dressed and apparently of what Society calls the "young matron" class. Recent theatrical productions were under discussion. There were other passengers in that particular Amsterdam Avenue car in which they were seated, but they were apparently oblivious of the fact. John Drew and "The Tyranny of Tears" had been discussed. "Speaking of tears," said the younger of the pair, "have you seen Julia Marlowe in Barbara Frietchie?" And then, without waiting for a reply, she rattled on: "It is perfectly splendid! Why, I cried through nearly two acts, and, believe me, I didn't care a snap as to who saw me!" "Yes," said her companion, "it affected me the same way when I saw it at Saturday's matinée. But do you know, dear, that when I got to the theatre I found I had forgotten my handkerchief, and I couldn't cry because I didn't know what to do with the tears!" And the male brute who heard it couldn't raise his paper quickly enough to hide the smile that spread over his face and put an end to the further exchange of confidences.

The scenic picture in the first act of "Ben-Hur" at the Broadway Theatre is admirably painted, and doubtless represents Jerusalem, much as it was in the era of Tiberius and Claudius. It is a housetop view of the city, with the roof of the palace of Hur in the foreground and roofs of countless other houses surrounding it. The practical and unemotional spectator, however, does not fail to note that, while the roof of the Hur palace is occupied by the residents as the new Roman Governor marches through the city, the roofs of the other houses are all bare and desolate.

The version of "The Old Curiosity Shop" in which Mary Sanders will act Little Nell and the Marchioness in Boston is new, and Harry P. Mawson made it. Miss Sanders's agent says it is not founded on John Brougham's version.

Emmy Schroth has made a notable hit as Vicky in the new German comedy called "Hofgunst" at the Irving Place Theatre. The rôle suits her better than the boy's part she acted in "Renaissance," and she denotes every trait of the young woman, who gets more than enough of court life, with admirable skill. There is an abundance of humor in the impersonation, while the touch of serious feeling is convincing.

CASINO.—Miss Alice Nielsen and "The Singing Girl," Victor Herbert and Stanislaus Stange's opera, continues to crowd the Casino nightly.

HARLEM OPERA HOUSE.—"The Girl in the Barracks," with Louis Mann and Clara Lipman in the stellar rôles, will be the attraction this week.

FIFTH AVENUE THEATRE.—Mrs. Fiske in "Becky Sharp" will begin the fourth month of her engagement to-morrow night, and on Dec. 9 the one hundredth performance will be given.

MANHATTAN THEATRE.—Miss Anna Held in Smith and De Koven's new musical comedy is appearing at every performance before an audience which fills every available seat in the theatre.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC.—"Way Down East" is repeating the phenomenal success it has met with elsewhere. From all indications it has taken up its home at the Academy for an indefinite stay.

GRAND OPERA HOUSE.—For this week Manager Pitou has secured as the attraction James O'Neill in "The Musketeers." This is the version by Sidney Grundy, which was seen at the Broadway Theatre last Spring.

FOURTEENTH STREET THEATRE.—This week ushers in the third month of "The Dairy Farm," and now that this rural drama has passed its fiftieth performance, it will be continued until Saturday evening, Dec. 23.

KNICKERBOCKER THEATRE.—Mr. and Mrs. Kendal in "The Elder Miss Blossom," enter upon the third week of their stay in New York to-morrow night. They will inaugurate midweek matinées, commencing Wednesday of this week.

THEATRE COMIQUE.—This house finally starts upon a new career to-morrow night, when the newly organized stock company will give its first burlesque, entitled "Hotty Dotty," which is the work of William Jerome and Frank David.

EMPIRE THEATRE.—John Drew must soon leave town. He will remain but a few weeks longer. "The Tyranny of Tears" has been the best-liked play in which Mr. Drew has appeared at this theatre, and by far the greatest financial success of any of his New York engagements.

KOSTER & BIAL'S MUSIC HALL.—"Round New York in Eighty Minutes" enters on the fifth week of its existence tomorrow evening. A new feature to be introduced will be historical poses of gladiatorial combatants by James Jeffries and Thomas Sharkey. The olio will include the De Forrests, the Florenz troupe, and Frank Latoni.

GARRICK THEATRE.—William Gillette and "Sherlock Holmes" are in their fourth week at the Garrick Theatre, and the same condition of affairs exists as during the opening week—capacity receipts. Mr. Frohman has received a dozen applications from various London managers to have Mr. Gillette and his play appear at their theatres when visiting London.

PROCTOR'S PALACE.—Ezra Kendall heads the bill this week. The other entertainers are Hall and Stanley, Waterbury brothers and Tenny, musical comedians; Clarice Vance, singing comedienne; O'Brien Trio, acrobats; the kalatechnoscope, with new moving views; Vernon the ventriloquist; Harry Howard's ponies, trained animals; Guilbert, equilibrist, and others.

CRITERION THEATRE.—Julia Marlowe's success in "Barbara Frietchie" continues. To-morrow evening will be the beginning of the seventh week, and there will be extra matinée performances given on Wednesday afternoons, Dec. 6 and 13. On Monday evening, Dec. 11, the fiftieth performance will be celebrated, when pictorial "Barbara Frietchie" books will be given away.

EDEN MUSEE.—The special attractions given during Thanksgiving week will be continued this week. They include many interesting features. The wax groups have been rearranged and new figures added. The afternoon and evening concerts by the orchestra will have carefully selected programmes, and the main attraction will be the moving pictures, including the new views just received.

LYCEUM THEATRE.—To-morrow night Miss Annie Russell will play "Miss Hobbs" for the one hundredth time. Although it is entering upon its fourth month, there are no signs of any diminution in the remarkably large business which has marked its career from the opening night, and it is now a foregone conclusion that "Miss Hobbs" will be "at home" at the Lyceum for the remainder of the theatrical season.

NEW YORK THEATRE.—To judge from the size of the audiences at this house, interest in the recent fistic encounter at Coney Island in which James Jeffries defeated Thomas Sharkey is on the increase. The moving pictures as shown are quite realistic enough for the average sporting man, and are also apparently sufficiently satisfactory to the thoroughbred patrons of pugilism who nightly congregate and audibly discuss fighters' abilities.

DEWEY THEATRE.—The extravaganza "Hurly Burly" is to be the attraction this week. Besides the extravaganza there is a vaudeville bill, in which the following artists will appear: Mlle. Alcide Capitaine, the acrobat; Sylvia Thorne, the operatic vocalist; Cook and Sonora, in their tramp and soubrette specialty; Binns and Binns, eccentric comedians; the Casino Comedy Four, a quartet of comedians; the Brothers Flood, acrobatic comedians, and Hart and Williams, in a travesty.

IRVING PLACE THEATRE.—"Hofgunst" ("At Court") will be repeated all this week, with the exception of Tuesday night, when Anzengruber's play, "Der Pfarrer von Kirchfeld," will be given. The demand for subscription seats to the performances of Felix Schweighofer, the German comedian, who will open on Dec. 25, is very large, and Manager Conried has decided to close these subscriptions next Saturday, after which seats for the single performances will be on sale.

GARDEN THEATRE.—Richard Mansfield nightly plays to the capacity of the theatre with his revival of "Cyrano de Bergerac." This play might continue as Mr. Mansfield's bill indefinitely, but the rôle is a tedious one and the actor-manager is eager to change to other rôles. At first he announced "Beau Brummel" for to-morrow night, but he has decided, in view of the sustained success of "Cyrano," to keep the latter on for another week, and Monday of next week will first see the revival of the comedy.

HURTIG & SEAMON'S MUSIC HALL.—The Broadway Burlesquers will appear this week, along with many prominent artists of the vaudeville stage, among whom are McAvoy and May, the character comedians Gilbert and Goldie, Dave Lewis, the German comedian; Emma Carus, Mignon Gilbert, the singer; Frobel and Ruge in a novel aerial act; Lew Wells, the musical comedian, and the Carlin sisters in songs and dances. The performance will close with an original burletta entitled "On the Bench." The usual Sunday night concert will be given.

PROCTOR'S THEATRE.—The features offered this week are favorites with continuous performance audiences. The leader is Marie Tavary, the contralto. Others are Lizzie Evans and Harry Mills in the comedietta "Two Girls and One Man"; De Haven and Male, comedians; the Wilson family, colored performers; new moving pictures on the kalatechnoscope, Charles E. Grapewin and Anna Chance in "A Mismated Pair," St. Onge brothers, trick cyclists; Ward and Curran, eccentric comedians; Musical Ravens, instrumentalists, and a dozen more.

HUBER'S MUSEUM.—This week the scope of the entertainment will be considerably widened. Besides the usual quota of freaks and entertaining features, the Bijou Midwinter Circus Company will make its appearance. The programme also includes Running Elk and Wanna, expert rifle shots; Prince Tinymite, Blendin and La Rose, fire kings; Chief White Moon and his troupe of Indians, Allen's Punch and Judy, and a number of others. In the theatre the bill will be long and varied, comprising, as usual, two distinct companies of vaudeville artists.

KEITH'S UNION SQUARE THEATRE.—"The Girl with the Auburn Hair" has proved a strong attraction for the Keith audiences, as much by the peculiarity of her performance as by whatever merit there is in it. Felix Morris, who, with an excellent company, has been giving a very entertaining performance of "Behind the Scenes," will produce this week "Kerry," in which he personates an Irish servant. The regular vaudeville bill will include the Craggs, Joe Welch, Barney Fagan and Henrietta Byron, Blocksom and Burns, and Eckert and Berg.

MADISON SQUARE THEATRE.—On account of an arrangement made with R. C. Carton to produce "Wheels Within Wheels" not later than Dec. 11, Charles Frohman's Comedians in "Make Way for the Ladies" begin the last week of their present engagement to-morrow evening. It was intended to keep the Comedians at the Madison Square after this week and have them appear in "Make Way for the Ladies" at daily matinées. Mr. Frohman has, however, thought it more advisable to present the farce in the principal cities and have the Comedians return to the Madison Square Theatre after the run of the new piece and remain there for the balance of the season.

WEBER & FIELDS'S.—In place of "The Other Way" at Weber & Fields's Music Hall next Thursday night, a new travesty of Fitch's "Barbara Frietchie," by Harry B. Smith and Edgar Smith, with music by John Stromberg, will be presented. Mr. Stromberg has prepared another of his sentimental "coon" songs for this. Mabel Fenton will return to the company to act Barbara Fidgety, as the ruthless Smiths call their heroine; Ross will be Captain Grumbie, Peter Dailey and John Kelley the two fathers, Joseph Weber and Lewis Fields the two sharpshooters, David Warfield the crazy lover, and Irene Perry Sue. The burlesque will be in four scenes. Clyde Fitch will be in one of the boxes. The usual olio and the merry "Whirl-i-gig" will also be given.

ALL ABOUT "THE CANARY."

"The Canary," the new play by Constance Fletcher, (George Fleming,) produced in London at the Prince of Wales's Theatre, seems to be a comic treatment of the subject of Ibsen's "A Doll's House." As the "canary," a frivolous, later-day Frou-Frou, Mrs. Patrick Campbell wears some brilliant yellow gowns and acts, they say, with unexpected vivacity and humor. Mr. Gerald du Maurier has made the first "hit" of his theatrical career as a selfish young poser pretending to gallantry. The story of the piece is told as follows:

"'George Fleming's' heroine, Mrs. Temple-Martin, is a silly little person with a head full of bad poetry and bad novels, who has married an adoring but stupid and vulgar stock broker, and consoles herself for his shortcomings by flirting outrageously with his male friends. In the first act she is seen in West Kensington treating her husband with outrageous rudeness and carrying on a flirtation with Mr. Glendenning, a middle-aged writer of short stories, and a foolish youth named Percy Burlingham. In the second act we find ourselves in this youth's rooms in Great Portland Street, where Mrs. Temple-Martin arrives, carrying a handbag, to announce that she has left her husband and intends to pass the remainder of her days on some enchanted island with Burlingham. As Burlingham has next to nothing a year and 'can only get a holiday in August,' he naturally demurs to this proposition, and ultimately Mrs. Temple-Martin goes away in a violent

The real opening of the Winter season is still delayed and although there have been several receptions during the week past, and two of the dancing classes have held their initial meetings, the continued beautiful Indian Summer weather, which made the Thanksgiving holidays, in the absence of anything exciting in town, days of country enjoyment with the opera still a fortnight off, keeps the curtain from rising. Last year at this time the season was in full swing, Winter had begun with a veritable blizzard, and there was a constant succession of fairs and charitable entertainments in progress all the time, while the opera, after a year's lapse, had begun a season which proved an exceptionally brilliant one.

The first notable event of the Winter season, and which now promises to open it, will be the first Assembly ball at the Astoria on Thursday evening, Dec. 14. The unusual number of débutantes will make this ball of especial interest this year, and all sorts of schemes are being tried on the part of people who have daughters to bring out, and who have not been fortunate enough to secure an invitation for them, to secure these coveted cards. It is not only the débutantes' parents and relatives, but the husbands, brothers, and fathers of ambitious young matrons anxious to appear at this ball, who are having a worried and anxious time at present, for they are continually beseiged to use their business or club acquaintance and influence to secure the desired invitations. One well-known young husband, recently married, and whose wife, while she enjoys the acquaintance of a number of fashionable women is not yet numbered with the social elect, one day last week approached a friend in Wall Street, and asked if he could secure an invitation for his wife and himself to this ball. The friend replied: "Don't you and your wife know some of the Matriarchs?" "Yes," was the answer. "And they haven't sent you invitations?" "No," answered the husband. "Well, then, said his friend, "I don't see how I can help you, for, although my wife and myself are often invited to the Assembly balls, we have not received an invitation to this coming one, and, as I should certainly never think of asking for an invitation to a subscription ball for my wife and myself, I don't see how I can ask for you and your wife." "What shall I do, then?" continued the persistent questioner. "I dont see that there's anything to be done, but to remain away. The ladies who give these balls subscribed each $100, and have so many invitations—nine, if I remember rightly. These they naturally send to those persons whom they wish to have as guests, and if you have not been favored with a card it would, it seems to me, be the height of impropriety to ask for a card." This conversation is given verbatim as an illustration of how much misapprehension exists in regard to the Assembly balls—a surprising misapprehension on the part of those who should be familiar with the conditions under which they are given.

***

The new subscribers this year to the Assemblies are Mrs. Edwin C. Post, Mrs. Louis Q. Jones, Mrs. William Street, Mrs. J. Kennedy Tod, Mrs. Beverly Robinson, Mrs. Walter L. Suydam, and Mrs. Henry Parish, Jr. Mrs. John C. Wilmerding, who has been absent from the list for a year or two on account of mourning, has returned. It is pleasant to see such young matrons as Mrs. Parish, Mrs. Suydam, Mrs. Jones, and Mrs. Post on the Assembly list of subscribers, for their presence there means new blood and the probable continuance of the balls, which it was reported last year might follow the fate of the Patriarchs and finish their career. Mrs. Jones was a Miss Sarah Anthon, and she has a daughter to bring out. Mrs. Parish was Miss Ludlow, Mrs. Suydam was Miss Jane Suydam, and Mrs. Post, who was married only three years ago, was Miss Emilie Thorne King. It seems rather paradoxical to speak of Mrs. Tod as an elderly matron. She was Miss Maria Potter, a daughter of the late Howard Potter, and now resumes her place in society after a long period of mourning. Mrs. Beverly Robinson, who was Miss Anna Foster, and who introduces her daughter, Miss Pauline Robinson, is warmly welcomed, as is also Mrs. William Street, who was Miss Lucy Morgan, and whose husband is a business partner of Sir Roderick Cameron. She has been abroad with her daughters for two or three years. Mrs. Lorillard, Sr., who expects to attend the ball, but who has not been seen much in society for some years, will also be warmly welcomed. As has already been announced in this column, the Reception Committee for the ball will be Mrs. Sheldon and Mrs. Gerry to represent the older element, and Mrs. John Jacob Astor and Mrs. Edmund L. Baylies the younger, while Mr. Worthington Whitehouse, assisted by Mr. Craig Wadsworth, will lead the cotillion.

From all indications there will be a larger number of "buds" at this Assembly ball than have been seen on a ballroom floor in New York for many a Winter, and a peep at the ball and its "rose bud garden of girls" will be worth going many miles to obtain. The Assembly ball is now the sole relic of the departed days of New York society—the one and only general ball where the various leading sets ever meet on the same floor and in the same social atmosphere. When the prediction was made last year that they might have to be abandoned there was a chorus of regrets, and it is gratifying to know that to all appearances the balls have taken on a new lease of life, and may be continued indefinitely. It is, of course, not to be wondered at that New York, with its changing conditions and its multiplicity of sets, due to its size and these conditions, should find it difficult to maintain and keep alive a series of subscription balls. In smaller communities the task is not so difficult, and the Charlestonians point with pride to their St. Cecilia balls, the oldest, and really the most aristocratic subscription balls in the country, and the Philadelphians to their Assembly balls which are antedated only by those of the St. Cecilia society in point of age.

This week will bring the first morning musicale arranged by Mr. A. M. Bagby at the Astoria, which takes place to-morrow; the first Junior Cotillion at Sherry's on Tuesday evening, the first Wednesday Cotillion at Delmonico's, and the first dance of the Southern Society at Delmonico's, also on Tuesday evening. The first meeting of the Thursday Evening Club will be held on that evening at the residence of Miss Dunham, 37 East Thirty-sixth Street, and Mrs. James Speyer has issued cards for a reception on the same evening. Friday's programme is rather barren of events, but Saturday will bring the first De Coverley dance at Sherry's and the first meeting of Mrs. Sands's dancing class at Delmonico's. There will also be several coming-out receptions during the coming week. Miss Evelyn K. Parsons will be introduced by her grandmother, Mrs. W. Barclay Parsons, at her residence, 505 Fifth Avenue, on Wednesday afternoon; Miss Pauline Robinson by her mother, Mrs. Beverly Robinson, at her residence, 42 West Thirty-seventh Street, on Thursday afternoon; Miss Wagstaff by her mother, Mrs. C. Du Bois Wagstaff, at her residence, 15 West Twenty-first Street, on Thursday afternoon, and Miss Ella de Peyster by her mother, Mrs. Frederic J. de Peyster, at her residence, 7 East Forty-second Street, on Saturday afternoon. Afternoon receptions will also be given during the week by Mrs. Walter Watson, Jr., of 52 West Fifty-second Street, on Tuesday afternoon by Mrs. Arthur Bissell and Mrs. Sanford Bissell, at 69 East Fifty-sixth Street on Wednesday afternoon; by Mrs. Phillip A. H. Brown and Miss Brown of 170 West Seventy-second Street, and by Mrs. Robert Fulton Weir and Miss Alden of 37 West Thirty-third Street on the same afternoon. Mrs. Moran will introduce his daughter, Miss Marie Moran, at his residence, 17 West Fifty-sixth Street, on Dec. 12.

***

The week's weddings will not be numerous, and include thus far only those of Mr. Cornelius W. Luyster, Jr., and Miss Rhoda Cary Thomas, at All Angels' Church, on the evening of Tuesday, and of the Rev. Frederic S. Stockwell and Miss Fay MacCracken, daughter of Chancellor MacCracken, at the West End Presbyterian Church, on Monday afternoon. Mr. Murray Dodge, son of the late Arthur Dodge, and Miss Elsie Barker, daughter of Mrs. Fordyce Barker, will be married at St. Thomas's Church Feb. 6, 1900, and the wedding of Mr. Edward McVickar and Miss Edith Lawrence Speyers, daughter of Mr. Albert B. Speyers, will be celebrated in the Church of the Holy Communion on Jan. 17, 1900.

A reception will be held by Mrs. David McClure of 22 West Forty-ninth Street on Saturday, Dec. 16, at which her youngest daughter, Miss Katharine F. McClure will be introduced. The débutante will be assisted in receiving by a bevy of her young friends, and the reception will be followed by a small dinner.

The Chicago Tribune devotes a long editorial to the engagement recently announced in this city of Mr. Richard Trimble, whom it calls "plain Dick Trimble," headed "A Toast to Miss Randolph." The editorial says, in substance: "So rarely has a member of New York's frapped four hundred chosen so wisely between love and snobbish ambition that the fact deserves a separate paragraph in the Thanksgiving proclamation of every patriotic American citizen. Miss Randolph may well be the toast about each of the tables on which are served the half million turkeys of Chicago's Thanksgiving dinner." It declares that "Miss Randolph has founded the new order of the American Mitten," inasmuch as she has successively refused the suits of Mohamet Ali, brother of the Khédive of Egypt; the Maharajah of Kapurthala of World's Fair fame, a belted English Earl, a Prince of the house of Bourbon, and a Russian Grand Duke, to finally give her hand to an American, Mr. Trimble, who, it says, "it should be understood is not a rich man, nor is his horizon bounded at one end by an opera hat and at the other by a pair of fawn-colored spats." This remarkable editorial, which will convey much news to Miss Randolph's friends, concludes as follows: "A Thanksgiving toast, then, to Miss Randolph and her Order of the American Mitten! Among the many recently organized patriotic societies it is by no means the least important, though its membership be confined exclusively to titled foreigners!"

***

The past week was for the most part devoted to country sports and pleasures, and Thanksgiving Day in particular, with its glorious Autumn weather, was enjoyed to the utmost by the golfers, cross-country riders, and hunters. There was a notable gathering of huntsmen and huntswomen at the Thanksgiving Day meet at the Syosset Cross Roads, L. I., where a hunt of five miles was enjoyed. This followed a drag hunt of the morning. Miss Phyllis Langhorne of Virginia was the only woman rider at the hunt.

***

An engagement of the week which excited much interest was that of Miss Sylvia Caesar, granddaughter of the late Capt. Jacob Vanderbilt, and Dr. Dudley Newcombe Carpenter, United States Navy, formerly Surgeon on the Olympia. Miss Caesar is a rarely pretty girl, and two years ago she served a term of apprenticeship as a trained nurse in the Presbyterian Hospital. Her mother was Miss Effie Vanderbilt, and is noted for her musical taste and ability. Mrs. Caesar married first the late Capt. Sparrow Furdy, and afterward the late Mr. Herman Caesar, the father of Miss Sylvia Caesar.

***

Thanksgiving was more generally observed in town and country than for many years past. There were a number of large dinners given at Tuxedo, and, in fact, at all the country houses in the suburbs. Mr. W. K. Vanderbilt, Sr., after acting as best man for his friend, Mr. Beach, at the latter's marriage to Mrs. "Carley" Havemeyer on Tuesday, took a party of friends, including Mr. and Mrs. Oliver Harriman, Jr., to Shelburne, Vt., where they spent Thanksgiving as the guests of Dr. Seward Webb and Mrs. Webb.

***

There were several coming out receptions in town during the week, which have been described from day to day in this column. Those of Miss Harriet Delafield on Tuesday, of Miss Cecil Boardman and Miss Amy Gordon Olyphant on Friday, and of Miss Helen Dominick, Miss Edith Clark, and Miss Ella de Peyster yesterday were the most largely attended and excited the most interest. Miss Delafield's reception was an extremely pretty one, and the bevy of buds who assisted the débutante made a fair picture. At Mrs. de Peyster's yesterday there assembled all the representatives of the old New York families to welcome another de Peyster generation to society.

The largest wedding of the week was that of Mr. Charles Dexter Cleveland and Miss Frances Elsie Homans, daughter of Mrs. Edward Cranch Homans, and which was celebrated on Wednesday in the West End Collegiate Church, with a following reception at the house of the bride's mother at 308 West Seventy-fifth Street. The week also brought an interesting country wedding, that of Mr. Seymour Le Grand Cromwell and Miss Agnes Whitney, daughter of Mrs. Stephen Whitney of Morris Plains, which was celebrated at St. Peter's Episcopal Church in Morristown, N. J., with a following reception at Mrs. Whitney's beautiful residence at Morris Plains. The news came from Boston during the week of the marriage in London on Oct. 17 last of Miss Mabel Virginia Carrington and Baron Walter van Horn, a German nobleman. Miss Carrington is a member of the old Virginia family of Carringtons and a daughter of Mr. Samuel J. Carrington of Richmond, Va. She was educated in Boston, and two or three years ago went to Italy with the intention of becoming an opera singer, as she has a beautiful voice. She returned to Boston last year and there met the Baron, who was then employed in a publishing house. The young foreigner fell in love with Miss Carrington, whom he heard sing at a musicale, and soon after, failing heir to a large estate in Germany, he was obliged to return there. He pressed his suit by letter, however, so ardently that Miss Carrington and her mother went abroad in September and the marriage, news of which has only just leaked out, was celebrated a month later.

The reception tendered to the patronesses by the Governors of the Wednesday Cotillions was held yesterday afternoon at Delmonico's. Some forty or more young women received. In part, these young women were Miss Lee Van Nostrand Marvin, Miss Mabel C. King, Miss Heloise Beekman, Miss Mattie Belle Quarrier, Miss Marguerite Jeffords, Miss Lucy Carter Byrd, Miss Helene Trenholm, Miss Bettie M. Booker, Miss Caroline Chase, Miss Baylissa Myles, Miss Adelina Tower, Miss Matilda Janeway, Miss Anna Mott, Miss Blanche Rumsey, Miss Mary Newbold Lawrence, Miss Caroline Thompson, Miss Anne Charity Johnson, Miss Alice Bergen, Miss Eva Douglas Wise, Miss Lilia Belle Harrison, and Miss Louise Jones. The first dance of this association for the present season is set for Tuesday evening next, Dec. 5, at Delmonico's, beginning at 9 o'clock, and the Governors wish to call attention to the fact that the hour has been changed from 10 to 9 o'clock in deference to a generally expressed wish, with which the patronesses have kindly fallen in, although not without some personal inconvenience to themselves. Among the members of the Board of Governors who were on the committee at the reception were Heth Lorton, Richard Francis Goldsborough, Arthur Gouverneur Morris, H. Snowden Marshall, and Gano S. Dunn.

The prevalence of typhoid fever in town is becoming a matter of remark. There is always more or less typhoid at this time of the year in New York, when people are coming into town after long months in the country, but there have been of late an unusual number of cases of of serious illness and several deaths from the fever. Mrs. George Freeman, formerly Miss Beatrice Paulding, is convalescing from a long and severe attack, as is also Mrs. George Walker. Miss Annie Duryea, elder daughter of Gen. Hiram Duryea, and who was at Narragansett Pier at the same time as Mrs. Freeman, died on Thursday, after a long illness from typhoid. Her death has caused great sorrow in many households, for she was an unusually attractive girl, and only twenty-six. Miss Duryea was at one time engaged to Mr. Fitzgerald Peploe. Her brother married Miss Nina Smith, sister of Mr. George Stuart Smith. The death of Mrs. Preble Tucker, formerly Miss Katherine Waldo, on Thursday, was also a great shock to a large number of friends. Mrs. Tucker was unusually popular, from her rare sweetness of disposition and character.

The season at Pau is well under way. The Hunt and the Country Club are giving charming entertainments. Mr. Forbes Morgan is one of the chief spirits of the hunting set, and the Posts and the Carrolls and the Ridgeways are among the most frequent riders to hounds.

All gayeties are absolutely stopped in England, and each week the mail and the cable bring a story of other country houses closed, other house parties abandoned and functions postponed. The Transvaal war has even had its effect upon Continental travel, and the last advices from Nice and Monte Carlo and even Cairo, where so brilliant a Winter was promised, are not encouraging. Much will depend upon the Americans, but the tide of travel is not as strong or as full as was anticipated. There will be quite a little gathering on the Nile later on and the Riviera will be moderately gay.

***

Just now there has been quite a little season in Paris. Mrs. James P. Kernochan continues to be entertained in a lavish manner. The greater part of the set which is the most fashionable there will remain until after Christmas and the Jour de l'An, although the latter day is one of the most disagreeable in the year in the gay capital. Miss Pannie Reed has settled herself for the Winter in her apartment on the Rue de la Pompe and is giving her usual musicales. Mme. de Trobriand has returned to her apartment in the Champs Elysées, and there are the reunions as in former years once a week.

***

The absence of Mrs. John Munroe will make quite a difference. Mrs. George Ingraham and Miss Ingraham and Mrs. Griswold Gray will go South later. Mrs. Gray may return to Sicily where she and her niece, Miss Irvin, passed a most delightful season last Autumn. Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Wilmerding remain in Paris. Mrs. Wilmerding is in mourning this Winter for her brother, Mr. Remsen Schenck.

Mr. and Mrs. William K. Vanderbilt, Jr., are yet in the south of France. There they will remain for the present. Mrs. George Law, who has just gone over, opens shortly her villa at Monte Carlo. So far the weather in Paris has been almost the counterpart of what the United States has enjoyed, and with the mercury still in the fifties, people are loath to go South for the present.

The Duchess of Marlborough has been stopping much in London this Autumn. The Quorn has not proved very gay, with so many of the hunt in South Africa. She is said by an English contemporary to be "in great good looks" this year, and though not absolutely pretty, has a very taking, sympathetic face." The few Englishmen who have remained behind, not being able to shoot Boers, have taken kindly to popping at the pheasants. The Duchess of Marlborough, and of course the Duke, were members of the house party at Escrick. They were also guests at Rufford Abbey, the country seat of Lord and Lady Savile, where the Prince of Wales tarried for the shooting a fortnight ago. In speaking of the royal visit, all the English newspapers refer to the time that George IV. visited the abbey with Charles Dibdin, the song writer and author of "Black-Eyed Susan." Consequently a story is arranged for the occasion, and it is gravely stated that Dibdin being so much moved by the felling of giant oak in the park, wrote then and there the poem, "Woodman Spare that Tree." All of which is very interesting except that the verses in question were written by Morris, one of the most celebrated of the American poets and the founder of The Home Journal of this city.

The "welcome home" dinner to Sir Thomas Lipton, at which Mr. Choate was one of the guests; the Tranksgiving dinner on Thursday last in London, and another dinner by the Neptune Club to Sir Thomas at which there were many Americans, were the principal social events of interest in London last week to those on this side of the water. Great difficulty has been experienced in demolishing Curzon Chapel, and it is said that the house which the Duke of Marlborough proposes building will not be ready for occupancy next year, or even, perhaps, the year following.

The Americans in London seem to shine, especially in restaurant parties. Miss Van Wart has given several at the Supper Club, and Mrs. Ronalds, whom an enthusiastic writer calls a veritable Ninon d'Enclos, is also a popular hostess. The Bradley Martins are everywhere and they have quite a reputation already in London for entertaining. Mrs. Arthur Paget is still interested in her military tableaus. The Churchill family, with the exception of the Marlboroughs, have been seen out very little. Lady Randolph Churchill is too busy and anxious, and all of them are somewhat agitated as to the position of Lady Sarah Wilson, who in all her hairbreadth escapes has been accompanied by her maid. This seems to be the absolutely correct idea concerning the behavior of any English lady of position. The fact that she has her maid with her relieves much anxiety.

In commenting upon the different women who have volunteered as nurses and who have gone to South Africa, Vanity Fair has this to say of a woman well known in New York society: "Lady Tatton Sykes has gone out, and means to take a course of nursing at Capetown before she asks leave to go to the front. Now Lady Sykes is the kindest person in the world, and yet one would hardly fancy at first that she would shine as a nurse, though those who know her best say that she is quietness and gentleness itself in a sick room and really has unsuspected talents in that way."

Mr. Waldorf Astor has been giving some very "smart" house parties at Cliveden, where he and Miss Astor will remain until they take a trip on the Continent. At one of the late parties he had Lord and Lady Maitland and Mrs. George Keppel.

The Junior Cotillion Club of Baltimore will begin its series of Tuesday germans on Dec. 12 at Lehman's Hall. The managers this year are Dr. I. R. Trimble, Mr. Harry T. Marshall, Mr. John Redwood, Mr. John G. Brogden, Mr. George S. Jackson, Mr. Redmond Stewart, Mr. Charles H. Carter, Mr. Lawrason Riggs, Mr. H. Carroll Brown, and Mr. John Hanson Thomas. These men belong also to the Bachelor Cotillion or Monday german—and these cotillions are next in importance to the Mondays. They are often liked better by the younger set of girls, as there are more men members, and partners are therefore easier problems to secure. The first Bachelors' Cotillion takes place to-morrow evening. A number of dinners will be given before it. Among them those of Mr. and Mrs. W. S. G. Williams at the Mount Vernon, (the Williamses are spending the Winter in their country home at Long Green;) Mr. and Mrs. Charles Goldsborough's, and Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Brown's, Mr. and Mrs. George Pope's, and Mr. and Mrs. Ferdinand Latrobe's.

Mrs. Harry Garrett is entertaining again in Baltimore after her long period of mourning, and on Thanksgiving evening she gave a beautiful dinner at her home, Evergreen, in honor of three of the season's débutantes, Miss Margaret Ridgely, Miss Rita Preston, and Miss Peachy Brown. An entertainment on Wednesday to introduce a débutante was that of Mrs. Robert Morrison, in honor of Miss Eleanor Morrison. It was an afternoon reception, followed by a supper for the receiving party and intimate friends. Mrs. Mary Thomas Carroll is entertaining her friends this season by a series of afternoon card parties. Mrs. Carroll spends much time in New York, with her sister, Mrs. Rieman Duval. Mrs. Calvin Williams has moved into her new house, a pretty Colonial mansion opposite her old one. She has had Miss Colt of New York visiting her recently, who has been much entertained in Baltimore during the past week. Among other functions given in her honor was a luncheon by Mrs. W. Hall Harrison and a dinner to the Misses Fowler, her cousins. Mr. and Mrs. Julian Smith, formerly of Baltimore, but now of New York, are visiting their old home, and are the guests of Mrs. Smith's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Powhatan Clark. Mrs. Von Kapff, the President of the Maryland Society of Colonial Dames, gave them a dinner last Friday.

Mr. and Mrs. Royal Phelps Carroll have been visiting Mr. Carroll's father, ex-Gov. John Lee Carroll, at the manor. On Thanksgiving evening a beautiful dinner was given there, the guests being, besides the Carrolls, Mr. Philip Carroll, a student at Harvard; Miss Virginia MacTavish, and Count Jean de Kergolay, the son-in-law of the Governor. Miss Hinkley of Baltimore has been visiting in New York, and was given by Mrs. Robert W. Spier a luncheon the other day. Mrs. Spier was formerly Miss Nannie Barker of Baltimore. Mr. and Mrs Ross Winans gave a theatre party at the Academy one evening this week. Their guests were Miss Mary Winter Davis, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Key, and Mr. Robert Lehr. A supper afterward followed at the Winans home. Mr. and Mrs. Edward Key have only recently returned from a two years' stay abroad. Mrs. William Renshaw and Miss Vera Renshaw are going abroad, after all. They were to have sailed a month ago, but Mr. Renshaw's son, Mr. Alfred Renshaw of Troy, N. Y., was ill with typhoid fever, and so she waited until he had recovered. Mr. and Mrs. Gustave Lurman and the Misses Lurman will have an apartment this Winter in town. The Lurmans spend much time at Catonsville, where they have the old Lurman place. Mrs. Lurman also goes to Newport very often to visit her mother's family there, the Powells.

Echoes of the Jenkins-Paar wedding in Baltimore tell of the bride's beautiful traveling gown of purple velvet trimmed with ermine, with a hat of purple velvet and violet chiffon. Thanksgiving was kept at all the country clubs with various functions. The Elkridge hounds had their run, and the Green Spring Valley Kennels also were quite lively. Table d'hôte dinners took place at the Country Club, and there were suppers at the Catonsville Country Club. The Jesse Tysons had a dinner and a house party on that day. The marriage of Miss Mabel Bonsal and Mr. Joshua Holden of Boston will take place in February. Mr. Holden has been here lately, and is already much liked. Miss Mollie George, the granddaughter of old Mr. George, is ill with typhoid, but is better.

With the arrival of the Baron and Baroness Hoyningen-Huene in Philadelphia on Monday last a series of entertainments in their honor have made the week a busy one there. The Baroness was Miss Lothrop of Boston, and it was while her father was Minister to Russia that she met and married the Baron Hoyningen-Huene. It is the Baron's first visit to America, and the couple have been the guests of Mr. and Mrs. William Ellis Scull at their beautiful country place, Leighton Place, at Overbrook, the Baroness being a near relative of Mrs. Scull. On Tuesday evening Mr. and Mrs. Scull gave them a dinner at the Radnor Hunt Club. Among their guests were Mr. and Mrs. George W. Childs Drexel, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Beale, Mr. Hazlehurst, Mr. and Mrs. Charlton Yarnell, and Mr. and Mrs. Henry Whelen. On Wednesday they were entertained at Wootten by Mr. and Mrs. George W. C. Drexel, and on Saturday evening a large dinner was given in their honor by Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Alexander Reilly. The table service was entirely of gold plate.

Mrs. George Crocker will give on Dec. 17 a musicale at her residence, 1 East Sixty-fourth Street. Miss Rutherford's card is inclosed with Mrs. Crocker's. This will be the first large entertainment given in Mrs. Crocker's new home into which she moved last Spring. It will be properly the début of her second daughter, Miss Emma W. Rutherford.

The death of Mr. Frederick G. Swan will throw into mourning quite a number of people in society. Mr. Swan's daughter married Mr. Benjamin Welles, a nephew of Mrs. Astor. Mrs. Welles as Miss Fannie Swan was one of the great beauties of New York society, but since her marriage she has gone out very little. She was one of the bridesmaids of her cousin, Miss Carrie Astor, who married Mr. Orme Wilson.

The cottagers at Tuxedo are beginning to close their homes for the Winter, but Thanksgiving was celebrated there in a jolly fashion. There were many dinners given, and one of the largest was that at the cottage of Mr. and Mrs. T. Suffern Tailer. Special interest is always felt in the list of opera box holders for each recurring season, and this list will be found in another column this morning. Some of the changes in the box-holding element, it will be noticed by the social cognoscenti, are extremely significant, while there are not as many new names in the list as last year. The Sloanes and Webbs have retained their boxes, and the Pembroke Jones and M. Taylor Pyne families have each secured parterre boxes. To the student of New York society this opera box list this morning is most interesting and entertaining reading.

Mr. J. Dunbar Wright, who only recently returned from a trip around the world, will give an exhibition of the photographs he took in Japan, Egypt, and Continental Europe at the Camera Club, 3 West Twenty-ninth Street, this week. Mr. Wright has already acquired deserved reputation for his photographic work.

SOCIETY NOTES.

There is no truth in the report of the engagement of Mr. Powers and Miss Ritterband.

Mr. Harris C. Childs and family have closed their country place, Brier Knoll, Great Neck, L. I., and will be at 34 Gramercy Park for the Winter.

A reunion of the family of Mr. and Mrs. Daniel P. Hays occurred on Thanksgiving Day at their beautiful country house, Hillcrest, Pleasantville, N. Y., where about fifty covers were laid, and the guests had a most enjoyable time. The city home of Mr. and Mrs. Hays, at 9 West One Hundred and Twenty-first Street, will be opened about Dec. 8.

The New York Diet Kitchen Association, now entering upon the twenty-seventh year of its usefulness in relieving the sick poor of this city, contemplates holding a fair in the small ballroom of the Waldorf-Astoria on Thursday, Dec. 7, from 11 A. M. until 6 P. M. Christmas goods, toys, dolls, fancy articles, and cakes will be on sale. A few facts from last year's record may give additional weight to the Diet Kitchen's appeal, as well as explain somewhat the nature of its work. The number of patients relieved was 18,112, and of requisitions, 126,829. There were distributed 222,717 pints of pure milk, 1,857 portions of beef tea, 37,818 portions of rice, 36,886 rolls, cakes, &c., and fruits, flowers, and money for special cases, besides hundreds of garments, old and new, where needed.

Arrangements have been completed for the Throat, Nose, and Lung Hospital fair, to be held in the grand ballroom of the Waldorf-Astoria on Friday next, Dec. 8, from 2 until 11 P. M. The Women's Auxiliary expects to eclipse all its previous sales, as unusual efforts have been made to make this the largest and most attractive affair of the kind this Winter. The grand ballroom is to be decorated with upward of sixty large natural palms. The sale itself will comprise the usual array of fancy and artistic features of woman's work, and there will be numerous special attractions. Among the latter we may mention the tearoom, which will occupy the foyer, where tea and dainties will be served by more than thirty women. The noted palmist of London, Zoza Kenilworth, has generously given his services. Mrs. Amelia E. Barr has contributed a specially designed artistic portfolio containing the original manuscript of "Trinity Bells," her latest novel. This will be offered for sale at the art and literature table, where numerous other manuscripts, as well as pictures, books, subscriptions to the principal magazines, and stationery may be found. Nearly every theatre in the city has contributed a box, and the leading photographers have given orders for pictures. A new cook book, prepared specially as a souvenir of the fair, and entitled "Eat, Drink, and Be Merry," will be disposed of. We might mention many other special features, such as a country store, a loan art collection, &c. All the leading business houses, recognizing that a deserving public charity was to be the beneficiary, have contributed liberally. Everything offered for sale has been given, so that every dollar spent at the fair will go directly to the hospital fund.

SONS OF THE REVOLUTION.

May Purchase Drawings and Paintings of Revolutionary Scenes.

The annual meeting of the Sons of the Revolution will be held to-morrow evening at Delmonico's, Fifth Avenue and Forty-fourth Street. Most of the present officers will be re-elected, including the President, Frederick S. Talmadge. An important subject which the members of the society have under consideration is the purchase of the entire set of original drawings and paintings illustrative of Revolutionary history, which were used in Scribner's Magazine in connection with Senator Lodges "Story of the Revolution."

The collection includes 121 pictures, among them being views of nearly all the prominent battlefields and other scenes which have become historic in the struggle for independence.

Themes and Topics

In the Musical World

The musical interest of the past week was large, but the chief pleasure to the connoisseurs was afforded by the piano recital of Mr. Arthur Whiting. This was one of those entertainments to which the serious lover of music can sit and listen with unalloyed delight. To say that is to say that it was something far out of the common order. For there are very few entertainments which do not contain something to offend or annoy the real lover of music. The merits of this particular concert have already received some mention in these columns, but they are worthy of some further discussion.

Mr. Whiting, as has already been noted by our contemporary The Tribune, never before elected to display himself as a piano virtuoso, but always was content to figure as one of those who sought to make known the content of certain music for which he had particular fondness. It is safe to say that he did not intend to set himself forth as a "virtuoso" on the occasion to which reference is now made. He was evidently aiming at a full and convincing expression of the meaning of the two works of Brahms which he played. It never occurred to him to make either of them a mere vehicle for the revelation of any uncommon agility of finger or strength of wrist.

But none the less our neighbor The Tribune was right in estimating his performance as that of a virtuoso, and for two reasons. In the first place, a real virtuoso is an interpreter. In this department of the virtuoso's art Mr. Whiting on the occasion referred to proved himself to be a master. But in his effort to interpret the meaning of the composer Mr. Whiting made the instrument sing from beginning to end of the work. He never found it necessary to pound on the piano as if he hated it and were trying to wreck it. Neither did he discover any need of playing so fast that those who heard him were dazzled. He simply sought out the musical thoughts of Brahms and sang them to his audience with a beautiful vocal tone and with a wonderful variety of gentle and significant nuances which would have been impossible if he had been trying to play faster and harder than any one else in the world. And yet it is for doing this that some of the so-called virtuosi are praised.

This is an old and familiar topic in these columns. It seems likely to be treated here often. When the public shows that it cannot be imposed upon by fast playing the subject will be permitted to drop. It may not be necessary to say that the writer has in mind a young pianist of immense talent, who is wasting his precious gifts in the foolish endeavor to play faster than Rosenthal. He would really be wiser if he tried to play more softly than Pachmann. The results would be less disagreeable and less unmusical. But Hambourg's rattling thunders and Pachmann's marvelous pianissimi, which caused one writer to refer to him as "Pachmann the pianissimist" are not in themselves piano playing of a high order. When Pachmann plays pianissimo in the right place then his wonderful gentleness of touch makes the proper effect, and genuine musical beauty is the issue. When he plays pianissimo in the wrong place simply for the sake of making a magic murmur, there is no true musical result. In the same way, when Mr. Hambourg plays fast and sonorously in the first movement of the Saint-Saens C-minor concerto or in the list movement of the Rubinstein concerto in D minor he produces a legitimate result, and the cause of good music is furthered. But when he plays as he did in the last movement of the Chopin E-minor concerto last Sunday evening he commits an unmusical offense for which there is no pardon.

Such a performance as that of the Brahms F-minor sonata by Mr. Whiting on Tuesday places him above either of these men as a pianist pure and simple. It does not give him the right to start out to amaze the world with his finger technic or the enormous power of his wrists and fore arms, but it entitles him to the high name of interpreter. It places him on a level where he stands nearer to the thought of the composer, and hence closer to the position of creative artist. This is the true end of musical performance, and the listener to music should ever keep it in mind. It is a good rule always to distrust any performance which amazes you. You may be sure that the technics of the performer have got between you and the music. When, however, the technics only make the music more beautiful in itself it is time to stop and consider whether you are not in the presence of an interpreter.

Mr. Whiting's performance had one surpassingly lovely technical merit, and that is one which the lightning players usually neglect. It was full of pure singing tone. Again and again the writer of this column has said that the object of all technic should be tone. The singing tone should be preserved in all passages, no matter how intricate. That is the secret of beauty in piano playing. When the singing tone disappears the performance becomes hard and unmusical. On the ocean at the present moment, bound for America, is the one pianist who realizes this above all others. Paderewski always sings on the piano. There may be differences of opinion as to the value of his readings, there may be a variety of thought as to the brilliancy or breadth of his work, but there can be no two opinions as to the constant beauty of his singing touch. It is this which makes his musical palette so rich in tints, which gives him his position as the finest tone-colorist of our time. If his fingers have not lost their cunning, which is entirely unlikely, he will bring back to our minds the right conception of the purpose of piano technic; and the sunlight of truth will pierce the grass walls of the brittle and brilliant technic to which we have of late been listening.

A correspondent, who is at least frank in the utterance of his desires, asks the following questions:

1. Is not "Don Giovanni" the greatest opera ever written, Wagner's music-dramas excluded?

2. Who is the greatest master of symphonies after Beethoven?

3. Is Mozart's music classic, and is he the king of the classic period?

4. Whom do you consider the greatest masters of chamber music?

With the exception of the last, these are questions of the kind to which direct answers cannot be given. They are asked under a total misapprehension of the nature and office of musical criticism. The musical critic, unless he be venturesome, does not attempt to be an umpire to award championships in music. In all human probability it never occurs to him, if he be a really high thinker, to decide for himself the exact relative merits of the various composers. He finds something great in all who are great, and he rejoices in it. But he is not at all worried if he cannot prove that Mozart is greater than Brahms, or Dvorak greater than Tschaikowsky. These things do not matter. Musical art is not benefited by the settlement of relative ranks.

If the musical critic of THE NEW YORK TIMES were to answer the writer of the letter referred to by saying that "Don Giovanni" was (or was not) the greatest opera ever written, that would not end the matter. There would be others, equally well qualified to pronounce such opinions, who would hold an opposite view, and our correspondent would be no nearer the settlement of his quandary than he is now. It may interest and please him to know, however, that the musical editor of this paper personally believes that "Don Giovanni" is the typical opera of the classic school. As to whether it is surpassed by any of the new romantic school or not, even with or without the music-dramas of Wagner, this writer is not prepared even to express an opinion. He has always felt that he was a little too close to the works to get sufficient perspective for safe comparisons of their respective heights. And, to tell the honest truth, he really does not care which of them is the greatest, and, therefore, being without a proper interest in the settlement of a possible controversy on this point, he has not attempted to settle it for himself.

The second question cannot be answered for similar reasons. No one knows who is the greatest master of symphonic composition after Beethoven. The musical editor of THE TIMES thinks it may be Brahms, but there are occasions when he is listening to symphonic work by Tschaikowsky or Schumann when he thinks it may not. The writer of the letter is at liberty to choose for himself. He will naturally say that this is no answer to his inquiry, but it means simply that he is as likely to be right as any one else. Thirty years hence there may possibly be some one who is sufficiently poised in the presence of the works of the writers of to-day to decide which of them distinctly towers above the rest. Those of us who have the most marked preferences now are not quite sure that we are right. What we are sure about is that certain music of our time is worthy of a place among the world's best art treasures, and what we are fighting for is a general recognition of that fact.

Question No. 3 is not so hard to answer. There cannot be the slightest doubt that the music of Mozart is classic. And there is very little doubt that the glorious boy was the king of the classic period, provided we place the termination of that period before the production of the masterpieces of Beethoven. Since Beethoven stood as the connecting link between the classic and romantic periods in musical history, he may be put into either. His works are regarded as the culmination of the labors of the classicists in perfecting the pure beauty of musical design, but they are also the first symphonic compositions in which the spirit of the romantic era is embodied. So if our correspondent means to put Beethoven in the romantic era, then he is quite safe in saying that Mozart was the king of the classic period.

The last question can be answered without any trouble whatever, for it requires the writer of this column to state only his own opinion. We do not know how many greatest masters our correspondent requires for his satisfaction, but perhaps it may suffice to say that in the mind of the present writer the greatest composers of chamber music have been Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven, Schumann, and Brahms.

Another correspondent asks for a list of books, other than several which he names, to aid him to a better understanding of music. He seems to be especially interested in the opera. Here is a list which would probably prove of some use to him: Frieda Winworth's "The Epic of Sounds," Guerber's "Stories of the Wagner Dramas," H. E. Krehbiel's "Studies in the Wagnerian Drama," "What Is Good Music?" and "The Orchestra and Orchestral Music," by the musical editor of THE TIMES. There are other works, but they do not seem to be just what this particular correspondent desires. If he wishes to enter more deeply into the meaning of music let him read Parry's "Evolution of the Art of Music" and Ambros's "Boundaries of Poetry and Music." This last is a work which every serious lover of music should read and ponder. It will clear up a lot of questions about which there is now a general and lamentable misunderstanding.

W. J. HENDERSON.

The Russian's Love for Music.

Descriptive of the modern rise of music in Russia, Mr. A. E. Keaton writes in the Contemporary Review:

"Where there is a Slav there is a song," says a Slavonic proverb, and no public ceremony or Court function is ever deemed complete in Russia without an outburst of singing to heighten its impressiveness. There is besides a marked dramatic ingredient in the Slavonic character. The typical Russian loves acting. To discover this, it is only necessary to visit a Russian village and witness the unconscious presentments of lyric drama or of desolate tragedy set forth by the quaint rites of a country wedding or a rustic funeral. Or study a Russian legend. It at once impresses you with its wealth of dramatic situations most concisely defined. In this the Slavonic folk-tale differs radically from its Celtic neighbor. A comparison of the two types suggests that the Russian principally desires a clear statement of facts; a poetic idea that must be extracted from clouds of metaphor conveys but little significance to his mind. An innate love of song, an innate love of acting, a keen perception of dramatic unity, combined with a passionate love of color and a strong sense of movement—here surely, without any manner of doubt, one has the basis of a well-nigh perfect school of opera."

THE GRAND OPERA SEASON

FEW CHANGES ARE OBSERVED

The time limit for patrons of the Grand Opera season at the Metropolitan Opera House, which will be inaugurated Monday evening, Dec. 18, to subscribe for boxes and seats, terminated yesterday, and while there are absolutely no boxes to be obtained on the parterre circle, one or two only remain (which are probably spoken for) on the grand tier with a like number still to be obtained in the section where the stall boxes are located. The same overcrowded condition prevails in the orchestra, dress circle, balcony, and family circle. It can be safely stated that Mr. Grau could have announced the closing date for these subscriptions several weeks ago, as every place had been practically taken or bespoken.

The rights to the parterre boxes, which are entirely in charge of a committee representing the stockholders of the Metropolitan Opera and Real Estate Company, have been renewed this year, with few exceptions, and in the many cases where death or absence from the country necessitated the leasing of these boxes, friends have been given the preference, notwithstanding large premiums have been offered over the established amount of $5,000 which is the standard figure paid into the treasury every season by the stockholders of the Metropolitan Opera and Real Estate Company.

It was stated by an official of the company that twice the number of boxes could have been rented if they were on the tier, and every year it becomes more evident that the present capacity of this particular part of the auditorium is becoming too small.

Some of the important changes that will be observed this year in the parterre boxes, which always contribute to the prevailing gorgeousness of every opera night, are as follows: Gen. Samuel Thomas, instead of occupying Box 21, which he had last year, and which Mrs. Benjamin Brewster will occupy, has taken Box 4. Box 11 has been taken for the season by Eliza Dyer, Jr., jointly with W. D. Sloane. Box No. 17, owned by the late Cornelius Vanderbilt, it is said, will in all probability remain vacant, except for occasional use by Senator-elect Chauncey M. Depew. August Belmont has taken Box 4, which last year was divided on the various nights between E. A. Harriman, F. H. Benedict, F. K. Sturgis, and S. B. French. John R. Drexel is a new-comer in Box 23 for Fridays. The Van Nest sisters, Mrs. Gambrill, Mrs. Jackson, and Mrs. Foster will occupy Box 29 jointly. Thenor L. Park has the Juilliard box, No. 2, for Wednesday evenings. Mrs. Frederick Pierson and Miss Leary have Box 6 for Wednesdays, while M. Thayer Pyne has taken Box 26 for Wednesdays.

William K. Vanderbilt, for the first time in many years, has rented his box, No. 6, to several friends, and Henry Clews again divides his season with George J. Gould, who will be seen in Box 12. The family of the late Calvin S. Brice will not be seen in their accustomed place this season, as their box, No. 18, has been leased to H. Pembroke Jones. J. J. Emery, and H. L. Terrill. Robert Goelet also sacrifices some of his season's opera pleasure by disposing of Box 24 to W. R. Stewart for Mondays, L. Lorillard for Wednesdays, Egerton L. Winthrop for Fridays, and retaining it himself for the matinées. While William C. Whitney has retained his box, No. 30, it is very doubtful if it will be occupied. The new comers in the grand tier and stall boxes are Mrs. Sanford Bissell and Miss Julie Wells, Miss Susan Day, R. A. C. Smith, Joseph Pulitzer, John D. Wenz, and John B. Laurence, Jr.

THE OPERA HOUSE CONCERT.

The concert at the Metropolitan Opera House this evening promises to be of unusual interest. Miss Clara Butt, the young English contralto who has created quite a stir in our musical circles, will be heard for the last time this season, as she sails for England Dec. 9. Again, it will be the only opportunity to hear her in an oratorio selection, which will be "O Rest in the Lord," from Mendelssohn's "Elijah." Then Vladimir de Pachmann, who has given five recitals in this city this Fall, will be heard with orchestra for the first time, playing Chopin's Concerto No. 2 in F minor, and at the same time Mr. Walter Damrosch, after an absence of two years, will again come before the public as a conductor, together with his Symphony Orchestra of seventy-five musicians, and will make us acquainted with several novelties. Among the numbers on the programme are "Academic Overture," by Brahms; "Siegfried's Rhine Journey," by Wagner; theme and variations from Goldmark's "Rustic Wedding Symphony." Miss Butt will also sing Gluck's aria from "Alceste" and Sullivan's "Lost Chord," and Mr. Evan Williams will sing the Prize Song from the "Meistersinger," by Wagner.

THE AMERICAN THEATRE.

The first double bill of the season at the American Theatre will be given next week, when the Castle Square Opera Company will sing the entire first act of "Fidelio" and "Cavalleria Rusticana." The occasion will be musically noteworthy, as Beethoven's only opera is a comparative novelty, not having been presented in New York in English within the last decade. The large clientele of the American Theatre has expressed more than the usual interest in this the latest work to be brought forward by the Castle Square management. The excerpt to be presented contains many of the justly famous numbers of the grandly beautiful score. "Fidelio" will be followed by Mascagni's popular "Cavalleria Rusticana." Miss Mary Linck will assume the title rôle in "Fidelio," in which she has won conspicuous success. The other assignments have been intrusted to the competent care of Miss Mattfeld, Mr. Elder Mr. Mertens, and Mr. Clark. The casts selected for "Cavalleria Rusticana" guarantee performances of great merit. The Santuzzas will be Mme. Selma Kronold and Miss Grace Golden, both of whom have been prominently identified with the rôle. Mr. Berthald and Mr. Sheehan will sing Turiddu, Mr. Luckstone Alfio, Miss Holmes Lola, and Miss Niven Lucia. Commencing Dec. 11, a répertoire week has been arranged, when two performances each of "Il Trovatore," "Romeo and Juliet," "Carmen," and "Aida" will be given. The Christmas week attraction will be "La Tarantella," a new romantic opera by Jakobowski, the composer of "Erminie."

NOTES OF MUSIC.

M. Paderewski sailed for this country on Wednesday last. Before leaving England he announced a concert in aid of the sufferers by the African war. The cable brought the information that the recital was attended by the customary demonstrations which follow this artist wherever he goes. The house was packed and hundreds of persons were unable to gain admittance. It may interest many to know that the prices for the recitals in this city have been so arranged that the entertainments will be within the reach of every one.

The fifth concert of the Pittsburg Orchestra took place yesterday afternoon. The programme was as follows: Overture to "Der Freischütz," aria from "Don Carlos," M. Plançon; Schumann's first symphony, "Siegfried Idyll," songs by M. Plançon, and Liszt's first rhapsody.

The second concert of the Cincinnati Orchestra took place last night. The programme was as follows: Mozart's "Moorish Funeral Music," Beethoven's "Pastoral Symphony," Tschaikowsky's violin concerto, (Mr. Petschnikoff,) Saint-Saëns's "Le Rouet d'Omphale," and an entr'act from Massenet's "Don Caesar de Bazan."

The concerts are intended for very young children, and it is Mr. Damrosch's purpose not only to implant in the minds of his listeners a desire for good music but also to make the fundamental principles of music clear and intelligible to them.

MR. FRANK DANIELS AND "THE AMEER."

A New Operetta to be Produced To-morrow at Wallack's.

Frank Daniels will present his new comic opera at Wallack's this week. It is "The Ameer," and sets forth in comical fashion the difficulties which punctuate the life of that East Indian ruler. The story is by Fred M. Ranken and Kirk La Shelle. It is their first effort at libretto writing, and Mr. Daniels says that he has never had a part which fitted him so well as his part in "The Ameer." The music of "The Ameer" is by Victor Herbert, whose "Wizard of the Nile," "The Idol's Eye," and "Serenade" have made his name familiar to all the music lovers of this country. The support which Manager La Shelle has provided for Mr. Daniels is said to be the very best the comedian has ever had. In addition to the principals of last year, (Helen Redmond, Kate Uart, Norma Kopp, and Will Danforth,) the management has engaged Mr. George Devoll, the American tenor, who made a hit in London last season; Will F. Rochester of Alice Nielsen's forces, and William Corliss of "The Highwayman" Company. The costuming is from the best costumers of New York and the scenery is fashioned after a personal inspection of the Ameer's palace and grounds in Afghanistan. The chorus numbers sixty. The story of the operetta is officially given as follows:

Act I.—Public Square in Cabul with the Ameer's palace in the background. It is betrothal day. The custom of the Ameer's realm compels those enthusiastic and trusting souls, which long to mate, to seek the public sanction of the Ameer. And this is the one day of the year when such sanction can be had. As the Ameer is very generous with his sanction in such matters, everybody concerned is quite happy, except the Ameer himself. It happens that on this same day Great Britain compels the Ameer to pay annual tribute of goodly size to defray the expenses of British soldiers employed to see that he keeps the peace, &c. To obtain the money to pay his tribute, the Ameer is in the habit of wedding some rich woman, who, in exchange for the honor of being taken into the royal family, pays the tribute out of her own coffers. This time the Ameer has arranged to wed a rich young American girl, who is due to-day. This tribute paying is not the only trouble of the Ameer. His brother is athirst for his rich blood and in employing every available means to attain his fell purpose, has made the Ameer's life uncomfortably heavy to carry, to say nothing of the hunger to which the Ameer is subjected by reason of his fear of poison. The Ameer is under the name of Mr. Cut, the head of a band of brigands known as the firm of Cut & Slash. The firm murders and robs on percentages and the leader of the band, who does not know of the Ameer's connection, has taken a commission from the Ameer's brother to kill the Ameer and another commission from a lady of the court to hold up the stage bearing the American lady, with the view to keeping her a prisoner till bethrothal day has passed, the court hoping that, in the meantime, she will be chosen by the Ameer for his bride. The American lady is betrothed to the British officer in command, and it is to see him and not to wed the Ameer that she has come to Afghanistan. The Ameer learns that the brigands are seeking his life, and to elude them he disguises himself as a brigand.

Act II.—Brigands' stronghold in the mountains: The Ameer has been captured by the brigands, who, thinking him a rival, are amusing themselves with playing whip with him and aiding him in attempting to escape, only to catch and punish him the more. His chamberlain and the amorous Court lady know of his predicament, but fear to discover his identity to the brigands lest they execute their commission to kill him. He is tied to a stake and the brigands are about to puncture him with knives when his chamberlain, who is also the Mr. Slash of the firm, declares the Ameer is Mr. Cut. In the meantime the Ameer has assuaged his hunger by stealing and eating a melon, only to be told that it is poisoned. Upon his release from the stake he orders the chamberlain tied to it, and is about to do a little knife practice on the chamberlain himself, when he learns that the melon has not been poisoned, and in his recovered spirits he releases the chamberlain. He is then compelled, as leader of the brigands, to conduct the way to hold up the coach containing the American girl. This deed is no sooner done and the money secured than the soldiers appear and capture the whole band.

Act III.—Throne room of the Ameer's palace. The Ameer has escaped from the soldiers and resumed his robes of office. Not knowing that the girl to be held up was his bride to be, he concludes that she is not coming, and, fearing to be cast into the dungeon for the non-payment of the tribute, he changes places with the fool. The complications arising therefrom are untangled by Mirzah, the enamored Court lady, announcing her desire to wed the Ameer and pay the tribute. The Ameer takes her and the American girl appears just afterward, but too late to be betrothed to the Ameer, and she is given to the British officer, and all ends well.

MUSICAL MATTERS AT HOME

The Boston School Board has decided to create the post of director of music in the public schools. It may or may not be that this will fill a long-felt want in Boston, but it certainly has been a good thing in this city.

The announcement is made that "The Ring der Nibelungen" will probably be given, under local auspices, in Music Hall, Cincinnati, some time in April, after the close of the Grau opera season. The local forces will be the Symphony Orchestra and a chorus specially trained for the purpose, under the direction of Dr. N. J. Eisenheimer. The musical director will be Mr. Van der Stucken. It has been the ambition of the latter for a long time to present "The Ring" in its entirety in Cincinnati. He has been encouraged in his project by the artistic and financial successes of our opera festivals in the past. There is said to be substantial backing in the undertaking, and it would appear to be reasonable that a sufficient number of guarantors could be found among Cincinnati's enthusiastic and wealthy patrons of opera to insure it against financial loss, with a prospect of even a surplus, if the experience of the past is any criterion of such a result. Then, too, it must be remembered that a presentation of "The Ring" in its entirety would be an absolute novelty. West of New York it has never been given in any other city. The soloists would include the great talent that is available, several having been engaged at the last Baireuth Festival, such as Ternina, Nordica, Brema, Schumann-Heink, Van Dyck, Dippel, Van Rooy, Edouard de Reszke, and the baritones, Fredericks and Brener. It is proposed that Mr. Grau provide the scenery, which will be the new set used at Vienna last year.

Thus saith the Chicago Post: "Perhaps it is very humiliating to the people of Chicago to be told six or eight times a week that New York supports grand opera while it fails here, but we have a faint impression that we shall survive the humiliation. It is true that New York supports grand opera—with the able assistance of thousands of visitors—just as it supports the Horse Show and similar fashionable crazes. But we are not aware that it has done anything else for music. It drove Theodore Thomas away; it practically killed Leopold Damrosch and Anton Seidl; it has never supported a first-class orchestra; it has no oratorio society, and it has no local pride or active musical impetus. The fashionable rich have patronized the opera as an attractively expensive luxury, and—like the Horse Show—as an opportunity to disport their showy clothes and be admired by their less opulent sisters and brothers in the cheaper seats. These facts are not submitted as any reason why Chicago should not patronize the opera if it is so inclined, but merely to show the hollowness of parading New York as the great patron and promoter of music. Relatively there is not a city in the United States so destitute of the real musical impulse as this Oriental metropolis, and we fancy that with these plain facts so generally known comparisons with New York are not likely to overwhelm us with shame."

"By my troth, Captain, these are very bitter words." That New York drove Theodore Thomas away may or may not be true. It is undeniable that he was needed more in Chicago than he was here at the time when he left us. But we never knew that this city killed Leopold Damrosch or Anton Seidl. Both of them were held in the highest esteem, and when Dr. Damrosch died in the infancy of the German opera here, it was regarded as a calamity to this community. Mr. Seidl was held in equally high repute, we believe, and his earnings during his career here were such as to demonstrate that the musical public of New York placed a great value on his inestimable services. It requires a remarkable fancy to trace his death to public neglect.

The charge that New York has never supported a first-class orchestra may or not be true. It helps to support the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which is regarded as first-class east of the Illinois State boundary. The Chicago Orchestra came to this city twice, and it has not returned. Perhaps that proves that New York has never supported a first-class orchestra.

In the course of an editorial article lamenting the failure of Mr. Grau's opera season in Chicago, The Post of that city says with some wisdom: "Will it be said that the public craves novelty, and that it has grown weary of the old and long-cherished compositions? No one who has watched musical development will entertain such a theory. The facts run counter to it. It is an incontestable fact that music lovers do not care for new compositions, either in symphonic or operatic lines. They are always skeptical, and require credentials of strong character of all new aspirants. Music is different from literature, and it is a fallacy to say that because one does not read the same book once or twice a year for a lifetime, one should not be compelled to listen

Women Here and There—Their Frills and Fancies

There are more things that incapacitate for service than people often think. Now snoring is apparently a harmless occupation, which is not generally supposed to do anything more serious than give people who are in the vicinity of the open-mouthed sleeper the opportunity to exercise patience and a few other worthy virtues. But it was only the other day that a nurse lost a position from this commonplace practice. A nurse, who was about to leave her position to take a well-earned rest recommended in her place a nurse who she knew would supply it well. The new nurse arrived and was introduced to the patient, and all her needs, physical and mental, explained. She was apparently as satisfactory as a nurse could be, considering that she was coming in as a stranger. The patient, who had been ill for a long time and had nerves that were worn to the threadbare stage, was prepared for some little annoyance in making a change of attendants. But when night came and each long-drawn breath of the sleeper in the same room came in an audible nasal tone, it was too much to be borne. The next day the nurse was told gently and with regret that though it was her misfortune and not her fault, the patient's nerves were not strong enough to overlook the misfortune, and the nurse, acknowledging her weakness, departed.

One of the feelings most grown people have when they take time to look back upon their youthful days and youthful thoughts is that of surprise at the reverence wasted by the child upon the "grown-ups," who, in the child's eyes, are the personification of everything good and great and wise. With every year comes to the grown-up the realization of ideals unfulfilled and of so many failures that life seems little more than one great mistake and hardly worth while. Then the realization of the reverence the child has had for this network of failures brings a sense of shamefacedness. One woman, talking of her childhood the other day, said that the greatest blow to her confidence in the world as a great and wonderful place to live in came when she first learned that grown people really sometimes did wrong. The horror of it was almost more than she could bear. She made up her mind that she never wanted to grow up, and life never afterward had quite such a roseate hue.

A Southern woman who lived a carefully sheltered life on a plantation in the South, where the slaves were like members of one great well-cared-for family and her own life ideal, says that it was not until after her marriage and she had left her protected Southern home and traveled and learned to know many people and places that she knew anything of the evil and sorrow of the world. Then it came to her fully developed understanding as a terrible revelation and a shock almost too great to be borne, so great, in fact, that she has been wondering ever since if she did not pay too dearly for her happy girlhood days of absolute ignorance and innocence.

People sometimes wonder what kind of work an actress likes to do and if she doesn't get tired of one character before the long run of a play is over. There is always a certain excitement about stage work, it is said, that prevents it from becoming monotonous, but there is a great difference in the kind of a character that is taken. "I like to play a character which runs the whole gamut of the emotions," Miss Virginia Harned said the other day. "I liked the part of Lady Ursula in the 'Adventure of Lady Ursula.' I simply loved that part. I can't bear a character where you begin weeping in the beginning of a play and weep straight through it."

Isn't it strange how little originality there is in the world? A few years ago, when the big elephant at Coney Island was one of the show places of the island, one of the things that every lover who visited it took home to his lass was a silk handkerchief woven there before his eyes. That was a treasured souvenir to take away to the wilds outside of New York. Now they are going to have an electric loom at the Paris Exposition and are going to weave the same old handkerchief there. To be sure, the work will be done by electricity and in connection with a photographic arrangement by which a photograph of the purchaser is to be reproduced in the silk. There was only a picture of the elephant on the Coney Island handkerchief. That would seem to be preferable.

"I remember hearing Mr. Chase, the artist, speaking to a class at one time," says a bright woman, "and tell them that in coming to an art gallery they must look for the best of the work there, not for the bad points. It seemed to me that that was such an important lesson that I have always remembered it. This is an age of criticism, and the critical spirit is so easily acquired, it is such an insidious evil that it creeps in before you are aware of it, and you find it in yourself when you discover that you never thoroughly enjoy anything because you see not the good but all the bad points, and these have such a mastery of you that you cannot get the good if you would."

Two enterprising young women in a boarding house in the city where there is a good deal of home life have been taking orders for fudge from the other boarders and outside friends this Fall and early Winter and making quite a little profit, which is being stored away for the Christmas holidays, when there are to be festive times. Sixty cents a pound they ask for the fudge, and even with nuts this leaves quite a margin of profit. Preparations for the festivities have already begun. There is to be a Christmas tree—it will be a very small one—and presents for every one in the house, but none of them will exceed 5 or 10 cents in price. The celebration will be held some time shortly after Christmas, when those who spent the day away have returned, and this will be an advantage, for Christmas trees will be cheap at that time. Many of the presents have been bought already. It is necessary to do this because there may be verses to write to explain the exact suitability of the gift for the recipient. These will all be appropriate. The woman who wants a new horse for her Summer driving in the country will receive it, a sword will be presented to the hero from Cuba, and the young woman who receives long letters from the Philippines is to receive a diamond ring in a package which will have a Manila postmark. There will be nothing to be desired in the way of size of the stone in this gift. One of the chief workers in the celebration is to receive a stove which will undoubtedly enable her to make better fudge than her chafing dish can turn out another season.

People who know Mrs. Kendal well say that she is a most observing woman. She was going by the City Buildings in Philadelphia during her stay there recently, when she remarked casually, as she looked at one of the buildings:

"Well, I am glad Mr. Penn is in place at last."

A statue of William Penn, which for a number of years had been standing on the ground waiting to be elevated, had been put in place since she had seen it the last time, and she noticed it immediately, while her companion, who had been over the ground innumerable times, had not given it a thought.

Speaking of schools the other day Mrs. Kendal said she had visited every school in New York and Brooklyn. She makes a practice of visiting public institutions of all kinds.

One of the cleverest women artists of the day is Mrs. Katherine T. Prescott, who has an individual line of work in plaster. She is considered to do unexcelled work in medallion portraits, and her portrait busts are charming as well as her original work. Mrs. Prescott is a Boston woman, but she comes to New York usually once or twice a year, and has many friends and patrons here. She has the concentrative power of a genius, and when she is at work she is dead to the outside world and everything that is going on around her. When she went into a studio a few years ago to take up some line of art work, she took to sculpture so readily that it was thought at first that she had had experience in it. She discovered that her gift was in that direction, and she has devoted herself to the work. Some of her medallions, and even some of her busts are colored, a difficult thing to do without a true understanding of the color effects and an artist's eye, but in Mrs. Prescott's work the result is altogether charming. A portrait bust, for instance, has a tint of red gold in the hair; and a bas relief, an ideal head, has the same touch of gold in the hair, beautifully contrasting a delicate background with green tones in it. The backgrounds of some medallion portraits are also given a faint color effect, which are difficult to obtain and are eminently satisfactory in the result produced. Mrs. Prescott's figures and portraits in intaglio are charming. There is a way of hanging these portraits that makes a great difference in bringing out the beauty and expression of the work, and people do not always know it. The intaglio should always be hung with the face toward the light, and the bas relief with back of the head to the light. Mrs. Prescott's original conceptions of Shakespeare's characters are very charming.

"No," said the woman, "one thing I never do, no matter how much annoyed I may be, is to grumble at the conductor, or take him to task. He can't safely answer back, and I consider that it is taking a mean advantage of him.

There were several things that were particularly attractive at the exhibition of the New York Society of Keramic Arts the other day aside from the general excellence of the work that was shown there. One of these, which received considerable attention, was a little cider pitcher, not so very small, but not large in comparison with the many tall pieces around. It was a short, round, dumpy, comfortable cider pitcher, painted on the outside with rosy apples, a solid piece of color work, and very charming and appropriate in effect. Another piece by the same woman, which was equally charming and appropriate, was a bulging whisky jug in yellow and golden browns, with corn in the husks. The effect of this was marred somewhat by a silver top, which made a discordant tone, but as it is necessary to have a top if the jug is to be used for the purpose for which it was intended, perhaps this could not be helped. There was another pitcher, a very tall, straight one, which attracted some attention, but it was in tones too cold to suggest conviviality of any kind. It was painted in a design of pears—what kind of a beverage would one associate with pears?—in delicate greens, and the handle and edges were done in solid dark green. A bedroom set was very pretty and appropriate. This consisted of a pitcher for ice water with a large plate upon which to stand it, a candlestick, a match box, and a glass which found a place in the set merely for utility. The decoration was red poppies, and in lettering of the same shade were appropriate quotations and verses. The one on the plate was a verse from one of Eugene Field's lullabies and "the poppies shall hang from her head to her feet." This set was painted by Miss Florence Allen, who, as usual, had some pretty designs in mushrooms on china. But the chef d'oeuvre of the whole collection, as far as quaintness and originality was concerned, as well perhaps as for beauty, was a big soup tureen. Can anything sound more ugly? But this was charming. It was a massive affair, that, in its original condition, plain white, as the artist picked it up at a second-hand shop, must have been a monumental piece of ugliness in tableware. It was very large, an octagon, round, a platter, a big dish on a standard, with a high cover and a big ladle of the porcelain. But painted it was stately and magnificent. The octagon shape gave innumerable little panels, which were used in the decorating with fine effect. Each was a little piece of work by itself, but the ensemble with the predominating gold and turquoise blue, that difficult color to obtain, was delightful.

The story of the visiting housekeeper gets into the papers once in a while, but no one really knows whether there isn't a good deal of romance about it. But there really are such people, and they do a very good work, and work that is appreciated. One woman has two families for which she keeps house. These are among the wealthiest in New York, and she gives them her entire attention and has not time for anything else. She receives $150 a month from each family, so that she makes a good income. She is not paid for nothing, however. People seldom are. Her business necessitates the exact knowledge of how a large establishment should be conducted, and she is very thorough and up-to-date. The problem of a housekeeper in families of wealth has been as great as that of the general domestic in families of small means. There are not many really good housekeepers, and the "reduced gentlewoman," if she knows the business, is not always willing to take the housekeeper's position. The reduced gentlewoman has not yet learned to take herself commonsensibly. But with the visiting housekeeper there is no trouble on either side, the mistress of the house and the housekeeper are equally independent, and the arrangement seems to be ideal. There are three other wealthy families in New York—three sisters—who have solved the problem of the housekeeper by importing the genuine English article, the woman who takes pride in her position, is absolute mistress in her own sphere, and has her own suite of apartments and is a stronghold in which entire confidence can be placed. There are some other visiting housekeepers who have more families on their hands, these being smaller households, and for this work they receive good but not as large salaries.

There is a pretty little tea room in one of the up-town shops which is quiet and retired and is surprisingly well patronized. Only tea and wafers are served, but both are good, and the atmosphere of the room is restful. Many women might be expected to go there at the close of a day's shopping, but it is not only the women but the men who are patrons. The latter go in for luncheon. Nothing but the tea and wafers, but they say they prefer this well served in a quiet place to the noise and poor cooking of many restaurants.

FEMININE FRILLS.

It is fortunate in these days of warm weather, crowded theatres, and fur toques that it is the custom to remove the hats in the theatre. It is a relief to know in watching the innumerable fur toques that visit the matinées that the wearers are not to be troubled with brain fever as an after effect. It is a good thing, though, that the pompadour has not yet gone out, or there might be brain fevers from an opposite cause. The pretty young girls and the older women who wear fur toques all day go to the theatre at night with only a butterfly or a ribbon in the hair, and but for the pompadour and its attendants there might be danger of taking cold passing from the carriage to the theatre and waiting for the carriage afterward.

***

There seem to be more and more elaborate gowns at the theatre, and at a popular play the frocks worn by the greater number of women in the audience have quite as festive an appearance as those of the women in the parquet of the Opera House. This may be partially due to the disappearance of the hat. Woman in an ordinary street gown without her hat looks almost out of place, but in a pretty evening frock she looks well. Then a small ribbon bow, with perhaps a simple aigrette, is so much less expensive than a bonnet that an economical woman could afford to put more money into her theatre gown. Pale blue silks, with yokes and sleeves of white lace are to be seen, many gowns of cloth in the delicate pastel blues and pinks made elaborately with fine lace, and all sorts and kinds of capes go over them, from the lightest of opera wraps to long fur-lined garments. The long, loose coats of dark cloth, handsomely lined, are among the most effective garments worn. Some of the capes are so light that even in this warm weather the girls inside them must be healthy and warm-blooded not to feel chilled with their thin gowns.

***

One pretty girl in a pink cloth gown of a warm salmon shade the other night had the bodice trimmed with handsome lace, and wore in her hair a bow of pink velvet the color of the gown, with a cluster of cherries. A woman in black and sequins wore a serpent in black and steel twisted around the top of her head, the head of the serpent raised and supporting an aigrette.

***

***

Oh wad the powers of the giftie gie some people to see themselves at others see them. This one person in particular was a singer, a handsome woman as many singers are, and also a large woman, but she did not know how to dress her large figure in the proper way. The gown she wore was one cut high in the neck and of some delicate color which was all right as far as it went if it had only been plain, but it wasn't. Evidently the first thing the woman had said in having her frock made was, How shall I have the bodice trimmed? Then she went to work to have some coquettish effects, and she was not the woman for them. From under the arms just above the bust were two ribbons tying in the centre. They were tied snugly, and had the effect of tieing the woman into her gown as if without them there might be danger when she sang of her bursting from it. Then, as if this effect was not strong enough, the ribbon had been accentuated by black lace on either edge, and similar ribbon edged in the same way were around the waist accentuating the fact that it was not a small waist. Without the ribbons people might have said: "What a fine figure!" As it was they said: "How fat she is!"

***

Another gown showed the effect of the matching habit. That is a bad habit if it is not well controlled. This woman had on a gown with a fancy yoke and a white vest in the front. That was all right, but there must have been a bit of the white vest left and the matching fever struck the woman. She evidently thought to herself how very nice it would be to have a little vest—or whatever she called it—in the back to match the front. So she went gayly to work, and in the back below the yoke set in a long V-shaped piece about an inch wide at the top and running to a point at the waist. It was effective, certainly, set in the dark cloth, but it looked exactly as if the woman had gained a few pounds and let out her gown and tacked it down at the opening to her underwaist.

***

There seems to be no reason for it, exactly, for it is a useful member of society, but the garter does not occupy a very honorable position in sartorial affairs, notwithstanding its practical value and the fact that it was the foundation of a great order in England. However, just at this season of the year it comes prominently to the fore and it is astonishing what a quantity of pretty affairs of ribbon and lace are sold at $5 a pair. They come in all colors and shades—ribbons fulled over the elastic and edged with lace or chiffon puffs with bows of ribbon and lace, or rosettes of narrow baby velvet ribbon. There is so much to these fluffy little affairs that it would seem that they would be too large to be worn under the tight-fitting gowns, but evidently not, for there are hosts of them worn. Many of them will go as Christmas presents. They are pretty and dainty and they do not make pretensions as a gift, and so they are very acceptable. Sometimes they are sold in different shades to match the ribbons, to be worn in underwear, but that is more often with trousseaus.

***

The chemise is coming to the fore more and more as a pretty and useful garment. It forms the corset cover and skirt together, and made of fine material it has almost no substance, and does not add to the size of the wearer. There is not much change in underwear from year to year. There are no falling ruffles now to wear under the severe style of dress, and ruffles on skirts are tucked quite as often as ruffled, which makes them flatter, with a little flare at the edge. The chemise is fitted trimly at the back. The soft finished nainsook which is put into the French hand-made underwear is not to be found in this country, and it is so soft and fine that it is almost like a cobwebby silk. The little bowknots are to be found in the embroidery and fleur de lis.

***

Matinées are charming, and they come in all styles. Those that are long at the back and scallop up shorter in front usually have a watteau. A pretty little matinée, which blouses back and front and has a short basque below the waist, is made of insertions of ribbons of a delicate shade and lace the same width. The broad collar is something of the sailor effect. Shorter and simpler matinées, which have more of a negligée effect, are of soft India silk, with full sleeves gathered into a band, and the front forming two ends which tie once simply. With the long matinées are worn the white petticoats with flounces of fine lace insertion and an under flounce of silk. This buttons on to the body of the skirt under the white flounce, and can be removed when the skirt goes to the laundry, and there can be a number of ruffles of different colors to be worn with one skirt.

***

Some of the handsomest French skirts have wide-shaped ruffles, wider in the back than in the front, and lace insertion set in lengthwise at short intervals. In black on a frosted yellow silk skirt this is effective. A red skirt with many narrow ruffles edged with black lace is also effective, but not as attractive. A skirt of a shade a little warmer than ashes of roses is trimmed with narrow ruffles reaching to about the height of a wide ruffle and shaded from the color of the skirt into a decided brown, but so gradually that with the sheen of the silk it seems to be more an effect of light and shadow than real shades of color.

***

The handsomest silk stockings have in place of the openwork in the silk fine pieces of lace set in and appliqued on at the edges. These are to be worn with some of the many pretty designs in slippers, the greater number of which have small beaded bows of the material, the beads in silver, gold, bronze, or, prettiest of all, black.

OLD COINS FOUND IN ROME

CARDINAL PAROCCHI RESIGNS

Foreign Correspondence NEW YORK TIMES.

ROME, Nov. 20.—Still another discovery in the Roman Forum, and this time of a numismatic nature. For the past few weeks Signor Boni, the director of the excavations in the Forum, has been paying especial attention to the study of the ancient systems of drainage of the Forum. On Friday last the workmen were engaged in opening up a Neronian cloaca of the first century, which passes under the houses of the Vestals and enters the ground near the base of the Palatine Hill. After having dug away a part of the earth and ancient refuse with which the cloaca was filled, some of the men turned up two or three pieces of gold with their spades. The overseers and directors were at once called to the spot, and every one set about carefully digging and sifting the earth. For quite a time almost every shovelful of earth brought to light one or more gold coins, and then the yield of riches suddenly ceased.

Guido Baccelli, Minister of Public Instruction, and the Commendator Bernabei arrived upon the scene soon after, and the entire earth for a distance of several yards along the drain was resifted. In all, 379 pieces of gold were found in a short while, all belonging to the Byzantine Empire, between the fourth and fifth centuries. Three hundred and seven of these coins belong to the reign of the Emperor Antemius, and it is supposed that the money was thrown into the cloaca for some unknown, but evidently pressing, reasons during this Emperor's reign, during which time the Palatine was occupied by a Prefect and no longer by an Emperor.

Most of the remaining pieces are of Leo, (the Isaurian,) Marcianus, Flavius, Julius, Constans I., son of Constantine the Great; Severus, Valentinian, and Euphemia, Galla Marciana.)

All these pieces, many of them of great value, were recognized upon the spot.

The large number of coins of Antemius will certainly lower the commercial value of the coins of this Emperor at present in the numismatic market. The reverses of these pieces have as yet to be carefully examined, and it is hoped that some so far unedited ones may be found.

The gold used for these coins is of the finest quality, and they are of a good weight. With the fresh discoveries of almost every day in the Forum during the past few months expectations run high here concerning the excavations which are shortly to be pushed forward on a larger scale, according to the recent motions of the Government, and there seems litle doubt of their being attended by some very surprising results in the near future.

The huge new statue of Saint Pierre Fourier, one of the two latest saints of the Catholic Church, whose canonization took place on May 27, 1897, has arrived in Rome from Carrara, where the work was executed, and was placed in position to-day. The statue is the work of the French artist Noël of Paris, and was executed at Carrara by the sculptor Bering Nicoli, the cost of execution alone being $10,000. The work is sixteen feet in height, and weighs over eighteen tons. It is placed in one of the niches of the second row in the central nave, almost directly opposite the famous bronze figure of Saint Peter, and is almost three and a half times as large as the latter figure. The new statue was conveyed from the railway station to the church in a wagon drawn by no less than eighteen heavy horses, and was lifted into its position by means of five strong iron derricks. The work was superintended by Cavaliere Donnini and the engineer Scarpellini, under whose direction were 140 experienced workmen.

The progress of the operations was watched with much interest by the spectators, and recalled, in a measure, the great engineering labors of a past age in the great cathedral.

The recent reports as to the rumored resignation of Cardinal Lucido Maria Parocchi from his post of Cardinal Vicar of the Vatican, have been confirmed. Cardinal Parocchi has given as his reasons for taking this step an impaired state of health and need of rest. Pope Leo has accepted his resignation, and it is most probable that Cardinal Jacobini will take his place.

For years past Parocchi has been considered, on account of his position as well as for other reasons, one of the most influential prelates at the papal court, and his sudden resignation has been a matter of varied comment in this city.

His probable successor, Jacobini, is to all appearances a wisely chosen substitute, and is one of the most energetic members of the Sacred College. He has become one of the foremost figures in the ranks of the Church of late years through his zeal in the organization and management of the various Catholic societies, which have done so much toward educating and assisting the poorer classes of Italy, and which have become one of the most potent factors in raising the prestige of the papal power in this country. The vast number of members enrolled in these societies has given them an ever-increasing power in the political affairs of modern Italy, and to them the Vatican has found its strongest means of combatting the pronounced anti-clerical tendencies of the modern Italian Government. The Government is quite aware of this steadily growing moral power in the politics of Italy at the present day, and although exerting its strongest influence on more than one occasion during the past few years, has found itself unable to contend with this new force. A good proof of this fact was the action of the Government toward these great societies last year, at the time of the great popular outbreaks and riots at Milan and in various other parts of the peninsula. The Government at that time of course laid grave charges of co-operation with the rioters at the doors of the various Catholic societies, and issued various injunctions and decrees commanding their immediate suppression and disorganization. These same Governmental authorities, however, very soon recognized that they had misjudged the number of their adversaries, as well as the great moral power which they already possessed throughout all Italy, and their tactics immediately changed from those of brute force into ones of a very different and conciliatory nature; the edicts of suppression were promptly canceled and removed, and Cardinal Jacobini and his brother officers gained one more moral triumph over their irritated but not unwise antagonists.

Domenico Maria Jacobini is sixty-two years of age, and is counted as one of the candidates for the papal throne should Pope Leo pass away during the next few years, as is probable. Jacobini has raised himself from a humble family by his great energy and talents, to the important place he now occupies, and his career as a scholar and a statesman has been by no means lacking in brilliancy. Broad-minded in his views and possessed of a pleasing personality, he is one of the most popular of the Roman Cardinals, and his appointment to fill the position left vacant by Cardinal Parocchi has been well received by all here.

The statistics relating to this year's exposition of modern art at Venice have given results even surpassing the hopes of the Directors, results which prove that this newly instituted art exhibit has every reason to be considered as one of the most important international displays in Europe.

Up to Nov. 12, from the opening of the exposition in May, 407,330 visitors entered the buildings on single tickets, while as many as 24,219 purchased season passes. Of 743 paintings and sculptures on view, 240 were sold during the time above mentioned, or 26 per cent. of the whole number. The value of these works sold exceeds that of 1895, but falls considerably below that of 1897.

The date of the next exposition has been fixed for April, 1901. In the interim the buildings will undergo some necessary changes and enlargements, owing to the lack of room and overcrowding during the past season, and the great number of contributors expected for 1901. F. M. P.

VIENNA WINTER FASHIONS.

Box Pleat and Yoke Skirts Are in the Lead—Lace Is Used to Trim Outer Garments.

Foreign Correspondence NEW YORK TIMES.

VIENNA, Nov. 21.—The mild Autumn weather has been so prolonged here that although in deference to the calendar we write of Winter toilets, they have in fact scarcely been called into requisition. Though these charming Autumns are very welcome to the general public, to the business houses they prove a misfortune, as no one will invest in expensive furs or elaborate fur-trimmed outdoor garments merely for ornament. In consequence the heavy astrakhan, Persian, and sealskin capes have had but a poor sale. On the other hand, fur boleros, spencers, and wide, many-tailed boas worn with the tailor-made costumes have been very much in evidence.

Some of the boleros are very dainty articles, composed of Persian or sealskin, with sable or chinchilla revers, and frequently lined with ermine, and this mixture of furs in the small jackets is very successful. A few long ermine boas are worn, but as a rule the darker skins, such as skunk, marten, or sable, are preferred, the rich tails being more effective than those of the ermine. These boas form a handsome finish to the Winter toilets. The expense of real fur causes many cheap and ludicrous imitations to be made; some of the many thousands exposed for sale being so undisguisedly rabbit and hare skins that it is a wonder they find any purchasers.

The skating toilets of cloth or velvet are extensively trimmed with real fur. They now take an important place, as new and admirably arranged places have been inclosed in Vienna for this popular amusement. The sheets of ice are of great size, and the shelter and refreshment rooms are very suitable in every way.

The Winter costumes are cut in redingote, princess, or pinafore shapes, the double skirt taking the lead. There is an evident attempt to enlarge the narrow, pocketless skirt this season; hip pleats are employed, stitched down above, and opening out below; box pleats are placed at the back, and though the process is gradual, there is no doubt that next Spring will see much wider skirts in wear than those which have been worn this year.

The skirts set in yoke pieces have a good effect, especially when they end in serpentine volants. Much embroidery in satin and cloth is used for day toilets as well as for outdoor jackets. Handsome stitched satin bands of a paler shade are sold with dress materials; they have several straight or waved lines of stitching in silk. These bands form a foot trimming, or simulate tunic or redingote.

The greatest attention is now, of course, bestowed upon the preparation of ball and evening robes, many of them being exceedingly graceful. Generally they are made with embroidered tunics in gauze, tulle, or lace over silk foundations. The overskirt is elaborately embroidered in a tinsel, jet, or pailletted design, and the tunic, which is cut in endless forms, is then finished with a deep fringe. The sleeves in full or elbow length are transparent, piped, ribbed, or tucked, while the tulle bodice is plain and draped across to the side.

Among the many tunic models may be mentioned a princess tunic of fraise satin deeply scalloped at the décolletage, and edged throughout with a deep fringe of network border, above which a floral application design in muslin followed the border. The underskirt in fluted fraise muslin was placed over a silk foundation in the same color.

Another charming princess tunic was composed of yellowish Irish lace, had a deep point in front, and through the openings of the lace narrow black velvet ribbon was run, and it ended in a rosette. A tunic of reddish lace over a white silk slip with a deep silk slip volant was likewise very effective.

Fringes, embroidered designs, and network in chenille and jet are among the favorite trimmings for evening toilets; narrow rouleaux of fur sometimes follow the design in coarse lace of guipure.

Some of the blouse bodices for evening wear are admirable. A model in peach satin, which fastened behind, was partly covered with a bolero of white tulle embroidered in colored silks. A large bow of velvet was placed upon the bust; the narrow belt was a peach satin.

Another, of pale lilac silk, was hooked at the left shoulder and side seams, being finished with a braided border. Thick pipings of the silk crossed the yoke and the upper part of the sleeves; the cravat and belt were of a darker shade of velvet. A third bodice, of ochre silk muslin, was made with diagonal tucks alternating with wide insertions of lace; it was fastened at the side with velvet straps.

Some beautiful tea gowns are being made up, the material employed being cashmere in white and zinc, figured foulards with cerise, capucine, mastic, and ochre grounds; old pink velorites and foulards with white and pale grounds strewn here and there with brilliant sprays of flowers or berries. Deep lace or velvet collars or very deep yokes are made with them. Usually the bodice is overhanging, or at least pouched. A velvet waist belt or a deeply fringed sash forms a pretty finish. Where no collar is seen a sort of half bolero, deeply fringed, fastens at the side.

Lace, which is now so fashionable a trimming, is even employed for long outdoor velvet and cloth mantles, placed in insertion form between the bands of fur. The long paletots and capes have not yet become general here. Those long paletots which are worn are generally made of livery-drab cloth, in sack form, adorned with two rows of enormous flat pearl buttons. The shorter jackets in half length, with half loose fronts, are much worn in Vienna, allowing, as they do, so much elaborate trimming and application, which far better suits the taste of the Viennese than anything so decidedly plain as a long sack paletot merely stitched at the sides and pockets.

The Winter gayeties have as yet scarcely commenced, but dancing and probably a gay carnival will follow the New Year, when the musical and theatrical life of Vienna begin in earnest. For the sake of the dainty skating costumes, it is to be hoped that we shall have more ice this Winter than we had last.

HIGH SCHOOL TEACHERS' PAY.

It Is Not Affected by the Fight Over the Salary Question.

The 130 teachers employed in the three High Schools of Manhattan and the Bronx Boroughs have not been affected by the fight over the salary question. They have all received their full pay for October, and will also get their November salaries without dispute.

There are only half a dozen of them who come within the provisions of the Ahearn law. They benefit under the clause which says that each teacher who has taught for fifteen years shall receive no less than $1,200. Some of these half-dozen teachers are now receiving only $900 and the others $1,000. They have not yet received any of the increase in pay made mandatory by the Ahearn law. This is due to the fact that the Board of Superintendents for Manhattan and the Bronx have not yet taken up the question of advancing these teachers' salaries to the figure enforced by the Ahearn law. They are not obliged to do this on any set date, as the Ahearn law, while saying that the salaries shall be mandatory, does not, so it is claimed, name the time when they shall be paid.

The understanding of the board is that they will be complying with the provisions of the law if they make the increases at any time before the end of the year.

CROWDED TROLLEY CAR DANGER.

"A lot of people are going to be injured in one of these overcrowded trolley cars some fine day," said a Brooklyn Rapid Transit conductor yesterday. "It's only pure luck that has prevented so far the kind of accident I mean. These Winter cars are built in New Hampshire. The windows are large and showy, but they're not the sort the company ought to use or the authorities ought to allow. They are fixed firmly in the sides of the car and can be neither raised nor lowered. Each is one solid piece of thick glass.

"Now, supposing a woman faints on one of these cars during the rush hours, when it is carrying eighty or ninety passengers, although its seating capacity is but forty or less. Or supposing the electricity sets the car afire, something which is apt to ocur at any time. What's going to be the result? Why, a panic, of course. Well, how are the frightened men, women, and children going to get out of the car? They won't be able to get out through the windows except by smashing the thick glass and running the risk of being badly cut by the jagged edges. Their only ways of exit will be by the front and rear doors. If they go out by the front door, they'll find the gates up on both sides of the platform. If they go out by the rear door, they'll soon block the narrow space.

"I tell you, if a panic takes place, there will be a lot of people knocked down and trodden upon. I'm no prophet of evil, but I never have one of these packed-to-suffocation cars going at a lively clip, but I think of this thing happening."

A HARLEM RIVER MENAGERIE.

Pigeon roosts, flower gardens, and even kennels and rabbit hutches, on the roofs of the towering buildings about town are now so common as to fail to be matters of novelty to those familiar with the queer phases of city life. But there is one small animal farm that has attracted the attention of hundreds during this Summer and Fall. It is almost impossible for the observant person to cross the Central Bridge over the Harlem River without his attention being called to what is probably the most strangely located breeding farm in the city limits. Frequently from a score to a hundred men, women, and children stand against the west rail of the swing-bridge apparently peering into the river below.

It is not the river itself that attracts attention, however, but the unusual use to which the ice-breaker pointing up stream from the stone pivot-piece is put. Part of this structure which rises a few feet above the high-water mark is filled with earth and stone, and there is located the smithy where repair work for the bridge is done. But the greater part of the centre of this breaker is not filled, and so there appears to be a pond there, with a narrow walk of stone and earth extending on both sides from the filled in portion close to the base of the pier nearly to the V-shaped end pointing up stream. This peculiar spot the bridge keeper has appropriated as a hatchery and exercise ground for his domestic pets—ducks and lop-eared rabbits.

There is a hutch for the latter, about which loam has been spread and seed sown until there is a very respectable bit of turf for them to run about on. Here, too, there is always a supply of cabbage leaves or other edible green stuff for the half dozen rabbits to nibble at.

About the improvised pond in the middle of this ice-breaker or pier-fender a wire fence has been strung and leading to the pond from the bit of turf is a runway. Here at most any hour of the day a dozen ducks may be seen swimming in the pool, airing themselves in the runway or grubbing about for food on the turf. A few chickens, a cat, and a dog which seems to be thoroughly at home with the rest of the happy family completes the domestic menagerie of the bridge-keeper.

A Real Estate Curiosity.

There is at least one owner of real estate on Amsterdam Avenue who is anxious to sell. The plot is up near Washington Bridge, and seventeen signs posted on various parts of the lot announce the names of as many different agents who are ready to dispose of the property. The largest of three signs is a huge board affair, rising about a dozen feet from the ground, and at least 4 feet in height by 6 in width above the sturdy legs that support it. On this are nailed the announcements of four other brokers that have the property on their books. Three of the brokers have offices on or near Lower Broadway, two are located on the upper west side, and the balance are on or above One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street. "If you want to buy and don't care to deal with any of the people whose signboards are here," said one agent who was inspecting the signboards, "you can call on most any broker in town. The owner has an idea it's worth Broadway prices, and so it's likely to remain on the agents' books for some years to come unless he changes his mind."

LAND FOR A BRONX PARK.

The Board of Improvements of the Borough of the Bronx will give a hearing at the Municipal Building, One Hundred and Seventy-seventh Street and Third Avenue, on Thursday in regard to a public park in connection with an approach to the Willis Avenue bridge from the Southern Boulevard. plans as proposed by Chief Engineer Louis A. Risse call for condemnation by the city of a plot about 200 feet square, in addition to what is absolutely necessary for the approach. At last week's meeting of the Board of Public Improvements attempt to assess owners of property in the vicinity for the expense of securing the necessary land was made and successfully insisted upon by Borough President [illegible].

The result of the discussion in the Board of Public Improvements was that the matter be referred to the local board. Work on the new Willis Avenue bridge is being pushed with all possible speed, and it is expected that it will be opened to the public about six months. The caisson work is completed, and of the twenty-one piers and piers are finished except three, which are on the Harlem side of the river. About men are at work on these piers, and it is expected that they will be completed the coming week. The approach to the bridge leading from Willis Avenue is all ready for paving, and on the First the approach on the south side of the river only a few days to complete. Everything will be ready for the ironworkers by the end of the week.

The contract for the bridge was originally in the hands of Leonard Foley & Co. of Philadelphia, who failed about a year ago, and the contract for finishing the work was given to John C. Rodgers. The Edgemoor Bridge company of Wilmington, Del., furnishes the ironwork.

THE SECRETARY OF WAR.

The first reflection which the report of the Secretary of War is calculated to induce in reflective minds is, how good it is, in troublous and difficult times, to have a Man at the head of an important public service. This is the difference between Secretary ROOT and his predecessor. Mr. ALGER, poor man, had made, for all we know, as many or more dollars than his successor. If he had made more, he was entitled, by our rough and ready methods of estimating the "worth" of a man, to be considered, by so much, a "bigger man" than Mr. ROOT. And yet suppose that Mr. ALGER had managed to hold out to this time, in defiance of public clamor, a clamor which he does not even yet, it is likely, fully understand. What importance could any reasoning citizen attach to such recommendations as he might be moved to make in his annual report? There would be not only the intellectual impossibility that he should be able to make any that would be of benefit or enlightenment to the country. There would also be the high improbability that he would give the country the benefit of his intelligence, such as it was, the high probability that every one of his suggestions would be made in pursuance of some "job" that he was "putting up." The sad fact is that a politician's mind becomes "subdued to what it works in," and that neither he nor anybody connected with him gets the benefit of what intelligence he really has.

"A priori," a man like Gen. ALGER, assuming him to be in the possession of what faculties he had, was a more likely man to reorganize and "derate" a bureau like the War Department than a man like Mr. ROOT. Because Gen. ALGER had been an administrator, a "business man," during the interval between his hasty resignation from the volunteer forces during the civil war and his curious reappearance at the head of the War Department. Mr. ROOT, on the other hand, had been practicing law, engaged in litigated business, trying, in the words of the Miltonic attack on the profession, "to make the worse appear the better reason." Apparently this was not the best preparation, or a good preparation, for such a place as the Secretaryship of War in trying times. But it was a real intellectual gymnastic and discipline. Whoever thinks that Gen. ALGER'S preparation had been better has only to consult the record of the department under each of its successive chiefs. Or he may be even more readily enlightened by taking the opinions of the working officers of the army upon the respective merits of these two heads of the department.

Perhaps the superior success of Secretary ROOT thus far may be accounted for by the fact that he is not a politician, or at least that his success as such has not sufficed to destroy his native and professional integrity. The chief trouble, as we have intimated, about the unlamented ALGER was that he had been in politics long enough not to dare to say that his soul was his own, if it appeared that there was a "vote" to the effect that it was not; at all events long enough not to have a mind of his own. When he got to the head of the department everything was for the best in the best of all possible armies, even EAGAN.

It is because there is none whatever of this element of politics in the report of the Secretary of War that it is so unusually well worth attention. There are in it topics that invite comment, and upon which we hope to comment in future. Mr. ROOT'S is the most vigorous and trained mind which has, within our recollection, been exercised upon the anomalous and dangerous position which the army of the United States occupies. His suggestions for relieving the situation are worthy of consideration because they have been so well considered. But what is most obvious about his report is that there are no "politics" in it; that we do really get the actual and honest thinking of a strong and alert intelligence upon the military problems of the United States.

THE MANHATTAN'S CHANGE OF MOTIVE POWER.

Three results may be confidently looked for from the change from steam to electricity as the motive power of the elevated railroads. The first, and the one in which the public is chiefly interested, will be increased carrying capacity, conducing to the comfort and convenience of the passengers. The second is a material reduction in operating expenses. The third, which is a corollary to the second, is an increase in dividends. An increase in traffic, that is, in the number of passengers carried, may be expected as a fourth consequence of the change; but that depends upon other conditions—upon improvements in the service, in the station and train accommodations, upon increased speed, and other wise changes which the company may make as incidents of its advance from steam to electric traction.

The Manhattan Company's gross earnings have materially fallen off since 1893, but its operating expenses have been but very slightly reduced. This fact is rightly construed to mean that while the roads have lost a considerable part of their short-haul passenger traffic to the surface roads, they have been compelled to maintain substantially the same service for the less profitable long-haul traffic. It is very evident that the managers of the company must look to the operating expense account for the changes which will restore the earning power of their lines.

It has been demonstrated that electricity is the cheapest motive power. By its introduction the operating expenses of street railway companies have here and there been reduced from the usual 60 per cent. to as low as 40 per cent., and in many cases to less than 50 per cent. Probably the Manhattan Company will be able to show a considerable reduction from 56 per cent., its present proportion of operating expenses. The actual increase in business done will depend, as we have said, upon the general policy of the management, chiefly upon its success in regaining the patronage of the passenger who is willing to pay five cents for a ride from the City Hall to Fourteenth Street.

PUBLIC SCHOOLS NOT COMMON SCHOOLS.

It is the general opinion of those best informed that the public schools, especially in the larger cities, are gradually being abandoned by the children of those who can afford to send their children to private schools. It is not easy to fix the extent of this change, but that it is going on will not seriously be denied.

In many ways it is an extremely undesirable thing. The public school in the past has been very largely a school of common citizenship. It has been the one place where the children of parents of widely different circumstances and of various national origin absorbed into the very fibre of their minds that idea of equality of opportunity and of mutual rights and duties that underlies the political and social fabric of the United States. In the classroom and on the playground the consciousness of the children has been trained in this idea until the experiences of after-life must be inevitably shaped by it. And the training thus acquired in the most sensitive and at the same time the most active period of the formation of habit and character has been of quite as great worth as the mere knowledge imparted by teachers and books. In the greatest crisis of our country's history—the civil war—it was the confident expectation of the secession leaders that the North would be torn with dissension arising from differences in social station and from the large foreign immigration. Of the fervent and steadfast union that disappointed this expectation the common schools of the North furnished in a very great degree the cement.

The tendency of the more well-to-do classes to withhold their children from the public schools is due, of course, to many causes, some of them complex. But we think that it may safely be said that the chief and most effectual of these is the fact that the public schools, and especially those for the younger children, are not, relatively to the private schools, as good as they were thirty years ago. In what are called the "upper" grades, and particularly in the high schools, the difference is not so marked, and the advantages offered to the great body of pupils in these schools are frequently as great as can be obtained in most of the private schools. But the high schools, and even the upper grades of the public schools, for children over the age of thirteen, have two striking defects. One is that they reach only a small proportion of the children of the community, and the other is that they do not and cannot reach at all the vast majority of those whose need of schooling is the greatest. Thus it comes about that the very class on whom the influence of the common school is the most active and is most required, do not get it, while many who do not especially require it and who could for the most part be readily educated at the expense of their parents, get the greatest advantages. That is a very unintelligent arrangement and outrageously unjust.

The remedy is as clear as the evil. It is to make the public schools for the younger children so good that the great body of parents will not wish and cannot afford to keep their children away from them. This is by no means an extravagant proposition. Every large community already spends liberally on its schools, and would gladly spend more if more was to be got from them. Very much could be done by a wiser distribution of the money already available, putting less into the upper and more into the so-called lower schools, which are of infinitely more importance. Our present system starves the young and gorges the older. The children who most need the very best instruction, who are most capable of taking it and of making the best use of it, and who cannot possibly get it at all unless in the public school under the age of thirteen, receive the poorest instruction, under the poorest paid and least competent teachers, in circumstances the least favorable to successful teaching, while a very large fraction of these children can find no room in the schools. A grosser or more cruel wrong and a more stupid blunder never was committed in a country founded on the principle of equality before the law.

Is it any wonder that parents who can afford to pay for something better will not send their children to crowded classrooms, to be shut in under the weary and inefficient care and guidance of overworked, underpaid, and undertrained young women, whose utmost capacity is insufficient to the thorough teaching of a class of a score, and who are compelled to take charge of classes of two and three score? Doubtless there is a feeling of foolish contempt in the minds of many parents and their children as to the public schools, but it is rooted in some degree in the fact that the primary schools are too often unworthy of the respect of intelligent people. If they were made the very best that skill and money could provide, if the standard of work in them were as high, the pay for it as ample, the classes as small, and the conditions as helpful in all ways as in the higher schools and the private schools, there would be a gradual and extended change in the attendance of the children of the well-to-do. And this is not asking any more than is demanded by the simplest justice to the class who can send their children nowhere else.

THE LOOKS OF THE NEW BRIDGES.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

It seems to me that your architectural editor, in his praiseworthy attempt to arouse public opinion to the necessity of better aesthetic qualities in the new bridges proposed to be built by the City of New York, has cast a very unjust slur upon the body of civil engineers of which I am a member, and for whom I ask to be heard.

He says "the professional standing of an American engineer is no guarantee at all that the things he builds will not be loathsome to the view. It is not unfair to describe him as a professional Goth and Vandal."

Then he goes on to say that the European engineer is by no means so much of a vandal. "Such engineering structures as the Mirabeau or Alexander III. Bridge, in Paris, are representatives of the artistic as well as of the scientific attainments of the municipality."

He fails to see or to point out that the conditions there are entirely different.

The bridges across the Seine and other rivers passing through European cities are not limited as to headway, and are not required to have movable spans of considerable width for the passing of masted vessels such as our bridges here are required to provide.

I would defy LEONARDO DA VINCI himself, if he were alive, to make a beautiful architectural object of a bridge half of whose length is taken up by a movable draw span, all of which is required to be above the roadway, such as is found in most of our Harlem River bridges.

Where the conditions allow of sufficient height for vessels to pass without a draw some degree of architectural elegance can be given, as in the case of the Washington Bridge and the stone-arched High Bridge over the Harlem and the Girard Avenue Bridge at Philadelphia.

It is very unfair to condemn engineers for not performing impossibilities.

It may be said that the new bridges proposed over the East River have no such restrictions. This is perfectly true, and if it is allowable to point out a special design, I wish to say that Mr. LINDENTHAL'S design for a suspension bridge over the Harlem River is not only good engineering as either the Brooklyn Bridge or the new East River Bridge, but far surpasses either of them in architectural beauty. If repeated even on a smaller scale over the East River, it would, in my judgment, be the finest piece of architectural engineering ever yet built. I would suggest that you republish this design, so that it may speak for itself.

There is another kind of structure which has a special beauty, but being generally in obscure places, cannot be seen. I refer to the great steel viaducts crossing deep cañons. They have the beauty of utility, just as a sailing vessel, whose form and proportions have been molded into shape by the winds and waves, has in a high degree.

THOMAS C. CLARKE,
Past President American Society of Civil Engineers.
New York, Dec. 1, 1899.

It is with pleasure that we make room for Mr. CLARKE'S communication, perhaps with the more pleasure because he does not seem to us to meet the point of our strictures. When we wrote, we did not know who were the authors of the designs for the new bridges. We have since been informed that they were prepared in the office of the Commissioner of Bridges and by his regular engineering staff. Moreover, it is said by those who ought to know, that the plans approved by the Board of Public Improvements, and forwarded to the War Department for the approval which is required by statute, are not finished plans, but what the architects call "sketch plans." Very likely the plans were drawn with the exclusive view of meeting the requirements of the department, and they may not really represent what the Department of Bridges proposes.

The point we made was simply that all the people of New York had an interest in the appearance of the new bridges and that they had no guarantee whatever that it would not be such as to deface the river and the city. This proposition Mr. CLARKE does not traverse, as we understand his letter. We said that the professional standing of an engineer does not depend in the least upon the appearance of the works he designs, and that these may be monstrosities without his suffering professionally in the least. Therefore we said that the name of an eminent engineer, who was eminent simply as an engineer, affixed to a set of plans for a new bridge, was no safeguard of the public against the chance that the execution of the plans might deface the city. We do not understand Mr. CLARKE to deny that, either. And if the name of an engineer of unquestioned professional eminence can be no guarantee against an unnecessarily ugly structure, still less can the assurance that the engineers employed by the Department of Bridges, whose very names are unknown to the general public, are the designers, constitute such a guarantee. Hence it is all the more necessary that some authority should be invoked which will be respected. There is such an authority—the Art Commission, which is expressly empowered, "when requested," to pass upon the designs for bridges. The omission to invoke their advice in a matter which is of high public and municipal importance and in which the members of the Board of Public Improvements are not and do not pretend to be experts, would be, we said, and we still say, a mark of barbarism. We do not believe that Mr. CLARKE, as a civilized man, in spite of being an eminent engineer, would differ from us on this point.

What we suppose does, to use a vulgar expression, "stick in his crop," is our "obiter dictum" that American engineers are, as a class, less regardful of appearances than European engineers. But that this is the fact we fear there can be no doubt. In some European countries engineers have an architectural training superadded to their technical training as a matter of course. And in no European country, we believe, not even in England, would it be possible to erect such important and conspicuous structures as the new bridges are to be without taking more safeguards than we have taken that they shall not be eyesores. We have the pleasure of concurring entirely with Mr. CLARKE in his high appreciation of the artistic merit of the design for the North River Bridge. But the comparison which he invites between the bridges across the Harlem and the bridges across the Seine, even the modern and engineering bridges, is one which not only our bridges cannot sustain, but which enforces our point. There are bridges across the Harlem in which the condition of a "draw span" has been recognized by the designer as a complication of the artistic problem of the design, and met with more or less success. There are others in which the fact that the problem of design is in any degree an artistic problem has been entirely ignored by the designer. And the designer who has taken the artistic problem into account and the designer who has ignored it may be equally, from a strictly professional point of view, "eminent engineers." Q. E. D. In Europe, on the other hand, the consideration of the artistic aspects of his problem would be forced upon the designer of a bridge as much as upon the designer of a public building. The difference denotes a defect of civilization on our side, we admit, on the part of the public in general, but also on the part of the engineering profession in particular.

THE WAY WE SPEAK ENGLISH.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Your issue of Sunday quoted from an address of Prof. Chubb in which he spoke of a lessened ability among our people in speaking their own language. It is not at all improbable that he is correct in his views. The causes are plain to be seen—floods of new books, shoals of magazines and newspapers, the influx of foreigners, and the hurry of modern life. To speak English one needs to think and to feel in that language. Those multitudes from whom the American of the future is to spring have not been with us long enough to make our land and our traditions their own, nor have they staid long enough to bring their own past into our hearts and speech. The Italian, the Russian Jew, and the Slav are not ready for Shakespeare and Milton, the Book of Common Prayer, and the English Bible. And it seems a pity, indeed, that, while they cannot share the good things of our tongue, they do not give us, what is best in their own. Perhaps, though, our soil is not suited to the European growths.

But after all, home is the place where one learns his speech. If his examples there are the best, his mother tongue will be at once his useful tool and his elegant accomplishment. I think parents err in not reading with their children more. When they do so, too often the subject is but the news of the day, in words and phrases which today are and to-morrow are not full of slang and trivialities. A busy man whom I knew read several plays of Shakespeare with his son in childhood, and the memory of those hours and the influence of the noble dramas remained through the boy's life.

A few good works, woven into the thoughts and associations of childhood, will do more than a course of formal teaching in making one love what is beautiful. The principle holds true, as I fancy, in other fields besides language-teaching, but it is important enough there. It has often seemed to me that the best things in any literature are found so readily that there is little need to go hunting after them. Unfortunately, too many of us begin at the wrong end; we forget how much better it is to seek at the fountains, and instead of reading what the greatest men have written we go to the sand-bars of "books about books," and confine ourselves to criticism and gossip. Taste and appreciation must have better nourishment than this.

From teachers in the schools one need not hope to hear good English. Chained down as they are to their dreary routine, burdened with twice as many pupils (at the least) as they ought to instruct, they can struggle along, and make us wonder how they do it; but they can do no more. And our clergy, from whom we have a right to expect pure, plain English—what stuff do they give us! A review published in Hartford took up this matter not long ago, and treated us to a list of mispronunciations most common and most unpardonable.

So, to sum up, it seems to me that the English of our children is to be what parents and public speakers shall make it. Home influence and the unconscious effect produced by hearing good language well spoken will do more than books studied and courses of lectures on literature. And "the game is worth the candle."

OUR COAST DEFENSES.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In your issue of the 5th inst. there appeared an interesting article from the able pen of my friend Capt. Zalinski, late of the United States artillery. I have the greatest admiration for his genius and energy, but cannot avoid the feeling that he rides his hobby horse too hard when he blames his Government for not carrying into effect the wild recommendations of the Endicott board of fourteen years ago, entailing on the United States people an expenditure of over £23,000,000 for stationary defenses on the coast line.

The defense of the dockyards is, of course, an absolute necessity for any nation aspiring to greatness by means of sea power, but for such a nation to spend money on coast defense, except in the protection of its naval arsenals, rather than spend the same amount in fighting ships and sailors is indeed a shortsighted policy.

Moreover, America, being so far removed by simple distance from Europe, is peculiarly invulnerable to any coast attack, except by a more powerful naval power. It is therefore evident that the safety of her coasts is best assured by a powerful fleet than by any quantity of harbor and coast defenses.

At the commencement of the recent Spanish war the "uneasiness and even fright felt by the inhabitants of the United States sea coasts" was a curious psychological fact for which there was very little foundation, but which certainly influenced the dispositions of the fleet and the movements of the transports.

Capt. Zalinski thinks that the existence of the fortifications recommended by the Endicott board would have prevented any such panicky feeling, and would have given the fleet more freedom of action. As to the former, I would ask whether in time of war the inhabitants of Brighton or Bournemouth (which are entirely open to the sea and unprotected) would not be in a safer position than those who reside in Dover or Sheerness?

The very fact of a place being fortified sanctions an enemy to bombard it; the very fact of a town being unfortified prevents a civilized power from bombarding, if international agreements and humane feelings are followed in a war. Even a selfish motive—viz., the fear of reprisals—would be a most potent factor in preventing any such "hitting below the belt."

Again, the bombardment of coast towns is probably a "game not worth the candle," the damage so caused being usually of less value than the cost of the ammunition expended.

From every point of view it would therefore appear that the best defense of a coast line is a covering fleet—i. e., a fleet strategically placed so that an enemy cannot attack the coast except by pin pricks, which only exasperate, without inflicting any real hurt.

But the fleet itself must have naval arsenals and building sheds and repairing shops, and these should be situated ten or twelve miles from the open sea, and the waterway thereto be well defended by forts, guns, and mines.

Land defenses are unnecessary in America, (except perhaps across Long Island to cover New York,) because no hostile power is likely to be in a position to land forces which could not be immensely outnumbered on the mainland.

From her geographical position America is strategically like a huge island, and has nothing to fear on land, save civil war or rebellion. The whole of her war funds should therefore be concentrated upon her fleet, and on a small but well-organized army, for foreign service in her new colonies, with its depots and recruiting centres at home. To spend huge sums on coast defenses in America would be wasteful and detrimental to the services actually required.

DEWEY AND THE ARCH.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The consistency of the Citizens' Committee is very much like that of our immaculate police force, which permits a criminal to slip through its fingers and then justifies the act by trying to place the responsibility elsewhere.

Now, it is well known that this committee was organized to "perpetuate the Dewey arch," in fact, this is the nom de plume under which the committee presented itself to the public. Nevertheless, a few days ago (Tuesday last) the officers of this committee came out in a loud proclamation denying that the arch was to be known as the Dewey arch. Moreover, it stated that it was never intended that the arch should be known as such, and that they had been trying to eliminate his name from it and have it known as the Naval Arch.

Here was a plain attempt to degrade America's greatest and latest hero and place him in the common ranks of naval officers. In other words, Dewey has been used as a tail to wag a few gentlemen into public favor, that their names may be perpetuated along with those of the great naval heroes of the country, dead or alive, and furthermore, that they may be known to posterity as the greatest promoters of American patriotism of the nineteenth century, and that only a year and thirty days to run.

These gentlemen are very much in the position of the "goose and the golden egg." They have destroyed the foundation on which they had built their castles, and now the public and Dewey's friends have no longer any use for them. Like Othello, their occupation is gone.

"Ambition should be made of sterner stuff."

"Alas, poor Yorick!" Au revoir!

IRISH SOLDIERS' WIDOWS' AND ORPHANS' FUND.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Will you kindly allow me to appeal through your columns to the Irish readers of your paper, on behalf of the special fund which has been inaugurated by my husband, Sir John Arnott, in The Irish Times, and which is now being distributed by Lord Roberts and a committee for the widows and orphans of the men of the Irish regiments who have fallen nobly in South Africa, in defense of our common empire.

Every loyal Irish heart must beat with national pride at the valor displayed by the soldiers from the Emerald Isle in the Transvaal campaign, and I am sure many Irish, scattered over America will gladly send help to their fellow-countrywomen and the orphans in this their hour of need. Dire poverty and destitution are now suddenly facing broken-hearted women and helpless children.

I am certain I shall not appeal to generous Irish hearts in vain. There is not a town of American families with Irish connections. From them in an especial degree I would ask for sympathy and support. They who give quickly give twice. Every sum however small will help this national tribute.

Any contributions sent to me at 68 Merrion Square, Dublin, will be at once acknowledged, and the amount forwarded without delay to The Irish Times, in which Journal the names and subscriptions are fully announced daily.

CAN PLANT TREES NOW.

To those of our citizens, and especially property owners who have deferred action in the matter of tree planting on our city streets, it may be said that planting may still be done under favorable conditions, as young trees can now be handled and shipped from the nurseries, &c., in even greater safety than in the early part of the season. To all such, full information on the subject may be obtained promptly and without charge on application in person, or by letter, to the Secretary of the Tree Planting Association, Potter Building, New York.

Several hundred trees have already been planted this Fall, and marked success has attended the work of last Spring as well as that of the preceding seasons, which goes to show that tree planting in our city streets is not without its reward. Indeed, there is every encouragement to plant trees, based upon our recent experience, and the result has been almost uniformly satisfactory, not only in the pleasing effect which the tree affords, but as well, in the marked distinction given to property thus so simply improved.

It is gratifying to note, too, as the result of the general approval of this civic work by the newspapers, that a widespread interest in tree planting is continually manifested; inquiries are received daily for information not only from our own citizens, but from various parts of the State and country as well, by which we learn of the formation of local societies, the main object of which is to improve their roads and streets by tree planting. Trees, too, are being better cared for, and it is gratifying to note that tradesmen are more careful with their horses and vehicles in the vicinity of trees since satisfactory remuneration has been secured for damages to trees, and guards by investigations instituted by this association. The effect of the intelligent care of trees at the proper season may have been noted by all observant persons on those which adorn our small parks.

The trees in Madison, Union, and other squares and inclosures were a positive delight during the Summer, and their full and characteristic foliage and the grateful shade afforded by it gave pleasure and comfort to thousands of our own people and the numerous visitors to our attractive city. The planting of a tree will fully repay any one for the trouble and cost incurred, both of which are trifling compared with the advantages to result when the work is carefully done. Trees may be successfully planted for several weeks, probably to the middle of next month.

HOUSEHOLDERS SHOULD PLANT.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The Tree Planting Association of New York City, which was only incorporated two years ago, has already accomplished a great deal. The task it has set for itself is so large and so praiseworthy that it should have the encouragement of every citizen of New York City. The writer of this well remembers when there were trees on Broadway and Fifth Avenue, and the side streets, in quite respectable number, but there seems in the last twenty-five years to have come up a passion for the destruction of these trees, so that until this association began its work it looked as if New York was to be permanently deprived of the advantages of trees in the streets. It is only necessary to speak of these to convince the reader that their beautiful appearance in the long and hot Summer is of itself a comfort to the eye, as well as a shade to the pedestrian, and that in many ways, flourishing trees are of the greatest account in preserving the health of the community.

New York people are very busy and very much hurried, but I write this to induce the householders who have not already done so to see to it at the proper time that a tree of trees are planted in front of their doors. The association, whose offices are at 64 and 66 White Street, the Secretary's office, Potter Building, will do everything in their power to make this a very easy task.

ALEXANDER HAMILTON'S TREES.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The mythical Hamilton trees seem to have come to the fore again. The question of their genus being settled, as belonging to the gum species, it would indeed be gratifying if their planting could be as easily disposed of. The story of their having been planted by the great Alexander Hamilton's own hands is reiterated, and his worthy grandson, Gen. Alexander Hamilton, is cited as a witness, by hearsay, of course, to the support of the agreeable fiction referred to above. For one, I have believed that the internal evidence, so to speak, is hostile to the alleged act of the great statesman. We are told that the saplings from which the group sprang were brought by him in his gig from Mount Vernon, for the purpose of being planted on the grange in commemoration of the thirteen States or Colonies which formed our Union. But why he should have selected a species which already flourished in the vicinity of the grange is, to say the least, surprising. The sweet gum tree was native to the upper part of this island, and is also native to the outskirts of Brooklyn, and can be found in New Jersey. It is a prolific species, being found in great numbers near a parent tree. Until recently there were many very large and fine specimens of this tree to be found within a few hundred feet of the so-called Hamilton trees. Some grow yet south of One Hundred and Forty-first Street.

These thirteen trees are, in the manner of their situation, witnesses in themselves of a planting by a person of immature understanding, and are evidently not the arrangement of a splendid and well-ordered intellect of the first quality, as the great statesman's mind was. The thirteen trees are crowded closely together in a small space, and most of them have died from the very fact that they were thus deprived of light, air, and soil nourishment. Moreover, they vary greatly in size, some being about two feet in diameter and some are not half so thick. The crowding of them together may account for this difference in size. But the same variance suggests the idea that some of the trees were growing there naturally, as self-sown, and that others were introduced by human agency to make up the number thirteen.

There are now standing several horse-chestnut trees which may have been planted by the statesman between where the house stood and the Bloomingdale Road. In this space there was ample room for the setting out of the thirteen trees in such a way as to have insured them sufficient light and air without crowding them together, so as to make it apparent that they would live and grow, it being evident to ordinary discernment that close planting would render certain the result which has at last overtaken the group of trees in question, and that is their premature decay.

It is asserted by believers of the myth that the planting in the present form was done because the statesman did not have time to set them out at once, but postponed that work until he would have the necessary leisure. But in such a matter it seems that he would have given directions to a gardener or workman to plant them in a place and in an order that was easily a matter of quick and easy decision.

It could scarcely be supposed that he, at the very zenith of his career, busy with affairs of great moment, would attend to more than directing the work of planting. Fifty feet from these trees is a noble hickory tree, about five feet in diameter, but no one seems to have been impressed by it. It is a splendid specimen, having had what the thirteen trees lacked, to wit, necessary space to grow in.

THE HOUSE FINANCIAL BILL.

From The Chicago Tribune (Rep.)

Should this bill pass substantially in its present form the "endless chain" will be broken, for legal tenders redeemed in gold cannot be paid out for current expenses and then be used to draw out more gold. The establishment by law of a redemption fund which can be used for no other purpose will prevent any such drafts on that fund as were avenue deficits. The specific authority given the Secretary of the Treasury to sell bonds to maintain the reserve will put end to doubts as to his authority to do so under existing laws. The requirement that legal tenders shall be redeemed in gold coin will make it impossible for a free silver Secretary of the Treasury, should there ever be one, to redeem them in silver dollars.

There will be tedious debates in the Senate over a bill containing these salutary provisions. The free silverites in that body will make their displeasure at great length. But the result is a gold standard majority in the Senate, and the Republican Party will be inexcusably derelict if it fails to pass at the coming session of Congress a measure which shall remove all possible doubts as to the maintenance of the gold standard—the standard of the civilized world, and of the United States for the last sixty years.

THE PATH OF SAFETY.

From The Richmond (Va.) Times.

No reasonable man will say that The Times is unfriendly to the Democratic Party because it tells that party the truth. It is not Democracy that business men are afraid of, for true Democracy so far from being a menace to the country, is a great conservator of our institutions. It is that which holds Republicans in check and guarantees popular government. But Bryanism and free silver and Populism are a terror to business men.

If in the year 1900 the Democratic Party should through its representatives in the National Convention that it did not propose to return the financial system of the country that it did not propose to repudiate the monometallism; that it did not propose to do anything which would disturb the country's prosperity if the party should adopt any one of its old-time platforms, business men would make themselves easy and free, and from a business standpoint it would make little difference to them which National party prevailed. But when Mr. Bryan goes through the country telling the people that if Democratic Party shall be successful in 1900 and if he shall be elected to the Presidency the party will open the mints of the country to free silver and carry into effect all the Populistic and revolutionary measures of the Chicago platform, any indication of Mr. Bryan's election upon such a platform as this were scarcely less than a call for a convention to business. Mr. Bryan asks the people to swap the genuine and assured prosperity which they have for his visionary experiment, and the whole business world would tremble if there were any sign that the people were going to do this thing. With a Democratic Party the path of duty is the path of safety. If the party will only plant itself squarely upon an old-time Democratic platform, forswear Populism, and turn its back upon Populists, it will at once regain the confidence which it has lost.

Importance of Manila to Our Commerce.

Written for THE NEW YORK TIMES
By JOHN BARRETT,
Late United States Minister to Siam.

THERE is no port in the Far East more centrally situated for commercial exchange than Manila, and no individual country better situated for the carrying on of foreign trade exchange up and down the transpacific coast line. The more one studies the map and conditions of trade, the more is he convinced of the truth of these statements. It requires, however, personal study and travel in the Far East fully to understand the strategic and commercial importance of these islands and their capital.

Under the old Spanish régime the world never realized the value of the islands in this respect. They were almost overlooked and forgotten in the tide of the world's progress. Even at Hongkong, the nearest point to Manila, there was a strange mystery about the Philippines. Merchants who had lived in this prosperous outpost of the British Empire for twenty-five years could tell you nothing about Manila. The firms which had branches in that city knew nothing of it beyond the mere information contained in strict business letters. Men who went there from Europe or from other Asiatic points seemed to pass into a distant world, all by itself, and people almost forgot them. The influence of Spain was to keep the rest of the world from appreciating what a valuable prize she really had. She was jealous of the possibilities of material development becoming generally known. Other nations, not expecting any conflict with Spain, gave little heed to the real strategic value of the islands. Hongkong, Singapore, and Shanghai, seemingly secure in their prosperous commercial development, never dreamed of Manila as a rival.

Admiral Dewey's victory and American occupation of the islands have taught the whole world a lesson in geography. The merchants and the shippers of the Far East see in Manila now a great, enterprising American distributing centre in the Orient, and all nations are appreciating the commanding position of that city and of the islands. They wonder now that they had never come into this realization before.

In order fully to appreciate the location of the Philippines it is necessary to study the conformation of the entire transpacific coast, connected or broken, from Australia and Tasmania on the south, to Japan and Eastern Siberia on the north. In no place is this coast line broken by sufficient distance to make any part of it seem isolated. It is but a step from Japan to the Continent, and again only a step from the Continent on the south to Java or the Philippines, and then by a series of islands to Australia. When we survey this extent forming the western boundary of the Pacific, we find that Manila has the advantage of location over any other port from Vladivostok on the north to Melbourne on the south.

To describe Manila's situation in such terms as to make its importance come home to everybody, let us draw a circle of about 1,500 miles, with Manila as the centre, and we find that it takes in Yokohama on the north, and Port Brisbane, in Australia, on the south, and all the ports of importance on the continental coast line of Asia, with the exception of a few on the far north. If we extend the radius another 500 miles we will get Vladivostok on the north and Sydney on the south. Stated in another way, it could be said that no other circle of 1,500 miles drawn with any other important city in the Far East as a centre would take in so many places as Manila.

Hongkong is possibly to-day the most important and most prosperous point of commercial exchange in the Far East. It is a magnificent monument of English enterprise, and has been an immeasurable influence for the development of her trade with Asia's millions. Hongkong and Singapore have paid for themselves and what they have cost the British Empire a thousand times over by the trade they have built up. Hongkong is only 630 miles from Manila. While it has one great advantage of being the gateway to the Sekiang River system of China and its vast population, it has no other special advantage over Manila, while the latter, of course, will always have the great advantage of being the central point of the Philippine Islands in their material progress and their growth of population. Hongkong has an annual foreign trade of about $250,000,000, and it is increasing every year. It is where the exports of the countries of Europe and of America are brought, and then are distributed. With the growing commerce of the Far East and Australasia, there is no reason why Manila should not compete with Hongkong as an important distributing point. I would not suggest that it will take the place of Hongkong, or that it will ever surpass it, but there is just as much reason and room for the development of a great trade centre at Manila as there has been at Singapore and Shanghai, also competitors of Hongkong, and just as much as in our country Philadelphia and Boston and Chicago compete, in a way, for the trade of certain portions of the United States and of the Atlantic.

What Manila has done in the past is little measure of what it will do in the future, and yet, considering what it has done under Spanish rule, the conclusion that can be drawn as to what it will do under American administration is most favorable. If the imports and exports there amounted to $30,000,000 under Spanish jurisdiction, they will surely grow to $100,000,000 or $150,000,000 under enterprising American control. Reasoning, moreover, comparatively with what the British have done at Singapore and other outposts of empire and of commerce, and with what the Dutch have done at Batavia, which, with Singapore, is another neighbor of Manila, we cannot possibly deny that the trade of the islands through Manila should pass the $200,000,000 mark within the next two decades.

Considering still more specifically the commercial and strategical importance of Manila, we can fix it in our minds by another reference to the geographical lines which connect it with other places. If a right angled triangle were drawn in the South China Sea, with Singapore, Manila, and Hongkong as its three points, we have an interesting illustration of the relation of these three ports with reference to what is before Manila. Let the base of the triangle be from Singapore to Manila, the altitude from Manila to Hongkong, and the hypothenuse from Singapore to Hongkong direct, and we find that the distance around by Manila, or along the base and the altitude, is only about 400 miles more than the route along the hypothenuse. At the present time, the great fleet of ocean steamers that come and go through the South China Sea do not stop at Manila, but they are all planning to do so in the near future, because they find that with not more than two more days required, they can stop at a most important point and pick up or deliver considerable cargo and look after a growing passenger traffic. The principal British, German, and French lines running from Europe to the Far East are considering the advisability of making Manila one of their principal stopping points, like Singapore, Saigon, and Hongkong. If they do not do this at once, they will at least put on connecting steamers.

Formerly, moreover, the increasing fleet of vessels plying between Hongkong, China, and Japan on the north, and Australia on the south, passed directly by Manila or the Philippines. Now most of them make Manila a regular port of call, or are making arrangements to do so.

Eventually we will see, moreover, the developing commercial squadron that is plying between our Pacific Coast and the Far East making Manila its terminus instead of Hongkong, and from Manila there will be regular lines of coast vessels running south and southwest to Australia, Java, Straits Settlements, and Siam, or north and northwest to China, Russian Asia, and Japan. As one illustration of the importance of Manila's location, we can bear in mind that it is only about 1,200 miles from Bangkok, the rich and growing capital of the prosperous Kingdom of Siam, where there is a very wide field of commercial development awaiting the manufacturers and exporters of America, and yet so far hardly touched or appreciated by them. In this connection it might further be mentioned that, while heretofore we have been gaining in strength in Japan, Korea, and Northern China, we have been practically at a standstill in Southern Asia. The occupation and holding of the Philippines will give us a vantage ground of incalculable importance in controlling the growing trade of these southern states and dependencies.

The strategic value of the Philippines also appears to him who studies their location upon the map of Asia and the Pacific. The great highway of commerce in the Orient passes through the South China Sea right past the whole western shore line of the Philippines. Manila is even in a better location than Hongkong or Singapore to control this from a naval standpoint. Were any European nation to hold the Philippines, it would be master of the politics and the commerce of Asia. With our new responsibilities we may occupy that position, and yet without danger of war to ourselves, if we keep out of European entanglements which do not concern us. We are concerned in the future of Asia, because our greatest undeveloped markets are there. China may some day be the outlet for our surplus products when there will be danger of overproduction at home. Moreover, from Manila, or Subig Bay, which is one of the best harbors in the world, as a naval base close to coal in unlimited quantities, our warships can reach any important point in the Far East within six days' steaming, and the greater number of them within four and a half days' steaming. We will possess there a coaling station, which we must have in the sharp competition that is now going on apace for the control of the trade of the world. It will save us from being obliged to take a port in China, and thus at once weaken our claims to the "open door" which we are now pushing with so much force.

Beginning with the Hawaiian Islands, and continuing with Guam and the Philippines, we are now in a position to have our legitimate say in the commerce and politics of the entire Pacific. When we build the Nicaraguan Canal, lay the Pacific cable, fully establish peace and order in the Philippines, and take a position that shall preserve the integrity of the Empire of China, we will have accomplished that which should make us not only the paramount power of the Pacific, but of all the world.

Russia and Japan.

Written for THE NEW YORK TIMES by Sydney Brooks.

Whenever a war is on rumors of other wars are sure to follow. The conflict in South Africa has already produced a goodly crop of surmises as to foreign intervention, European coalitions, Russian designs on the Persian Gulf, French preparations for avenging Fashoda, and so on. None of these gossipy prophecies are likely to turn out correct. The Transvaal war is proving a rather more difficult undertaking than England expected, but it hardly touches the mainspring of England's strength. So long as the British Navy remains unengaged and in full fighting trim, rival powers cannot help regarding it as a deterrent just as lively and persuasive as it was before the war broke out.

There is, however, one sinister rumor which need not be discredited just because war is in the air, and that is the rumor of a Russo-Japanese conflict. Many of the best judges of Far Eastern politics have pronounced such a conflict inevitable. The Spectator, a cautious and usually accurate journal, discusses it as one of the things that cannot be avoided, and thinks it may come to pass sooner than most Englishmen expect. In other quarters it is even said that Japan will take the offensive before next Spring. Cablegrams from Korea report the landing of several thousand Japanese soldiers "disguised as coolies." This sounds a little fanciful; but it does seem to be a fact that the Chinese are leaving Korea in large numbers to escape the hostilities they believe to be impending. It is also true that Japan is quietly putting her forces in good shape and hurrying along with all possible dispatch the new battleships now nearly finished in English yards.

If Japan has really made up her mind to have it out with Russia, there are reasons in plenty why she should prefer it to be sooner rather than later. It is true that three or four years are still needed to complete her vast naval and military programmes, but, even as things now are, Japan is more than a match for Russia or any other power in the Pacific at sea. Her army has never yet been tested against white troops. Its precise value is therefore mere guesswork. The same, however, may be said of the composite and undisciplined forces now under the command of Russian officers in Manchuria. The Japanese Army, whatever its merit in the field, is a large, well-drilled, and well-organized force, and its nearness to the scene of hostilities would give it a great initial advantage. Japan could land 200,000 men in Korea within a month, and, at a pinch, probably half as many again. Until the Siberian Railroad is completed Russia would find the difficulties of transporting an adequate force to Korea well-nigh insuperable. Japan, of course, knows this perfectly well and relies upon it. Two other reasons prompt immediate action: The first is the stringent condition of Russian finances; the second is the known unwillingness of France to do anything to mar the coming exposition.

It is as certain as anything can be that the destinies of the two nations must bring them at some time or other into violent opposition. Japan is the England of the Far East, with that confident, invigorating sense of future national greatness which England has outgrown. Like England, she is confined to a few islands; like England, her swarming industrial population has to be fed from the outside; like England, she is destined to be a great maritime and a great manufacturing country; like England, expansion will become for her an economic necessity. Within sight of her seacoast lie the Chinese Empire and the Independent Kingdom of Korea. The foreign policy of Japan runs, therefore, along two clearly marked channels. She must preserve an open door in China as the largest and most obvious market for her industries and she must maintain the independence of Korea. Korea is important not only because she supplies Japan with food and buys Japanese manufactures in return, but because her geographical position provides an unequaled jumping-off ground from which a hostile power could spring at Japan's throat. Korea has been in the past under the suzerainty of both China and Japan. The war of 1894 was brought on by Japan to free her from Chinese control and make her an independent nation. To preserve that independence Japan will fight to the last.

There are reasons why Russia should be hated and distrusted in Tokio. It was Russia that robbed Japan of the fruits of her Chinese victories and expelled her summarily from the Liao-Tung Peninsula. It is Russia that has now virtually absorbed the northern provinces of China, and will assuredly close the ports to all but her own traders the moment she feels able to do so. It is Russia, too, whose onward march through Asia spells the doom of Korean independence. To Russia the annexation of Korea is simply the next and most logical step in imperial progress. To Japan it is the forerunner of her own extinction.

There are one or two ominous facts bearing on the situation still to be remembered. Russia has collected a suspiciously large army in Manchuria without any obvious need, and is gradually massing it on the Korean borders. Moreover, for the past five years she has made strenuous efforts to gain political ascendency at Seoul by organizing the Korean Army and superintending Korean finances. On the other side there is the very suggestive fact that China and Japan have come together after the late war, and are now apparently working in unison as though in the presence of some common danger.

SYDNEY BROOKS.

Favorable Outlook for Builders.

Written for THE NEW YORK TIMES
By GEORGE HILL,
Member of the American Society of Civil Engineers.

IN THE general song of "prosperity," perhaps the only discordant note, certainly the loudest, is that sounded by the master builders of the country, who know that the cost of material is higher and that proposed work is suspended. Few of them are satisfied with the amount of work they have in hand, the price at which it has been obtained, or the way in which it must be prosecuted owing to delay in delivery of material, and so they complain of dull times.

That there is truth in each one of these causes of complaint is not to be denied, but that there is a general suspension or anything approaching a paralysis is disputed. The condition may be more correctly designated, at least so far as New York City is concerned, as mainly one of uncertainty as to the conditions by which investments in real property must be judged to determine probable revenue in the immediate future, which will pass away soon. To consider the conditions of affairs in New York City will be practically equivalent to considering the conditions generally throughout the country, since some or all of the principles which are operative here are operative elsewhere, and it is therefore proposed to treat specifically of this city.

It is desirable at the start to call attention to the fundamental fact that building operations of to-day are almost entirely dependent on the judgment of the man with money to invest in large amounts. Almost every building except the one erected for the owner's use as a dwelling owes its erection to the energy of some man who sees a demand or an opportunity and suggests the erection, following one of two general courses:

(a) In investment building the lot is purchased and the building erected with the owner's capital; builders' profits, architects' fees, interest insurance, taxes, and actual cost of land and building combining to make up the total cost of the investment. When the building is completed a mortgage is placed on the property for as large an amount as possible, limited only by the desire to keep within a certain predetermined rate of interest, or the amount the loaning company will allow at legal rates, in either case the judgment of the loaning company or individual as to the earning capacity of the investment being influential in determining the amount. Unless the investment builder, from the start, can feel assured of a loan of a minimum amount, the investment will not be made.

(b) In speculative building the builder pledges his credit and a small amount of money in order to induce some moneyed man to purchase the property, either in the name of the builder or some third party, and to advance a sufficient amount of cash in installments, which is in the nature of a working capital, and which pays the actual net cash cost of the building, or a considerable percentage thereof, and permits the builder to so far complete the building as to enable other moneyed men to form a correct estimate of its earning capacity and make a permanent loan, which is generally sufficient in amount to cover the actual cash cost of the building when supplemented by the amount furnished by the speculative builder, leaving all profits from the transaction to be derived either from the income from the building or its sale. When the building is occupied and has been in operation a sufficient time, its true earning capacity becomes a measure of the price asked for it, and when a sale is consummated the property reaches the status of an investment building at about the same cost to the investor as under the first method.

The influence of the moneyed man in both operations is evident. The factors he considers are:

1. The total cost or price asked.

2. Net income, making due allowance for vacancies and contingencies.

The total cost of an investment building is known; in the speculative building, is assumed to be practically the same for the same kind of a building, so that the problem really is reduced to the question of the percentage to be obtained from the rental of the given building at market rates. If this percentage is more than will be obtained elsewhere and is likely to remain constant, building is lively. If less, building is slow.

The factors influencing the rate of return at present may be stated as follows:

1. Money is "tight"—that is, it commands a relatively high rate of interest when loaned on security other than mortgage. This condition is slowly passing away, and may soon disappear. While it lasts it acts as a check on building operations.

2. Rentals in office and commercial property are about the same as for some little time past, with a tendency to decrease slightly. Rentals for dwellings and apartments are about the same, with a tendency to increase slightly. The slow change is favorable to building, while the conditions mentioned under Headings 5 and 15 operate to justify both these conditions.

3. Land values are steadily increasing, slowly in some sections, rapidly in others. This change is favorable in so far as it stimulates development at present prices so as to keep the actual total cost lower than it may be in the future. Any future increase in the value of the improvement, being in the nature of an increased profit in the event of sale, is certain to follow so long as the increase in the value of the land is greater than the decrease in the cost of the building, which, for reasons to be later considered, is not probable in the immediate future.

4. The effect of consolidation on the assessed values of real property and the amount of tax thereon is still an unknown quantity. The tendency is to provide an amount certainly sufficient to cover this item, the net, in considering the investment, thus decreasing the probable income, which to a certain extent checks building.

5. The provision of rental area in New York is, generally speaking, fully up to the demand; to secure tenants therefore, concessions must usually be made which either decrease the income or increase the cost. This has a tendency to restrict building.

6. A certain percentage of tenants is always taken from old buildings, which, as they become unsuited for any purpose and consequently unremunerative, are replaced with new ones, thus slightly stimulating building.

7. Transportation facilities are inadequate at present. This tends to encourage building in sections where facilities are relatively good and restrict it in sections where it is relatively bad. With a definite knowledge concerning rapid transit, building would be stimulated in all sections served by it.

8. The cost of a given building is higher than for some little time past. This increase in cost is due to the increased cost of labor and material and to the greater luxury or increased conveniences of the space offered, one of the necessary consequences of the competition for tenants.

Let us consider the increased cost more fully as follows:

9. Steel has increased about 100 per cent. in actual cost when delivered in place in the building within a reasonable time after the order has been placed—that is, it is about as high as it was in 1892. The amount of steel in the building depends on the character of the building. In dwellings it amounts to practically nothing in tenements, to from 6 to 10 per cent. of the cost of the building; in fire-proof apartments from 8 to 12 per cent.; in office buildings from 8 to 15 per cent.; in commercial buildings from 10 to 15 per cent. Inasmuch as the cost of the building is from one to two times the cost of the lot, it will be seen that in no case the cost of steel is likely to exceed 7½ per cent. of the total investment, and varies from that down to as little as 3 per cent., if used at all. Now if steel had gradually increased in price there is but little question that the increase would have had but little retarding effect. The sudden increase in price, added to the suddenly increasing difficulties of obtaining it, have been alarming. If there were any immediate probability of a decrease in price the influence of the change in price would certainly be to check building until a decrease occurred. But our new possessions will probably prove very large consumers. There is an increased demand for steel products in many industries other than buildings, consuming from 45 to 50 per cent. of the total output of the smaller mills, and probably 75 per cent. of the output of all of them. There is also a large probable demand to be expected from Africa, so that present facilities will be taxed to the utmost and cannot be materially increased for some time to come. Under such circumstances there is no probability of stocks accumulating; and so no probability of a decrease in price unless brought about by some sudden panic due to a radical change in many conditions. While, therefore, the increase in price would in itself tend to check building, the small probability of any decrease in the near future should counteract this tendency. On the other hand, the new building law, in its recognition of present engineering practice, permits a pound of steel to go further, and when full advantage is taken of the law's possibilities, it will be found that the actual cost of steel in a structure, while more than in recent years, is offset by other savings due to the use of steel, the net result being a relatively small increase over the cost in 1896, 1897, and 1898. Regarding the delays incident to the delivery of steel and the consequent increase of cost due thereto, it need only be said that they can be minimized to the vanishing point by proper foresight on the part of the builder and the proper adjustment of sizes required to sizes to be had on the part of the designing engineer.

10. The increased cost of brickwork and masonry is but little greater than that occurring annually, due to various causes, such as a late Spring, much bad weather, strikes, and combinations, all of which have to be provided for by the contractor in making estimates, and which may therefore be neglected.

11. The increased cost of timber is probably a natural one, due to increased difficulty in putting it on the market. If it is true that it is a natural increase, then it is unreasonable to expect any decrease in the price in the future, and consequently buildings should be erected now rather than later on, when the price may be still higher.

12. The increased cost of articles in which copper is a large or costly factor makes an appreciable increase in the cost of building, and it is probable that a decrease may be expected in the future which may influence the cost of an operation by 1 per cent. as a maximum.

13. The increased cost of crockery or sanitary ware is probably due in large part to the combination of the manufacturers. The price will probably be regulated by the demand, which at present is such that only a small decrease may be expected for some time to come. As it is, the cost is less than in 1892, and no probable decrease could have a probably greater influence than 1 per cent. on the cost of an operation.

14. The increased cost of labor and the uncertainty due to strikes is of more importance in some other cities than in New York. It may add as much as 2 per cent. to the total cost of an operation, against which must be offset the continually increasing use of labor-saving machinery and improvements therein, which increases the output of the given machines, and the production of a constantly greater number of articles which can be set in the building at a less labor cost than formerly, with a net result about offsetting the increased cost of labor.

15. The extension and consolidation of the various corporations supplying heat, light, and power in various convenient forms at a constantly reducing rate decrease the cost of operating the properties, and so increase the net income, and also decrease the total cost by making it less desirable to install isolated plants in buildings.

16. The uncertainty in regard to the provisions of the new Building Code during the Summer operated to suspend new enterprises for a time, which suspension continued during the period occupied by studying the code. Now that it may be said to be fairly understood, non-fire-proof apartment houses are found to possess advantages when erected under the old code, while fire-proof buildings will possess an advantage when erected under the new one. The tendency therefore should be to stimulate proposed operations for non-fire-proof work until Dec. 23 and suspend operation for fire-proof work until after Dec. 23. The general effect of the law, however, should be to stimulate building, since, while it is very faulty, mainly through lack of proper provision for modification when necessary in order to bring it into line with good practice, it is a decided advance on the old code in its recognition of good practice, and, as a consequence, all materials will go further than formerly.

17. During the period from 1893 to 1898 the competition for contracts has been fierce and the estimated profits of the contractors have been abnormally low. With all other industries making money, contractors have endeavored to increase their percentage of profit, which, added to the cost of building, has resulted in a sudden increase of considerable amount in the cost of the larger operations. This increased cost may be considered to be a legitimate one which is likely to obtain until a panic occurs, and will be checked in its tendency by the operation of the natural laws of supply and demand.

To summarize, it seems as though the natural effect of the various causes above noted would be to maintain the cost of building operations at from 5 to 15 per cent. more than for the past few years, with a probable slow increase in cost in the future, so long as business continues at a temperate rate. If speculation is indulged in to any very large extent violent fluctuations may be expected. Finally it may be said that any investment that is carefully made, with a due regard to planning and execution, will prove decidedly remunerative at present rents, even if costs increase 5 per cent. above those of two years ago.

Animals as Rational Beings.

Charles Josiah Adams.

It seems that, in the case of the sentient being, there are several more or less distinct sorts of actions—the automatic; the instinctive; the emotional; the intelligent, and the rational. Automatic actions are those over which the individual has no control—no permanent control, I had probably better say. The action of the heart in governing the circulation of the blood, of the stomach in the process of digestion, of the diaphragm in the process of breathing—these are automatic actions. They are of the body, not of the spirit; of the person, not of the individual within the person. Everyone can hold his breath for a certain length of time. There is, now and then, a man who can hold his breath for a considerable length of time, but no man can hold his breath indefinitely. Let anything attract his attention while he is holding his breath; let him forget to hold his breath, and his breathing goes on as it does if nothing attracts his attention, and he does not forget to hold it, when his power to hold it ceases, as it is certain to do in the case of even the strongest-willed man who makes the attempt to hold his breath indefinitely. One can swing himself with a rope about his neck, and so deciding commit suicide, but no one can commit suicide by simply deciding to quit breathing.

An instinctive action is quite as thoroughly independent of the will of the one acting as the automatic action, if not more so. But an instinctive action is not an automatic action. Wind up a clock and it runs automatically till it runs down, till an accident comes to it, till some part of its machinery wears out, or till someone stops it. When the owner is turning the hands of the clock in setting it, then the clock does not run automatically. The man, the dog, the bird, or any other sentient creature is set to run so many years, and will run automatically that many years, barring accident, or the will to the contrary of the setter. For a length of time the sentient being is fully in the hands of the Maker—the Setter, as I have called him. This One cares for the man—for every sentient being—through instinct. The instinctive action is only proximately the action of the one acting. It is primarily the action of the One caring for the one acting. There comes a time when the man, the dog—any sentient being—is put in his own care, to an extent which is appreciable. There is hardly anyone who will deny this with regard to man. Biophilism claims that it is true with regard to other sentient beings as well as man.

When, at breakfast, I was turning over in my mind what I am saying in this letter, I had a pat illustration of the intelligence of the cat, Pixie, the rectory cat, is in the habit of opening doors. For some reason known only to herself she wanted to get into the china closet. The door of this closet reaches the floor of the dining-room. This door was not entirely shut, though nearly so. It touches the sill, and so does not open easily. Pixie laid hold of its edge with her right paw and pulled. It did not swing toward her. Then she laid hold of it with both paws and again pulled. Still it did not come. That she might pull the harder, she lay on her side and braced her hind feat as well as she could, digging her hind claws into the varnish of the floor. The door would not yield to her efforts. Then by look and mew, she appealed to her mistress. The mistress did not want her in the closet and said: "No, no, Pixie!" Then she appealed to me. I said: "No, no, my girl! Do you not know that when the authority decides against you or me the other dares not interefere?"

That Pixie understood this attempt at wit on my part I do not claim. But I do claim that she understood that the door was "too much" for her and that neither her mistress nor her fellow subordinates in the household would "lend her a hand" in opening it. When she saw that her desire to get into the closet was hopeless of fulfillment she turned away dejectedly and went and curled up on a fluffy shawl in a basket, which serves as her bed. I claim that in giving up the project which she had in mind, when she saw that she could not carry it to a successful issue, she acted as intelligently as does a commander when he recalls his forces from attack of a stronghold which he sees that they cannot carry.

And is there not the manifestation of more than intelligence in these actions of Pixie? Could she have applied one paw, then two paws, then thrown herself on her side and braced herself with her other two paws, to the opening of the door? Finding her own means unequal to the accomplishment of her purpose, could she have appealed, first to her mistress and then to me for aid to a definite end, without reasoning? That the lower animals reason I have stacks of evidence, which have grown greater and greater through twenty years of work in animal psychology, grown from my own observation and that of correspondents in all quarters of the world. Having formed the habit of psychological observation, there does not go by a day which does not give me some new evidence that the lower animal is, essentially, simply man; the difference between man and the lower animal lying in the plan, size and proportions, and not in the material used in construction. But now I must confine myself to the question of reason in the lower animal, and that I may remain within the space which may be at my command, take but one more illustration, and that from the life of Pixie, which is passing under my eyes. When she is allowed to remain in the main part of the rectory, she is apt to get someone up during the night to let her out of doors. When she is left out of doors, and the family retires, she is sure to come to somebody's window about dawn and demand with claws and voice that she be let in. As my bedroom is down stairs I am the one upon whom this demand is apt to be made. Taking these things into the account, it was determined, in family conclave, that Pixie must be shut, for the night, out of the main part of the rectory. The place chosen for her nightly incarceration was a wood and coal shed, to which a door leads from the kitchen. The latch of this door is worked by ordinary knobs. The first night of her imprisonment in this shed she mewed for a time; then she scratched at the door which kept her from the kitchen, dug her paws into it most viciously; then she scrambled up the door, and some wonderful things happened. The bar between the knobs rattled. Then the knob on the kitchen side of the door partially turned. What was happening to the knob on the shed side of the door? Pixie was trying to turn it. Under my lead the family slipped into the kitchen, and had audible evidence that what I have recorded is true in every particular. To be doubly sure, I, the next night, hid in a coal bin, and saw, by the light of a crescent moon, which light struggled through a high window in the shed, Pixie doing what she had been heard to do. In this action what had she in view? The turning of the knob, which turns the bolt, which withdraws the latch, which holds the door, which closes the passage between the shed and the kitchen. Since the third night of her imprisonment Pixie has not touched the knob nor made any fuss. Why? Because she is intelligent enough to know that any effort to get into the kitchen will not attain its end.

All that any human being can say is that his life and his destiny are, to an appreciable extent, in his own hands, and that he may attain some things and avoid others. He is, to some extent, intelligent and rational. Is not the same thing true with regard to Pixie and other beings in the orders of sentient life beneath man?

Municipal Reforms and Franchises.

Written for the THE NEW YORK TIMES
By BIRD S. COLER,
Controller of the City of New York.

MR. Washington Gladden, in his article on "Reform in City Government," published in THE TIMES of last Sunday, writes:

"One cannot refuse the meed of commendation and congratulation to this National Municipal League. It has maintained now for seven or eight years a most wholesome agitation of municipal questions; it has seen a great number of local organizations cherishing the same general purposes spring into existence in all parts of the country; it has witnessed the formation of a significant National council of municipal officers, whose meetings have been highly educational; it has noted a remarkable awakening of the public mind to the importance of municipal reform."

To some it may seem strange that one like the writer who has been a student of politics more from a practical than a theoretical standpoint should desire to add his small compliment to the work of the league. Yet this is true, for to his mind their aim seems to be constructive reform, not destructive agitation. It is not necessary that one should agree to all the items in their programme in order to approve the work of this association. Indeed, it is hard to imagine what line of reasoning could convince us that the Controller should be named by a Council (no matter how that Council was chosen) rather than elected by a vote of the people. The main desire, however, seems to be to recommend a plan upon which municipal government can be conducted with simplicity and publicity. Excessive red tape either leads to a species of rascality that is hard to detect and even more difficult to secure convictions for, or else to hold-ups and delays extremely expensive to the taxpayers. The public, as a body, will never take the time to study or understand an intricate form of government. Only those who have direct financial interests involved will do so, and hence become the masters of the city.

If a fraud is to be perpetrated the most effective way to halt it is by arousing a storm of public opinion. This can only be done by informing the people quickly, in a simple and direct manner, as to what has occurred in the past and what is threatened for the future. Intricate red tape prevents the fastening of individual responsibility, and in a large measure destroys the fear of public hostility.

Another reason, and a leading one, why the league is making progress is that they are attacking systems and not individuals. Reform movements in the past have ever had as their cry, "Turn the rascals out!" and let us good people get in. They have been effervescent and always will be so until the people are better educated about public affairs. When some great wrong has been done and every one is on fire and indignant, a man known for his honesty can be elected. A great wave of sentiment of this kind seems only to require honesty, and in their mad desire for a change the public overlook "competency." A great thinker once said that "government is better administered by a man of mediocre virtue accompanied with great sense than great sanctity furnished with little sense."

When a wave of reform has passed over, and a new election is at hand, people begin to make comparisons as to the net results to the community of reform and the old régime. Their investigation hardly goes further than the tax rates, schools, and streets, and more often they find in favor of the men of the greatest sense and least sanctity. The only result accomplished is to make "the ring" more careful in devising a more respectable way of doing the same old thing. The road to better conditions in public affairs is the same road to a better civilization and education. The Municipal League is helping to educate others, and in doing that they are educating themselves. Good and thinking citizen.

Mr. Gladden goes on to say:

"Simultaneously with this great popular awakening, and largely no doubt as a consequence of it, the most strenuous and daring attempts are being made by municipal lists throughout the country to strengthen their hold upon the privileges now in their hands. It is evident to them that what they do in this direction must be done quickly; that their franchises must be extended and confirmed now or never. The laws are generally loose; City Councils are generally as yet composed of material which can be utilized. In most States there appear to be no restrictions of stock watering, and the shrewd manipulators of these great interests, with an eye to the windward, are making desperate efforts to get new franchises long terms, and to market their stocks before the storm."

Of all city is this more true than the City of New York. The immense value of franchise already given away can hardly be estimated. Nevertheless there are some of us who believe that the franchises undeveloped and still in the hands of the city are yet most valuable. Our City Government in the past has been run, not to retain the rights of the city, but to find some apparently legitimate excuse for giving them away or selling them at a small figure or percentage. Our nearness to the Constitutional debt limit will be made the excuse for renewals attempts to divest the city of its inherent valuance. New York City owns property the value of which is many times its debt. A large part of the debt itself is self-sustaining. Owing to our wonderful location and tremendous business we are still enormously rich, and this in spite of expenses that would have financially destroyed almost any other city on earth. Consolidation has impaired our borrowing capacity, but there is a way which by careful and conservative management will help us to hold what we now own, and to increase the investments of the city along the same lines that have given us our great sinking funds. Water works have been the best mainstay, and a few months ago witnessed an attempt to turn that vast income into private channels. We have other rights hardly less valuable which will surely be given away unless the Constitution can be amended to let us credit some of our vast income-producing assets against the temporary debts necessary to develop and utilize them—credit them only to acquire additional assets of the same kind and to retain them as the property of this city. Can this be done safely without letting down the bars to all kinds of speculation on the part of the city? We think we can show that it can be done not only safely, but that in thirty years will serve to pay off all obligations and leave the income entirely for the reduction of taxation. Mr. Charles Stewart Smith intends to request the Chamber of Commerce to set a day apart when the most conservative bankers and merchants of our city can consider the question from all points of view. We are confident of what their investigation will show. All we ask of the public and press is that they will withhold criticism until the case is fully presented. Then study the evidence of both sides, if two sides there be; then act, and act quickly.

Some Suppositions.

The action of the Federated Women's Clubs of the State of New York, at their recent convention in Rochester, touching Brigham H. Roberts of Utah being allowed to retain his seat in Congress, has attracted wide attention and requires further notice and consideration. The true explanation of this action must surely be found not in any sympathy on the part of Miss Susan B. Anthony or of the Women's Clubs with Mormonism.

As to Miss Anthony's statement, incidentally, that "almost all men as a general thing violate the sanctity of the home," unless she has knowledge beyond what most women possess, of which she gave no evidence, she simply gives her individual opinion, which it may be a great weakness for her to entertain, and which may be offset by the individual opinion of millions of the best people of the land, both men and women, that her opinion is erroneous.

If Miss Anthony and the Women's Clubs had known that the resolution offered was not aimed at "one poor Mormon," but at Brigham H. Roberts as a representative of 300,000 people who follow abjectly the lead of their priesthood touching every matter, whether of politics or of their so-called religion; if they had known that in the view of these Mormons their so-called deity is only a man, Adam, who has risen to deity by marrying wives and begetting children, and that Christ is one of this Father Adam's polygamous progeny, and is Himself the husband of three wives, Mary, Martha, and Mary Magdalene, and that the marriage at Cana where Christ turned the water into wine was His own marriage to one of His numerous harem; had they known that this idea of polygamy is the fundamental principle of their organization, the very principle on which their whole theory of life here and hereafter is built, that even the salvation of woman is made to rest on it, and that by it even her resurrection is conditioned and placed in the power of her husband, so that if she does not obey him in consenting to his taking numerous wives, and in even asking women whom he may designate to become his wives, he may damn her by preventing her resurrection; had they known that this organization represents such a tyranny and degradation of woman that it is unparalleled in the history of the world; had they known that it has at this time from 1,700 to 2,000 missionaries making a house-to-house visitation throughout our land, and in almost every State and city, and that their methods are so delusive and deceptive as to deceive the very elect, that the real character of their teaching is always "veiled" until they have caught their victim and got him or her safely in their meshes, and that hundreds have been thus caught right here in this community during the past Summer, and that in 1897 63,000, mostly from our own land, were added to their number; had they known that lying and perjury are as natural for their leaders, and always have been, as their breath, and that they are so defended by their theory of present-day revelation that lies and perjuries, and even graver crimes, are believed to come with divine sanction and authority; had they known in proof of these statements that the Statehood of Utah was gained by these very means of lying and perjury, and that they now justify themselves in so doing by saying that the Government had no right to require them to abolish their adulterous and treasonable life; had Miss Anthony and the Women's Clubs known that such a monstrosity as this, which already politically controls Utah, Idaho, Wyoming, and Arizona, and holds the balance of power in other States, had elected to Congress said Brigham H. Roberts in this very issue of polygamy, that no opposition prevailed in Utah against Roberts during the campaign because he was known to be an avowed polygamist, embracing among these opponents no less a person than Mr. Wells, the Governor of the State, who took the stump against him on this ground, so that polygamy was the sole issue on which he was elected, and had they known that this was in pursuance of a purpose and threat made years ago by Brigham Young to "thrust polygamy down the throat of Congress," and that it was put forward at this time to test Congress and the Nation as to whether they would tolerate it; had they known that this most blasphemous and infamous institution the world ever saw, the very child of the devil and enemy of all righteousness, organized for the very purpose of legalizing and deifying and perpetuating a lust which had long been practiced by its leaders before the alleged revelation authorizing it was announced, having for its further purpose, besides lust, the gaining of political power and the securing of power over men so as to make all secure in a most compact organization, an organization thought to be the best perfect ever made, so that the head touches the button and his authority reaches to the utmost extremity of the organization almost immediately; had Miss Anthony and the Women's Clubs known that all this machinery is made to masquerade under the guise of religion, so as to hold men and women soul and body, that it is to pose as a friend of the Bible and as the depositor of the teachings of Jesus Christ, whereas it is an utter prostitution of every principle of Bible truth, and bears upon its every feature when unmasked the unmistakable evidence of being the deadly foe of all that Americans hold dear in human liberty—social, civil, and religious; had these Women's Clubs known all this, and that these 300,000 fanatical Mormons were watching the matter of Congress allowing Brigham H. Roberts to retain his seat, with all the interest possible, and that if he does retain his seat he will feel that this is the live of their providence confirming and covering their most ambitious designs, and not only in perpetuating their adulterous life, but in spreading it, together with the government it represents, over our entire land and over the world; had they known that their view the Mormon government is the only legitimate government in this land in the world, because all others are "man-made," while they claim theirs is divine, and that therein is the very nest of treason; and had they known that they have no more love for the United States Government to-day than they had twenty years ago, when one of their representatives, John B. Lee, for his complicity in the Mountain Meadow massacre was hanged by the neck till he was dead by the United States Government; and had they known that Brigham Young, the next man on the list after Lee tried, with thirty-two indictments for murder against him, in connection with that and other slaughters of human life, with which he was charged, mysteriously departed this life, as many believe at the hands of some of the Mormon leaders, who wished to shield their organization from the blot of having the head of their so-called church executed by the United States for murder; had these Women's Clubs known that this Mormon organization now holds the balance of power strong enough to be of great weight in National affairs, and that they soon hope to gain a larger balance of power by moving their colonies to exposed points in doubtful States so as to have an influence formidable enough to be a deciding factor in deciding Presidential elections; had they known all these facts, they surely would have considered it a most wise act in which they would have been glad to unite with their fellow-citizens of pure and patriotic purpose, in protesting against the representative of such an organization being allowed to retain his seat in the hall of our National Legislature, and that as a protest against this menace to our National well-being they would have most earnestly and courteously requested that an amendment to the Constitution be secured whereby to make polygamy a National crime and to disfranchise all persons practicing it, as well as to disqualify them for holding any office whether State or National.

THE FINANCIAL SITUATION

Wall Street begins to anticipate a happy Christmas. This has not been much the fashion in recent years, but business signs, business facts, are exceptionally cheering enough to warrant current confidence.

Even the approach of Congress is not disturbing this December—and that is record-breaking, indeed. Congressional programmes as at present forecast are wonderfully different from Congressional action ordinarily apprehended. So far as Wall Street has learned, not a single legislative disturbance is threatened. Currency legislation helpful to the country's business interests is counted upon, and there is confidence shown in assurances from Washington that even in the Senate there will not be hippodroming obstruction. Wall Street, moreover, really counts upon substantial progress being made in Secretary Gage's plan for refunding the National debt into a unified issue on an interest-bearing basis record making in the world's financial history. Optimistic this, perhaps, but just such statements reflect what is actually the Wall Street expectation, and the pleasurable hopefulness extends further, for even beyond the Stock Exchange district's limits the belief prevails that helpful legislation (helpful to profit-seekers) will be forthcoming on a variety of other subjects—subsidies for ocean transportation development and the legitimizing of railway pools, for example.

It may be that not one of Wall Street's anticipations will be realized—but this possibility cuts no figure just now, for Wall Street's humor at present is to be full of cheerfulness bent on helping along security market buoyancy. And during the coming week we are likely to have developments in variety to increase activity and advance quotations.

Prosperity signs brighten. Business activity extends. Profits according to all authorities are satisfactory. One factor in the situation not much spoken of is that extraordinary outputs of American manufactures are being sold to customers from whom collections are made more promptly than has hitherto ever ruled in trade circles.

Railway earnings keep on increasing in record-breaking ways. According to most conservative estimates, we were to have before the 1st of December marked abatement in traffic returns, but instead of any such disclosure are figures piling every week higher and higher. The Northern Pacific and Union Pacific systems, for example, issued their showings for October yesterday. Union Pacific gross earnings rose $270,000, and its net $91,000; while Northern Pacific showed gains of $319,000 in gross earnings and $207,000 in net income. Such figures are fairly illustrative of what is going on throughout the whole country, representing a movement of commodities unexampled. Such railway earnings, moreover, reflect traffic rates materially below what from this time forward will figure in established schedules. Advances in rates have been issuing in various quarters for some time past, but not until now has there been any tangible evidence of what is a carefully undertaken plan establishing the policy generally. Moves hitherto made quietly are now to be openly and aggressively supplemented.

One prompt result will be increased dividends—and it is not improbable that the Northern Pacific Railroad may assume leadership in that regard—It being officially intimated, indeed, that increased dividends on Northern Pacific common stock will be declared this month.

Disclosures made through THE NEW YORK TIMES this week of the extraordinary financial transactions which result practically in unified control of the Eastern trunk line situation, have exerted much influence upon investment confidence. Some curious "denials" have been put out to offset the statement of facts presented in THE TIMES, but not one responsible authority has so far been quoted explicitly disputing anything essential. The truth is that not only has the New York Central-Pennsylvania-Baltimore and Ohio deal removed what at one time threatened disturbance in the Eastern railway field, but the actual and immediate result of that deal is that control of the entire Eastern railway situation has become so concentrated that three men are absolute masters of it; and as Mr. Morgan, Mr. Vanderbilt, and Mr. Cassatt may choose to exercise their powers, so will Eastern trunk line policy be shaped, so will Eastern railroad rates be made, so will Eastern operations proceed; and this, curious as it may be, quite apart from their failure to take into their confidence a garrulous variety of gentlemen—Directors by courtesy.

It is the estimate of one of the three controlling financiers that the Baltimore and Ohio deal will lead soon to the institution of economies in Eastern railway operation which alone can provide increased dividend disbursements—for New York Central and Pennsylvania.

Something of a chill was given temporarily to Wall Street by the advance in the Bank of England's discount rate to 6 per cent., that figure not having been charged since the Baring panic of 1890. Of course, bear speculators made much ado over this advance. The first thing they were sure of was that the United States would be drained of gold, that business would be brought to a standstill abroad, that enforced commercial and industrial contraction would hurry a foreign crash, and that this country must suffer extraordinary fluctuations immediately. Wall Street's new temper of confidence was, however, sufficient to withstand such "arguments." Bankers of importance agree that little is to be apprehended here as resulting from the Bank of England's policy. Even in the Baring panic times 6 per cent. was the maintained rate of the British bank for less than a month. Coincident with stringency at London rates recede at Berlin. There is no factor in the situation foreshadowing grave financial aspects anywhere, for international authorities explain that the Bank of England in raising its discount rate had in view exceptional contingencies requiring consideration incidental to the Boer war. That conflict, by the way, is no longer listed among New York Stock Exchange bear factors, though before the actual fighting began there was much ado over dreadful collapses which were to disturb the finances of the whole world. Our own war in the Philippines has become even less a matter of interest either to investors or speculators.

Yesterday's weekly Clearing House statement was in all ways an encouraging exhibit. Favorable changes took place in every item.

Money starts this way from the West in substantial volume. New York bankers seem uniformly agreed that dangers from stringency are past, and professional Wall Street in its new optimism requires not much other encouragement.

THE BANK STATEMENT.

The bank statement, issued yesterday, shortly before the close of business, fully came up to the generally favorable expectations, showing as it did a further increase in the surplus reserve by $1,884,500, an increase in legal tender of $1,110,600, in specie of $3,303,900, and in deposits of $10,120,000. Loans also increased to the extent of over $5,500,000.

The result of the gain in the reserve is to put the surplus reserve at $8,536,700—a substantially safe working margin—as against a deficit only a few weeks ago.

Apart from the gratifying increase in specie and legal tender it is significantly pointed out that the gain in deposits is due, not alone to the payments on Government bonds offered at the Sub-Treasury, but also to an inflow of money from the West.

VAST METROPOLITAN GAINS.

Developments of unexpected importance are likely to follow to-morrow's annual meeting of the Metropolitan Street Railway Company.

Earnings of the property are reaching aggregates much beyond any official anticipations. The statement for November, given out yesterday, shows total receipts of $1,202,448.10, an increase over November last year of $181,875.55. From the 1st of July to the 1st of December the Metropolitan's earnings aggregate $5,932,075.40, an increase over the same period of last year of $783,680.55. Such exhibits put far behind any past record in street railway history.

In correspondence with an important stockholder of the system, one of the financial controllers of the Metropolitan Company refers to impending negotiations which "will result in extraordinary increases in the company's net revenues during the coming year."

Some hints are heard of a contract by which a lighting and power company desires to enter into an agreement which will yield the Metropolitan Company $1,000,000 per year by the sale of a percentage of its surplus electric power.

IRON AND STEEL PROSPERITY.

That there has been no exaggeration of the wonderfully prosperous condition of the iron and steel industries, facts and figures herewith presented will clearly bear out. From no company, from no quarter come other than gratifying and encouraging reports, telling not alone of the excellence of present conditions, but even of better things to come. The demand for the products of the various companies continues enormous, and orders already placed extend far into 1900. In order to accommodate the rapidly growing business, one company after another has been obliged to extend and enlarge its plants. Not unnaturally, earnings are increasing and encouraging. The facts and the testimony to those facts follow.

***

The World for Our Market.

Senator Mark A. Hanna, whose large interests in coal, iron, and steel cover a wide and growing field, says:

"General business conditions speak for themselves, and there is therefore really nothing to say. The country was never so prosperous, and the outlook for the future is very encouraging. There is no sign of any let up.

"As for the iron business, our firm has interests in various parts of the country, and from everywhere only good reports come to us. I think it is a business that is constantly growing, and whose future is wonderfully promising. We will have the entire world as our market one of these days."

Prosperity Next Year Assured.

C. M. Schwab, General Manager of the Carnegie Steel Company—cautious and conservative, and like Mr. H. C. Frick disinclined to talk for publication—says little, but that little is to the point, as follows:

"The outlook is most promising, and prosperous business for all next year is already practically assured."

***

Orders Far Ahead.

President E. H. Gary of the Federal Steel Company says:

"The business of our company continues excellent, while the outlook for the future, both in our home and foreign trade, could not be better. In spite of the great home demand, we are doing quite a large foreign business, especially our Lorain Steel Company branch.

"We have just completed the purchase of an iron mine on the Mesaba Range, for which we paid $1,000,000, and we are constantly extending and improving our various plants in order the better to handle our growing business.

"The price for ore for the next year has just been fixed at $5.50 a ton, as compared with $2.50 and $3 this year. The quantity of ore produced this year will be 17,000,000 tons, of which our Minnesota Iron Company will produce 3,500,000. We will have between four and five million tons on our railroad, the Duluth and Iron Range, while our boats have a tonnage capacity of 2,500,000. The rate for next year for carrying will be $1.50 per ton, as compared with 80 cents for this year.

"We shall produce next year 1,500,000 tons of coke, the price for which has been fixed at between $2.75 and $3 per ton. This year it has been $1.50.

"Our companies together will finish about 2,000,000 tons of steel products, such as pig iron, billets, rails, ship plates, rods, merchant steel, girder rails for street railroads, frogs, switches, crossings, electric motors, &c. Of these 2,000,000 tons we have already sold for next year about 1,400,000 tons, and we have just made a contract for 1,000 tons of rods at $38 per ton.

"The fixing of the price of ore at $5.50 per ton establishes the prices of all finished products for next year, so you can see what an advantage it is to have plenty of ore and get the benefits of these higher prices. As it is, some concerns throughout the country will have great difficulty in getting the ore.

"I may say, in passing, that the October tonnage of our Elgin, Joliet and Eastern Railway was the largest by all odds of any month in its history.

"Our earnings are highly satisfactory, and naturally with the higher prices they will continue so. We have decided to pay the 3 per cent. dividend on the preferred. What we shall do on the common it is for the Directors to say. I have my personal opinion and wish, but I do not care to discuss the matter through the press."

***

Great Extension of Credit.

An officer of the American Steel and Wire Company says: "Business daily grows better and better, and this is true not alone of one branch but of every branch with which we have relations. As a consequence our earnings are very satisfactory.

"A fact that I have not seen referred to, but which has contributed materially to the good times in our lines, is that there lately has developed a tremendous increase in credit. By this I mean that a great number of enterprises in the iron and steel trade which a few years ago were not making money and found it hard to obtain credit, now have no difficulty in that respect. They have grown so strong that where before people hung back in giving them credit now these same people are only too glad to facilitate and promote such enterprises. And this is true not only of the iron companies, but of their customers."

Business Simply Immense.

An officer of the Tennessee Coal and Iron Company says: "Our business is simply immense. For the first half of 1900 we are all sold out, while for the last half there is quite a large tonnage already disposed of. What is more, these orders are at excellent prices.

"To my mind as suggestive a fact as one would want, and certainly as significant an indication, is the order which we have just received from Milan, Italy, for pig iron at full domestic prices. Of course we have been exporting iron all along at old prices, but this new order is at the new and higher prices, which we have been obtaining here, and shows that iron has advanced on the other side as well as at home. In other words, just as soon as iron men care to go largely into exporting they will find they will have the whole world as their market. Of course at present the demand in this country is so enormous that the supply is not sufficient at all times to meet it.

"We take it as a good sign, too, that our goods abroad command what may be styled 'top notch' prices. It shows that they must be entirely satisfactory.

"Our new steel plant at Ensley will, of course, mean much to us. Its capacity will be 1,000 tons a day, and on this alone we ought to make $15 a ton net profit.

"As for our earnings, it is only necessary to say that for October alone the net surplus applicable to dividends, after the payment of all fixed charges, amounts to $215,000.

"But everybody knows the conditions; the facts are daily being published in one form or another. The whole situation is that in iron and steel the conditions couldn't very well be better."

Discussing the affairs of this company, Dow, Jones & Co., in a news bulletin yesterday, said: "The analysis of the steel manufactured by the new plant of the Tennessee Coal and Iron Company has been reported, and an official of the company says there is no better grade of steel in the world. The consequence is that Tennessee Coal and Iron people here are jubilant over the results of the test. The company is now in position to manufacture steel from raw material quicker than anywhere else in the world, according to official statements."

Extraordinary Developments.

Indicative of the extraordinary developments in one group of iron stocks is the fact that the American Steel Hoop Company is concentrating its executive offices, heretofore situated at Pittsburg and Chicago, in this city, and has already engaged two floors in one of the big down-town office buildings. And what is true of this company is true also of the American Tin Plate Company and the National Steel Company, ownership in which is largely represented by the same capitalists, one of whom says:

"We see nothing but what is encouraging There has not been a day recently which has not shown increased reason for confidence over the preceding day. Earnings, at present phenomenal, are sure to be much increased. We see five years' business in sight on a basis of profits, which means the maintenance of dividends on the preferred stock and a dividend rate on the common materially larger than what goes on the preferred.

"After the payment of all charges and all dividends on the preferred stock, these three companies are earning on their capital stock at the rate, in the case of Tin Plate, of over 12 per cent.; in the case of National Steel of 15 per cent., and in the case of Steel Hoop of between 20 and 25 per cent."

Making Many Extensions.

President Warner of the Republic Iron and Steel Company: "Our general business is in splendid condition, and the outlook for the future is most encouraging. We have orders far ahead, and at good prices. We have been making improvements and extensions all along the line in order not only to put our property in the best possible condition, but also the better and the more economically to handle our growing business. These improvements include the installation of a great deal of labor-saving machinery, the putting in blast of new furnaces, and the opening up of additional ore mines.

"The output of our furnaces is now much greater than it was when we took them over, and we are now making at the rate of 400,000 tons of pig iron per year. Our ore supply for our furnaces is covered from our own mines, while as for other raw material, we have contracted for it well into next year.

"The earnings of the company continue in every sense satisfactory, and promise next year to be greater even than this year."

***

New Furnaces Put in Blast.

W. L. Sims of the Empire Steel and Iron Company says:

"We are makers of pig iron only, the activity in and demand for which can best be judged when I tell you that all our furnaces—thirteen in number—will shortly be in full operation. All but three are in blast now, a number having been started within the past month or two, and these three are now being gotten in readiness. These furnaces are at Greensborough, N. C.; Goshen and Shenandoah, Va.; Oxford, N. J., and Catasaqua, Bellefonte, Macungie, Reading, and Topton, Penn.

"Then, too, we have ore mines now working in Ore Hill, N. C.; Chapel Hill, N. C.; Blacksburg, S. C.; Shenandoah, Va., and Oxford and Mount Hope, N. J., while we are working in lime at Craigsville and Roanoke, Va.

"This increased activity is the surest sign of the prosperity in our lines and of the great demand for our products.

"The sum and substance of the whole situation is that business is wonderfully good and our earnings are very satisfactory."

How the Smelters Fare.

E. W. Nash, President of the American Smelting and Refining Company, which, in addition to its handling of gold, silver, pig lead, and copper, is a considerable buyer of iron, says:

"Generally speaking, our business is in an exceptionally good condition. We are steadily increasing our capacity and as steadily increasing our output.

"Of course our products are always salable, whether in good times or in bad, and in that respect differ from manufactured goods which depend on good times for their readier sale. In boom times, too, we have to pay higher prices for the commodities we buy, such as coke and coal, while of course wages also go higher.

"But we have nothing whatever to complain of. Our business is excellent. Indeed, from what I can hear, all kinds of business throughout the country are in a healthy and prosperous state."

Doing a Splendid Business.

An officer of the Park Steel Company says: "We are doing a splendid business and have very reason to be satisfied with present conditions and with the outlook for the future. We have many orders on hand, especially the black diamond and heavy projectile which we turn out."

***

Surpassed All Expectations.

"An official of the Pennsylvania Steel Company has quoted as saying that the business of the company has surpassed all expectations and that in addition to the full 7 per cent. on the preferred stock the company has earned something like 40 per cent. on the common. Orders for 1900 are already far ahead, and at such profitable prices that even greater earnings are assured.

Wonderful Earnings.

From official sources it is learned that the business of the Colorado Fuel and Iron Company is like all the other companies. In this connection a special dispatch from Chicago was yesterday put out by the news bulletins, which said: "Trustworthy information is that the net earnings of the Colorado Fuel and Iron Company for the current fiscal year will probably exceed $2,000,000. There will be a large surplus remaining applicable to both the preferred and common stocks. The business of the company, it is stated, was never better. Not only does the company reach all points on the Pacific Coast, but it has been extended to Japan and contiguous countries."

Development of the Cuban Mines.

F. A. Bigelow of Cleveland, who has just returned from Cuba, where he has been in the interest of some large mine owners, points out the great advantages which the development of the iron mines in Cuba will work to the country. He says:

"It is not generally known, but it is a fact, nevertheless, that the iron mines of Cuba are very rich—in fact, run about 4 per cent. better than thirty of the Lake Superior mines.

"At present there are three different companies operating these mines, all of them made up of American capital. One of these is the Juragua Company, operating thirty miles east of Santiago. This company owns its own docks and has shipped out 3,500,000 tons of ore to this country. The company is controlled by the Pennsylvania Steel Company and the Bethlehem Steel Company.

"East of that is the Spanish-American Company, controlled by the Rockefellers, and operating at Daquiri. Seventy miles west is the new property of the Cuban Steel Ore Company. This company has a large property, with a thoroughly protected harbor, and is now building piers and opening up its mines so as to be ready to ship ore by May 1.

"The Cuban ores are all Bessemer ores of a high grade, running not less than 63 per cent. iron.

"The present production of Cuba should be about 1,000,000 tons of ore a year, while in four years the Cuban Steel Ore Company, in the island, should itself produce 1,000,000 tons. What this means to this country is particularly in the light of the fact that there hears of a scarcity of raw material, appears at a glance.

"Not only will the opening and development of these mines mean a great supply of raw material to us, but it will mean the increased production of pig iron and steel, and will give employment to a large amount of labor which would otherwise be idle. In particular it will be a godsend to the coast-line, from Harrisburg to the seashore. The Lake Superior ores won't come further East than that, nor the Cuban ores go further West. In fact, I may say, while I am on the subject, that the Spanish mines are running down in per cent. of iron, while at the same time they are getting deeper and deeper.

"Of course, there is at present a tariff of 40 cents a ton on ore coming into this country, but, in connection with this, by reason of the shorter haul and the lower freight rate, the ore could be profitably shipped to the coast lines and compete with the Lake Superior ores. The only drawback to the situation at present is that the labor is not so good in Cuba as it is in this country."

Australian Contract.

Incidentally it is worth noting that the Westinghouse Company—a very large user of iron and steel—has recently secured a contract for $500,000 worth of equipment for Adelaide, Australia.

***

Sheet Steel Manufacturers.

Sheet steel manufacturers, who for some time past have been considering a proposition to consolidate, are to hold a meeting at Pittsburg in a few days further to discuss the matter.

WHAT IT WILL MEAN.

If trunk line traffic affairs are reorganized as proposed, the Clearing House system will come into general use at all large centres. Wherever it has been tried, it has worked successfully. The idea is to have a few men do the work of many, facilitate through service, and reduce the shipper's opportunities for fooling enterprising solicitors. It estimated that a thousand solicitors in various parts of the country, especially in the West, would be dispensed with if the railroads got together on some practical scheme for co-operation. The Trunk Line Association will become a clearing house, it is said.—Dow, Jones & Co.

CITY BANK EXPANSION.

The stockholders of the National City Bank will meet on, 2 next vote on a proposition which has the unanimous assent of the Board of Directors, and which was discussed at the last annual meeting, to increase the capital of the bank from $1,000,000 to $10,000,000. A special committee of the stockholders, consisting of Philip Schuyler, Percy R. Pyne, James Ross Curran, and Charles W. Morse, has issued an appeal on the subject, saying that the bank's capital stock is now so scattered that there is hardly enough on the market to enable new Directors to qualify; that it is necessary to the welfare of the bank that the Directors have a substant under the new capitalization it will offer to its depositors this security:

Capital stock paid in	$10,000,000
Shareholders' liability	10,000,000
Surplus and individual profits	5,000,000
Total	$25,000,000

The Directors of the bank claim that the increase in capital is fully warranted by the increase in its business, which they claim is phenomenal. Of the advisability of the plan they say, semi-officially:

Among the reasons is the restriction of the National banking act, by which every National bank is prohibited from making a direct loan of more than one-tenth of its capital stock to any firm, person, or corporation. Although this restriction does not apply to discounts of commercial paper, it does extend to loans, even when secured by the best collateral. And it is precisely such loans for which there is the greatest demand in large amounts by single firms or corporations.

Part of the increase of capital is likely to be devoted to improving and taking care of the Custom House building, which is the bank's property and figures in its assets for more than $3,000,000.

The National City Bank was founded in 1812. Its Clearing House statement of yesterday showed: Net profits, $4,818,500; loans, $78,074,400; specie, $29,707,600; legal tenders, $2,842,700; deposits, $104,853,200; reserve, 31 per cent. The last quotation for its stock was 362,000 bid.

WHEAT MARKET SITUATION.

Wheat went to a lower level during the five days of trading this week, the decline being more than one cent a bushel. The Chicago and New York markets were dull and narrow, with now and then a spell of nervousness. The market at the close yesterday was as dull as at any time during the week. Nearly every market factor was bearish. The switching of December into May continued, stocks continued to pile up, more wheat than was expected appeared, and export business languished. The European markets were steady, if not firm, and the receipts at primary points were under the average, while Winter wheat reports from sources free from speculative taint showed Hessian fly ravages of more or less consequence and unfavorable conditions due to continued mild weather. These items failed to rally the market in any way. Corn lost its firmness, and declined nearly one cent. This had its influence on the wheat market. The opinion is general that no rally in the chief cereal can be expected before a steady export demand appears. Abroad stocks are accumulating. The following shows the condition of Liverpool in this regard at the beginning of the month.

In their weekly grain letter of yesterday McIntyre & Wardwell said:

Wheat—In the past month the trade has witnessed an increase of about 6,000,000 bushels in the visible supply, and a loss of about 1½ cents per bushel in the price of wheat. The enlarged supply is not as responsible for the shrinkage in value as the liquidation of December contracts. This liquidation is not over, and further deliveries are expected to be made in Chicago when lake navigation is ended and the elevators can make delivery without losing the grain in shipment. This is the best explanation of the weakness shown to-day after a steadier feeling in the early trading. Continued warm weather in the Winter wheat States has been of some benefit, but conditions have been favorable for insect injury. If we hear of damage by the fly next Spring we cannot well discredit it when remembering the warm weather of the past two months. An additional feature to be ascribed to the weather is the greater area plowed for Spring wheat in the Northwestern States. Cables were not fully responsive to our decline of yesterday, and it was this that gave the market a show of firmness in the early part of to-day's session. The world's shipments of 6,200,000 bushels contained 3,700,000 bushels from this country. Receipts at this port for the week show large increase over the week previous, and there will be no good increase in the local stock, which was 4,176,000 a week ago. Of that quantity 2,040,000 bushels were No. 2 red. The interior movement shows receipts of 961,000 bushels against 1,622,000 bushels last year and shipment of 1,335,000 bushels.

Corn—There is some loss in price due to the weather and weakness in wheat. Unquestionably the mild temperature of the past two months has abridged farm consumption, and in some quarters has given fair pasturage. The demand continues good, and the visible that has been reduced over 2,000,000 bushels in the past month will probably continue its decreases during December. Stock in Chicago is expected to show 300,000 bushels decrease on the week's movement. For a long time the outward movement has averaged about 4,500,000 bushels weekly. This is beyond complaint. Local stocks may be lightly increased by the week's receipt of 378,000 bushels. Not much corn arriving in Chicago is entering contract grade—only 18 cars out of 629 yesterday.

Price, McCormick & Co's Chicago grain letter of yesterday said:

The wheat market opened steady this morning at last night's closing prices—69 cents for the option. For a time the bulls were in control, the market advancing to 69¼ cents, and it looked as though they might put the market higher. Bears were a little nervous and covered, not caring to have an interest in the market over Sunday. The advance was not well founded, however, and before the noon hour prices had broken off to 68½ cents, which is the lowest price in the present crop. Liverpool cables were about as expected, showing a decline of ½d in response to our weakness late yesterday. The visible supply Monday is expected to show a decrease of about 1,000,000 bushels. World's shipments are moderate, 6,200,000 bushels, which is about the same as last week. Receipts at Minneapolis and Duluth, 831 cars, against 1,432 last year. There was some buying of March wheat at the seaboard, at a premium of 3⅛ cents over December. Crop reports are generally favorable, but colder weather is predicted in the Northwest, which may spread down to the Winter wheat States. We continue to be bearish on the market. Estimated receipts to-morrow, 100 cars.

Corn and Oats.—Corn was ½ higher at the opening, deriving its strength principally from the upturn in wheat. Weather is favorable, and the indications are that the movement next week will be considerably larger. Our receipts to-day were 40 cars more than the estimate. Corn followed the break in wheat and declined to 32 cents for May. We cannot see anything in the situation to encourage buyers. Oats neglected fraction lower in sympathy with other markets.

Complete returns for the week ended Nov. 25 show, compared with the corresponding week in 1898, an increase of 32.8 per cent., with the same week in 1897, a gain of 60.9 per cent., and with 1896 a gain of 80.8 per cent. Outside of New York the gain, as compared with 1898, was 37.5 per cent., as compared with 1897, 52.6 per cent., and with 1896, 61.5 per cent.

OUTSIDE SECURITIES.

Transactions in the market for outside securities yesterday were very light. Closing the week neither traders nor the public showed any disposition to enter upon new market contracts, and with the exception of the business done in Storage Power and one or two other stocks that of late have shown activity, the day's business was of little importance. So little trading was there that only in a few cases did prices show any material variation from those of the previous day. Among the net changes that did occur were several considerable advances, notable among these being Standard Oil, General Carriage, and National Tube.

DISTILLING OF AMERICA was weak, and in the common stock showed a fractional net loss at the close. Transactions were not very large, but a good deal of stock appeared in the market and the relatively small business done in the issue was due to the lack of demand for the stock. Of the preferred stock only two or three hundred shares changed hands, and these at figures that varied but slightly from Friday's closing bid.

STORAGE POWER was again a strong feature, but it was not as active as on the several preceding days. It advanced to 8⅝ and closed at 8⅝ bid, a net gain of three-eighths of a point. Insiders seemed to be the principal buyers of the stock, and with the purchases goes the expression of much confidence in the success of the power which the company was formed to exploit.

GENERAL CARRIAGE.—Without any news being had to explain the advance, General Carriage continued to rise sharply and with sales of only one or two lots of stock the price reached 65, a gain of 17 points over the best bid on Friday. Little seems to be known about the stock on the curb, and thus far insiders appear to be the only ones in the market for it. Intimations are had, however, that the advance is based on certain developments in the company's affairs which will much improve its condition. When the advance began about two weeks ago, it was found that there was very little stock in the market, and very few transactions have been made, while the stock has been advancing from 27½ to 65.

CRAMPS' SHIPYARD was in demand, and the price advanced a number of points, closing at 84. Little stock was found, and not more than 100 shares were traded in for each point of the advance. Strength in this issue followed the report of the declaration of a dividend of 1¼ per cent., which is payable Dec. 15.

ELECTRIC AXLE was dull and showed no net change for the day. The only sale in the stock was just before the close, when a transaction was made at 63.

RUBBER GOODS preferred reflected the announcement of the third quarterly dividend by an advance of over two points. It sold as high as 83½ and closed at 83½ bid. In the common stock the only sale was at 29¾, and this figure was bid at the close.

NATIONAL TUBE, also on very light transactions, went up to 48½ and ended the day with a net gain of 1½ points, while the preferred stock was firmer at 96 bid.

Closing quotations were as follows:

BOSTON STOCK MARKET.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Mass., Dec. 2.—It was a fairly active market in spots, notably Sugar, United States Oil rights, and Bell Telephone. The feature of the market was the decline in Bell Telephone from 356 to 347 on the announcement of the transfer of the Bell Telephone assets to the American Telephone and Telegraph Company, on the basis of one share of Bell Telephone for two of the New York Company. Bell Telephone officials refuse to discuss the affair, other than to admit that the deal is made. The closing was irregular, with Bell Telephone 3 points under the best and 6 above the lowest. Dominion Coal was up ¾, Winona and Utah up 1, Arcadian ½, and United States off ¼. There was a sale of one share of Calumet at 770. Planters' dipped still further to 30. Sugar crossed 156 and Burlington sold above 134.

At the local Clearing House to-day all the loans were made at 6 per cent. So long as this rate is held it is useless, so good authorities believe, to look for any considerable shading in outside rates. New York funds were in better demand at par. On call, money still ranged from 5½ to 7 per cent., mostly 6 per cent. Banks ask and obtain 5½@6 per cent. for time money on the very highest grade of dividend collateral and 6 per cent. and upward on good mixed collateral. On some grades of speculative collateral money is difficult to obtain. In commercial paper outside trade is comparatively light. Banks are taking care of their customers at 5½@6 per cent.

CHICAGO QUOTATIONS.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Dec. 2—There was further excitement in the market for Linseed stock to-day, following the sensational close of last night. In the last five minutes of the session yesterday the preferred stock was run up from 59½ to 62¼. The opening this morning was at 65, this quotation being recorded on a 1,000-share lot. This trade was subsequently ordered canceled. The next sale, however, was 100 shares at 62, and the one immediately following this 100 shares at 61. The bulk of the day's trading was between 60 and 61. The market weakened just before the end of the session to 59¾, closing at that, the lowest price of the day.

The general market was very dull. Union Traction common sold at 33½@34, and fifty shares of the preferred were traded in at 82½. Metropolitan Elevated common sold at 29, the preferred at 80½@81. Tin Plate preferred was at 83⅛@84 and City Railway at 286.

PHILADELPHIA PRICES.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 2.—Dullness and firmness were the two characteristics of the local market. There was an advance of 3½ points in the Cramps shipbuilding stock on the declaration of the regular dividend, but in all other price changes the movement was limited to fractions. Philadelphia Electric was dealt in quite heavily, but without injuring its price. Railways Company general advanced ⅜ on buying by insiders. Marsden improved half a point, and Union Traction was wanted at 41½. Pennsylvania Steel stocks were a trifle lower, but were very dull.

There are some deals on foot which, when consummated, ought to improve local speculative conditions materially. At the moment, however, the price of time money is holding even the professional element back.

the United States. We must be prepared for a further reduction of the reserve, and may witness very stringent conditions."

Panic Feared in Newfoundland.

ST. JOHN'S, N. F., Dec. 2.—The Canadian banks doing business in this colony imported to-day a quarter of a million dollars in gold coin, fearing a panic, as for the last week heavy withdrawals of gold have been made from Harborgrace, Belle Isle, and other sections, and it is feared that the panic may spread to this city. The Governmental crisis is held to be responsible for this uneasiness, the masses of the people fearing financial trouble.

CHICAGO BANKERS CONFIDENT.

CHICAGO, Dec. 2.—Chicago bankers do not fear any bad effects on the American stock of gold from the action of the Bank of England in increasing its discount rate to 6 per cent. They believe that England will get none of the gold in the United States under the present conditions. The two former Controllers of the Currency now living in this city—James H. Eckles and E. S. Lacey—are of the same opinion in this matter.

"New York has already discounted the action of the Bank of England," said Mr. Eckles, "and unless the conditions change much on one side or the other of the Atlantic there will hardly be a movement of gold."

"I do not anticipate any free movement of gold," said Mr. Lacey. "The Bank of England can secure gold from this country now only by special operations—that is, by sending over and purchasing it at the best prices they can get, regardless of the rate of exchange. If the rate of discount here eases, some gold may go across, but I am inclined to believe the increase in the rate in London will tend to sustain rates in this country. What movement there is will be largely a sentimental one, any way. Even if the gold does go across the Atlantic, the United States can easily spare it, as our supply is very large."

To Extend the Navigation Season.

DULUTH, Minn., Dec. 2.—The demand for iron ore is so great that the Minnesota Iron Company will try the experiment of extending the navigation season one or two months. Insurance on steel hulls expires Dec. 5, but the company will run its fleet of five steel ships through December, and if possible, through January, without insurance. The open lakes do not, as a rule, freeze till February, and the narrow channels will be kept open.

YACHTING GOSSIP.

James D. Baird of the Larchmont Yacht Club, who raced the Surprise and Hussar in Long Island Sound, has placed a commission for a fifty-one-footer with Capt. Thomas Webber at New Rochelle. The new craft will be built to beat Commodore Fred M. Hoyt's Syce, and is already laid down in Webber's shop.

***

The steel schooner yacht, Alcaea, formerly the property of Charles Clark, has been sold through the brokerage firm of Tams & Lemoine to an Englishman. Those who profess to know the ultimate destination of the Alcaea say that she will fly the double eagle of the Emperor of Germany. The Alcaea is 120 feet over all, 90 feet on the water line, 22 feet 6 inches beam, and 13 feet draught. She was designed by Gardner & Cox of this city, and was launched from Lawler's yards at South Boston in May, 1892. She is a magnificent vessel, and a fitting companion to the American schooner Yampa, which was bought by Emperor William two years ago.

***

The schooner Fleur de Lys, owned by George Lord Day, New York Yacht Club, has been sold to Charles Smithers, whose private signal floated from the little schooner Wayward last season. The Fleur de Lys is on the drydock at the foot of Clinton Street, Brooklyn, for examination, after which the transfer of title will be made, and the yacht fitted out for a long cruise about the West Indies. It will be recalled that the Fleur de Lys was bottled up in the port of Lisbon at the beginning of the Spanish-American war by a little gunboat, and, starting for the open sea in a gale, ran away from the little warship much to the disgust of the Spanish officers and crew, who were hungry for the prize money.

***

The schooner yacht Calypso, formerly know as Her Royal Highness, and owned by Josiah R. Adams of Philadelphia, has been sold to a New York yachtsman.

***

The racing schooner Quissetta is being deepened, under the supervision of her designers, Gardner & Cox, at Port Jefferson. She will have a larger rig when she reappears in the Spring, and Mr. Lippitt, her owner, will race her extensively during the season.

***

Capt. William Langley, Larchmont Yacht Club, has built a fifty-four-foot yawl, which arrived in these waters during the past week. She was built in the vicinity of Cape Hatteras, and is named Coon.

***

The annual dinner of the Manhasset Bay Yacht Club will be held in the Arena, 41 West Thirty-first Street, on Tuesday evening.

***

From one point or another about the great lakes comes a report every week of a new challenge for the Canada Cup. Up to the present time, however, none has been sent, and there is very little probability of another match until 1901. The cup has at last reached Chicago, after a brief stay in Rochester, and was the centrepiece at the banquet given by the Chicago Yacht Club to those of its members who participated in the races. Charles G. Davis, the amateur skipper of the Genesee in the contests, was invited, but sent letters of regret from Boston.

***

The schooner yacht Duen, owned by the Countess Schimmelmann of Copenhagen, is lying in Erie Basin, where she will remain for several weeks. Her owner is doing mission work among the seamen who stay in the vicinity of the basin.

***

Work on the new home of the New York Yacht Club is progressing rapidly. The walls are up, the structure is roofed in, and workmen are beginning on the interior of the building. A few slight modifications have been made in the plans for the arrangements of the interior decorations.

"The dispute between the Seawanhaka-Corinthian and the Royal St. Lawrence Yacht Clubs is far more than a private quarrel between the two clubs," says the current issue of Forest and Stream. "The main point of issue, whether the course laid out by the Royal St. Lawrence Sailing Committee was in accord with the conditions of the declaration of trust, is a difficult one to decide, and a fair decision can only be reached through a consideration of the evidence on both sides. So far as the friendly relations of the two clubs are concerned, the letter of the Seawanhaka Race Committee has put matters back where they were on the night of the receipt of the famous Kerr-Dresser telegram in 1898."

horse is green and without a mark, and about all the training she ever had was on the Speedway, nevertheless Queen Wilkes has shown her heels to a number of horses with records during the past week. Mr. Weiland is of the opinion that Queen Wilkes can beat Cobwebs, and he is more than anxious for a go with the King of the Speedway. Fred Gerken, although he does not believe that Queen Wilkes can beat Cobwebs, offered Mr. Weiland three times what he paid for the animal.

The Road Drivers' Association has recently taken up the question of street-car crossings in Seventh Avenue, north of Central Park, where all down-town visitors to the Speedway have been compelled to run the gauntlet of electric cars dashing across the roadway at high speed. Several narrow escapes from accidents have occurred of late at both One Hundred and Sixteenth and One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Streets, and this has caused the road drivers to request the railroad authorities to stop all cars before crossing the busy thoroughfares. President A. B. Gwathmay has been informed that the Metropolitan Street Railway Company will comply with the request of horsemen at One Hundred and Sixteenth Street, and that the Third Avenue Railroad Company has taken similar action in regard to the crossing at One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street.

Richard Croker's new horse Kentucky Union, 2:07¼, has been on the Speedway several times during the past week, but the driver of the animal does not seem anxious to enter any of the battles.

The well-known gray mare Brunhilde, 2:15¼, owned by Melville C. Boynton, has been on the Speedway several times during the past week, and has shown some of her former speed and quickness in getting away at the start. She has been in poor condition since early Spring, but her form is now greatly improved.

The bay gelding Pilot Chimes, 2:19¼, recently purchased by Edgar Bronk, is a frequent visitor to the Speedway, and his speed fully justifies all the good things that have been said about him.

The seven mounted policemen who look after the interest of Speedway drivers were remembered on Thanksgiving by Dr. Kane, one of the best known and most popular Speedway frequenters. Each policeman received a fat turkey and the accessories, with the compliments of the doctor.

GOSSIP ABOUT TROTTERS.

During Richard Croker's absence abroad his mare, Kentucky Union, which he purchased at the recent Fasig-Tipton sale, will be in the hands of Nathan Straus, and will be driven by Mr. Straus on the Speedway when he wants to give Cobwebs a rest.

Word comes from Lexington, Ky., that John E. Madden has sold his young Hanover-Tarantella stallion, Handsel, to Messrs. Jones and Barbee of the above place. The price paid is said to be large, though the amount has not been made public.

Richard Croker thinks very highly of the young trotting stallion Electric Wilkes, which he recently purchased. Special preparation will be given Electric Wilkes by Mr. Croker's trainer, "Jack" Curray, for the three principal four-year-old stakes of the coming season—Lexington, Detroit, and Cleveland. It is likely that these will be the only races in which the horse will be started.

WHY POE KICKED THAT GOAL.

How He Came to be Chosen to Act as the Forlorn Hope in the Princeton-Yale Football Game.

Princeton men have not begun to tire of talking about the goal kicked from the field by Arthur Poe, that brought victory to "Old Nassau" in the game against Yale a week ago. They may never tire of it. With every new telling there comes a new version of how it all happened. So it may not be amiss to tell just how it all came about, in order to have the record straight for football historians.

Poe, as is well known, was not considered one of the goal-kicking men of the eleven. He was too useful as an end player to have his abilities as a kicker developed. It is a fact that he was not used to kick for goals in any of the open games against the "scrubs," nor in secret practice. In fact, all the training he had had in this direction was that which he gave himself in individual practice. He succeeded well enough then to have considerable confidence in himself, though he said nothing of it to his fellows.

When Princeton's team was battered almost to pieces, the coaches on the side lines decided that the only way to avert the threatened defeat was to try for a goal from the field as a last resort. "Biffy" Lea, head coach of the eleven, then resorted to the tactics that called forth a lot of criticism in some quarters. He sent Duncan up to Burke, who was playing at quarter in the team, now made up chiefly of substitutes, with the necessary instructions, and Burke communicated them to Capt. Edwards. Those who recall the incidents of the game will remember that just after Duncan's brief visit to the team there was a consultation between the players.

In that consultation Capt. Edwards decided that Mills, who had done most of the kicking of this sort for the team, should make the trial. The hard buffeting Mills had received in the scrimmages in which he had to wrestle against Olcott, one of Yale's strongest line men, had made him nervous. He didn't like to try for a goal and fail. As the man who tells the story said, "Mills had a trifling attack of 'cold feet.'" Capt. Edwards was a bit nonplussed, and had decided to make the attempt himself, and take whatever of blame or credit should come from failure or success.

It was then that Poe came to the rescue. "Give me

The Going of the Battery.

Nov. 2, 1899. Late at night, in rain and in darkness, the Seventy-third Battery, R. F. A., left Dorchester Barracks for the war in South Africa, marching on foot to the railway station, where their guns were already entrained.

Wives' Voices:

Rain came down drenchingly, but we unblenchingly
Trudged on beside them through mirk and through mire,
They stepping steadily—only too readily!—
Scarce as if stepping brought parting time nigher.

Great guns were gleaming there—living things seeming there—
Cloaked in their tar-cloths, upnosed to the night:
Wheels wet and yellow from axle to felloe,
Throats blank of sound, but prophetic to sight.

Lamplight all drearily blinking and blearily
Lit our pale faces outstretched for one kiss,
While we stood prest to them, with a last quest to them
Not to court perils that honor could miss.

Some one said, "Nevermore will they come! Evermore
Are they now lost to us!" O, it was wrong!
Howsoe'er hard their ways, some Hand will guard their ways—
Bear them through safely—in brief time or long.

Yet—voices haunting us, daunting us, taunting us,
Hint in the night time, when life beats are low,
Other and braver things. Hold we to braver things—
Wait we—in trust—what Time's fullness shall show.

—THOMAS HARDY in The Graphic.

Transvaal Preparations.

From The Fortnightly.

For the last two or three years guns and ammunition have been imported through Delagoa Bay (that convenient harbor where so little is known) in such quantities that the whole of Afrikanderdom might be said to be armed with guns from this source. Here was an open menace to England and to England's power. In June, July, August of this year (1899) thirty tons of ammunition were, according to a correspondent of The Cape Times, being piled up at Christiana, a small town at the southwest corner of the Transvaal, and not far from the town of Kimberley. This was going on at the very time of the Bloemfontein conference. If not before. So we may well guess from this and other facts that war was in the mind of President Krüger before the ink of that conference was dry. Then there was the episode of the ammunition forwarded through Port Elizabeth to the Free State when Delagoa Bay seemed to be shut against the Boers. This step was allowed by Mr. Schreiner, the Premier of the Cape—the chosen instrument of the Bond. Where, too, in all this story was the influence, presumably for peace, of that amicus curiae, Mr. Jan Hofmeyr? To be ready when England was embarrassed elsewhere; to send the signal across the border when her hands were full in Asia, it might be, or in Egypt; to raise the cry of "Africa for the Afrikander," meaning the Dutch only: this was the cue of crafty Paul Krüger and of his Hollander satellites.

The prize was worth winning, and both Germans and French were only too glad to give sympathy and support to a cause in which the feelings of unreasoning hatred of England were mixed up with thoughts of filthy lucre and self aggrandizement. In the shrieking disappointment of the Continental press we can measure the depth of their baffled malignity at the turn events have taken.

The Crown of Russia.

From Chambers's Journal.

The crown of Russia is at present presumably the richest in diamonds. Besides several valuable collections in the imperial Treasury, there are three crowns entirely composed of these stones. That of Ivan Alexiowitch contains 881, that of Peter the Great 847, and that of Catharine II. 2,536. One of its most remarkable diamonds is the "Orloff," now set in the top of the imperial sceptre, and on this account is sometimes called the "Sceptre" diamond. The history of this stone has been much mixed up with that of the "Moon of the Mountain," another great diamond in the possession of the Czar. The most authentic account appears to be that it formed one of the eyes of the Hindu god Sri-Ranga, to whom was dedicated a magnificent temple situated on a fortified island in Mysore.

A French deserter from the Indian service, who had been at work in the neighborhood of this temple, hearing of the idol's "beaux yeux," determined to become their possessor. As no Christians were permitted within the precincts of the pagoda, he, in order to gain the confidence of the priests, became a devotee, and so ingratiated himself with the Brahmins that they confided to him the guardianship of the inner shrine, which contained the idol. Watching his opportunity, one stormy night he succeeded in forcing one of the eyes out of its socket, and fled with it to Madras, where he sold the gem to an English sea Captain for £2,000, who in turn disposed of it to a Jew for £12,000. From him it was purchased by Kojeh, a Persian merchant, who at Amsterdam, when on his way from England to Russia, met Prince Orloff. This Prince, in order to regain the favor of Catharine II., under whose displeasure he had fallen, bought the gem from the merchant for the sum of £90,000 and an annuity of £4,000, and presented it to his imperial mistress, who had previously declined the purchase as too costly, but now accepted this truly royal gift from her illustrious subject.

The "Orloff" diamond weighs 194 carats, and its estimated value is £369,800. In size it ranks first among European gems, and in beauty yields the palm to the "Regent" only. It is said that Wilkie Collins's novel "The Moonstone" was suggested by this stone.

Old Ministers.

Ian Maclaren in the Ladies' Home Journal.

Short of immorality and unbelief, one cannot imagine a greater hindrance to the energy of the Church than a large proportion of aged and infirm ministers in active duty. For this will mean obsolete theology, the neglect of the young, isolation from the spirit of the day, and endless wrangling. Nothing would more certainly re-enforce the energy of the Church than the compulsory retirement upon satisfactory terms of every minister above the age of sixty. For this would mean not only a reserve of good men upon whom the Church could depend in emergencies, but a perpetual tide of fresh thought. At present congregations have a grievance against old ministers who think they are young, and old ministers have a grievance against congregations who do not respect age, and between the two arise many scandals and breaches of the peace. When the Church is as well managed as a first-rate business concern, then this standing feud will be healed, and no one will be so much respected and loved in the Christian Church as the faithful minister who has served her in the fullness of his strength, and now in the days of his well-earned rest enriches her with his counsel."

London in Elizabeth's Time.

The Thames was the silent highway of London. One bridge only spanned it, and that bridge led into Southwark. Two thousand wherries, plied by 3,000 watermen, were in constant employment for the purpose of transit, for the bridge resembled a continuous street, having houses on both sides, and it was so narrow that carts could scarcely pass one another upon it. The Thames, in fact, was the real railway as well as the main street of London. It was full of fish and was peopled by swans, so that it was a great source also of food supply. It was computed that 40,000 of the people of London were dependent for gaining their livelihood upon the river. In London, generally, there was no regard for what we consider sanitary precautions, and it was no wonder that the plague, in some form or another, was endemic. Sensitive persons carried with them something pleasant that they might smell when their noses were assailed by unpleasant odors.

The great glory of London was St. Paul's Cathedral, designed on a scale worthy of the dignity of the city, being 690 feet long by 130 feet broad. It was adorned with tombs and monuments which gave an epitome of civic life. These all disappeared in the Great Fire. The nave was a place of fashionable resort, and was known as Paul's Walk, only the choir being used for divine service. Outside the cathedral St. Paul's Churchyard was mainly occupied by booksellers. The other great place of resort was the Royal Exchange, built by Sir Thomas Gresham and opened by Elizabeth, who gave it its name. When we looked below the surface we saw that the days of Elizabeth were emphatically the days of the hard-headed and long-headed men. The old thrifty habits of England had passed away forever, and there was a new sort of ambition and adventure everywhere.

In those days we found the wise taking advantage of the foolish and the strong taking advantage of the weak. Among the nobles new families were quietly adding manor to manor and field to field by encouraging spendthrift habits on the part of a neighbor whom they meant to abolish, and by lawsuits which they meant to win. The merchant likewise knew how to put out his money on good security; even tavern keepers were usurers to young men with expectations who came up to London for a few months. It was all done, as everything was always done in England, quietly and decorously, but money and lands changed hands.

The lighter or off-colored fish are said to be found at all times, but their proportionate numbers may vary more or less at different seasons. Thus, for instance, on the Fraser River the white-meated fish are reported generally to form only a small percentage of the Spring catch, though their number may increase toward the end of the Spring run. Beginning in August or by Sept. 1, however, the number becomes very large, and before the season closes may reach as high as 60 to 90 per cent. In Puget Sound and the more southern rivers, on the contrary, it is claimed that the percentage remains more nearly uniform throughout the fishing season, although the average color may turn a little lighter as the season advances, and that the percentage of the white-meated fish is not so large as at the north. That so marked a difference as is described should be manifested in a region of such limited extent is striking if true, but it is not at all improbable that the statements are somewhat at fault. There is no doubt, however, that a very large number of the light-colored fish are taken.

Epicures claim that their meat is as rich and as well flavored as though it possessed the deeper color, but by people generally the salmon are graded according to color, whether fresh, canned, or salted, and a prejudice exists against any which have not the prescribed shade. There is, therefore, scarcely any sale for the paler fish. When placed upon the market fresh they command a very inferior price, while canned or salted they rarely find a purchaser. It is hoped that this prejudice will soon be overcome, permitting what is now essentially a waste product to be utilized in accordance with its true value.

From Good Words.

We seated ourselves round it on cushions, and each took possession of the flat piece of scone which supplied the place of a plate during the meal, those articles not being considered a necessary luxury. In the centre of the table stood a large bowl full of white soup, from which everybody ate, taking as many spoonfuls as they chose from the common tureen with the long-handled wooden ladles provided for each guest. When this was removed a large piece of meat boiled to rags took its place, and was speedily diminished under the violent treatment it received from us all, each one pulling a lump of meat from the joint with the fingers, and eating it off with her own flat scone. We then had a curry of vegetables, followed by the Zagazig pudding, fruit and rice, called so from a native of that village having brought the receipt to the harem.

Our meal was concluded by coffee, made in a corner of the room over red-hot charcoal in a copper pot, and poured thick into small glasses fitted in gold filigree cups. The lady who made this rather disagreeable beverage was the same who had removed the centre dishes during dinner; she was black as a coal and bore the delightfully descriptive name, translated to us, of Lily in the Desert.

Samphire.

From Longman's Magazine.

Not so many years ago the gathering of samphire for purposes of pickling was a regular occupation on various parts of the coast. This trade is a very ancient one, and is alluded to by Shakespeare in "King Lear":

Half-way down
Hangs one that gathers samphire, dreadful trade!

This plant still grows abundantly on the white chalk cliff known as Shakespeare's Cliff, at Dover, though the "dreadful trade" has ceased. Fifty years ago, however, it was regularly followed in the Isle of Wight. "The warm, aromatic pickle prepared with this plant," wrote the author of "Flora Vectensis," about the year 1848, "is greatly esteemed and commonly seen at table in this island. The herb, minced, is also served up with melted butter in lieu of caper sauce. For the purpose of pickling it is annually collected in large quantities from the cliffs at Freshwater, and sent up to some wholesale houses in London by the cliffsmen, who make samphire gathering a part of their Summer occupation, and for which, when cleaned and sorted, they receive 4 shillings per bushel. It is put up in casks with sea water, for its better preservation on the journey, and probably also to extract any bitterness it may contain.

Teste Sibylla!

With a great cry the Sibyl woke, and left
The long walls of Assyrian Babylon,
Wrenching her torn black robes and locks undone

Pale, shrieking, mad, the curious crowd she cleft
Swift as a homing swallow, and darted on,
Through leagues of tawny solitude, alone;
Prophesying a riddle as one bereft. * * *

"Not for To-day I speak, but for To-morrow!
Mad call me! Liar call me! Sage and Priest,
To-morrow I shall be the source of Truth!"
But once she fell, still babbling words of ruth
And yearning hope, and a new tender sorrow,
While up in heaven a star rose in the east.

No Chance for Promoters in Germany.

From The National Review.

Neither Berlin nor Frankfort has yet produced a Hooley, and it is difficult to conceive that they ever will. Where all important schemes are brought out by well-known finance houses under the direct responsibility of substantial banks there is little room left for Hooleyism. The German speculator has his faults and his misfortunes, for which every now and then he pays the penalty; but he is not to be fooled as our Hooleyites were by the front page of a prospectus. Promotions like those in which millions sterling were swamped here in 1897 could never have happened in Germany. The police would have stopped them, with or without a hint from the Kaiser. There may be quite as much "booming" on the Berlin Boerse as in London, but it must always have a substantial basis. The shares themselves are generally sound, however much their price may be inflated.

Few persons even in the City have tried to realize what a terrible waste of British capital is caused by rotten promotions. If they did there would be much greater anxiety to put an end to them. The leak is always open, though we may never notice it or think of it except when we are startled by an unusually disastrous outburst. Even the petty little frauds which contrive to filch a few thousands each from idiotic subscribers cost the country a good many millions in the course of a year. When a hot fit of bubble promoting is on, forty or fifty millions sterling may vanish in no time, and to that extent not only the wealth, but the productive power of the country is permanently crippled. So far the Germans have been saved from our promoting manias, and the great advantage which our larger resources should have given us is largely counterbalanced by the more efficient use they make of their smaller means. This distinction runs through every department of financial and commercial enterprise in which Anglo-German competition is keenest. It springs from a radical, one might almost say a racial, difference in the economic genius of the two peoples. Our national forte is individuality as that of the Germans is organization.

Long-toed Shoes.

From The Gentleman's Magazine.

From the reign of William Rufus to that of Henry VII. fashion appears to have played the most remarkable freaks with shoes and boots—all the more remarkable because played in a practical very much out-of-door and athletic-recreations age with articles of dress which were necessities for use, not mere accessories capable of any amount of grotesque absurdity. Fashion dictated as enormous absurdities as it did, say, among our grandfathers in the days of the Regency. Especially during the reigns of the Plantagenets the shoe craze attained its most extensive dimensions. Richard II.—who was, however, in "his earlier manner"—a far more strong-minded and clever Prince than usually deemed—had later a good deal of George IV. in him as regards interest in matters sartorial.

Probably the high-water mark of shoe folly was reached at that Plantagenet period when the leaders of fashion had the points of their shoes turned up much in the fashion of a ram's horn, and linked up with golden chains to the knight's knees. Grim-visaged war had here, indeed, smoothed his wrinkled front, for the doughty warrior, however renowned in battle or at the chase of the tall deer—the only occupations for nous autres for centuries—could not, when wearing these up-to-date shoes, get his feet into the stirrups. And walking, except on the most level surfaces—which in the days of rush-strewn floors and roads of the most rudimentary kinds, such as Arthur Young hundreds of years later execrated, must have been rare—difficult indeed. Fulke, Count of Anjou, is credited with having originated the fashion, to hide an excrescence of one of his feet. Sometimes at the extreme point of the shoe in ultra fashionable wearers some fantastic device, as for instance a bird, was carved.

John's Way.

J. Bull hes got his faults, maybe;
There's furrin chaps es good es he,
An' some thet's wuss, 'twixt you an' me,
Whatever folk may say;
He's glad tu tread a peaceful track
Till others hits him fust, ker-smack!
An' then he'll turn tu hit 'em back,
Fer thet's John's way!

Et's true he likes tu strut aroun'
An' go paradin' up an' down
With all the rabble in the town
A-shoutin' out, "Hooray!"
He'll boast afore a fight is won,
But, when the little job's begun,
He don't leave off until it's done,
Fer thet's John's way!

"I know thet I'm a man of worth,"
I'll lick the biggest foe on earth
Es dares me tu the fray!"
Such blusterin' mayn't be highly bred,
But, all the same, he goes ahead
An' does exactly what he said,
Fer thet's John's way!

John hes a foolish trait or so,
He's vain, he's noisy, yet we know
He hes a lion heart, although
He tries so hard ter bray;
There's some, they're foolish critters, too,
Thet brags of what they dursn't do;
J. B.—he meks his boasts come true,
Fer thet's John's way!

An', after all, he might be wuss.
He ain't a vicious kind uv cuss,
But ruther, like the rest uv us,
A mixter—gold an' clay;
He hates his foe, like wusser men,
An' knocks him flat, b'gosh!—but then
He'll help him tu his feet agen,
Fer thet's John's way!

It's jest his way—he can't be got
Ter fight till he has talked a lot
Of all he's done afore, an' what
He's goin' ter do to-day;
But when he's took his coat off—my!
Yer can't prevent him ef yer try,
He'll do the business thoroughly,
Fer thet's John's way!

The Stars as Timekeepers.

From Appletons' Popular Science Monthly.

Probably the majority of people suppose that the observatories obtain the correct time from the sun. When the average man wishes to give his watch the highest praise he says, "It regulates the sun," not being aware that a watch which would keep with the sun around the year would have to be nearly as bad as Cap'n Cuttle's. The farmer may safely decide when to go in to dinner by the sun, but if the mariner was as confident that the sun marked always the correct time as the farmer is he would be sure to be at times two or three hundred miles from where he thought he was. In other words, the sun—that is, a sundial—is only correct on a few days in each year, and during the intervening times gets as far as a whole quarter hour fast or slow.

These variations of the sun from uniform time caused no end of trouble between the astronomers and the fine clockmakers before it was discovered that sun time is subject to such irregularities. The better the clock, the worse it often seemed to go.

But as the variations in sun time are now accurately known, correct time might be obtained from the sun by making proper allowance, were it not for the difficulty of observing its position with sufficient exactness. The large disk of the sun cannot be located so perfectly as can the single point which a star makes. For this reason astronomers depend almost wholly upon the stars for obtaining accurate time. It is the method of doing this which we propose to describe.

There are several hundred stars whose positions have been established with the greatest accuracy by the most careful observations at a number of the principal observatories of the world. If a star's exact position is known, it can readily be calculated when it will pass the meridian of any given place—that is, the instant it will cross a north and south line through the place. The data regarding these stars are all published in the nautical almanacs, which are got out by several different observatories for the use of navigators and all others who have uses for them. These stars are known as "clock stars."

Malibran Sings.

From The Cornhill.

In the Autumn of 1832 Malibran was at Rome, and went one afternoon to the Villa Pamphili with Horace Vernet, then Director of the French Academy at Rome, his wife and beautiful daughter, Louise Vernet, and Legouvé. The great singer had been mute for several days, such periods of silence in her art being not unusual with her. Walking through the grounds they came to one of those delicious corners of umbrageous green so characteristic of a Roman garden, where a little fountain gushed from under a low terrace, approached by two short flights of marble steps and shaded by tall cypresses and pines. The freshness of the water and the heat of the day tempted Malibran, who ran like a child to hold her head under the fountain; her hair was soon wetted, and she laughingly shook down its raven-black coils to dry; the sunlight, piercing through the trees like little golden arrows, caught the crystallized drops of water on her head and made them shine like tiny stars. She suddenly looked up at the platform above the fountain; her countenance changed, the laughter ceased, and gave way to a serious and strange expression; she slowly mounted the marble steps, and, reaching the platform, lifted her face toward the heavens, looking like a priestess with her flowing hair, and intoned the great air from Norma, "Casta diva."

The surprise, the singularity of the mise en scène, the delight of, hearing her in such a spot after a long silence, her own emotion at hearing her voice joined with that of the murmuring fountain, the breath of the air, and all the splendors of that garden made such an impression on the small group of listeners looking up at her on her pedestal that none of them could restrain their tears.

That Curious Boss.

Jacob A. Riis in The Atlantic.

In his private capacity I have real regard for him. As a politician and a boss I have none at all. I am aware that this is taking low ground in a discussion of this kind, but I am concerned in telling you what I know about him, not about what you may be thinking of me. He was once a Police Justice—at that time he kept a saloon—and I never knew one with more common-sense, which happens to be the one quality especially needed in that office. Up to the point where politics came in I could depend upon him entirely. At that point he let me know bluntly that he was in the habit of running his district to suit himself. The way he did it brought him under the just accusation of being guilty of every kind of rascality known to politics.

When next our paths would cross each other it would very likely be on some errand of mercy, to which his feet were always swift. I recall the distress of a dear and gentle lady at whose dinner table I once took his part. She could not believe that there was any good in him; what he did must be done for effect. Some time after that she wrote, asking me to look after an east side family that was in great trouble. It was during the severe cold spell of last Winter, and there was need of haste. I went over at once, but although I had lost no time. I found my friend the boss ahead of me. It was a real pleasure to me to be able to report to my correspondent that he had seen to their comfort, and to add that it was unpolitical charity altogether. The family was that of a Jewish widow with a lot of little children. He is a Roman Catholic. There were no mad, consequently no voters, in the house, which was far out of his district, anyhow, and as for effect, he was rather shamefaced at my catching him at it. I do not believe that a soul has ever heard of the case from him to this day.

He Knew Playfair.

From Letters and Correspondence of Lyon Playfair.

The manager of the phosphate mine was a Scotchman, tall, big-boned, with the strongest Glasgow Doric in his tongue. At first he was obdurate, and desired us to leave the ground and to drop the specimens which we had taken before he appeared. At last I addressed him in good Scotch, and asked him whether he thought I was a mining adventurer. "Ay! that's just what ye are."

"No," I replied, "I am a Scotch professor."

"Then, if ye are, ye'll be havin' a name."

"My name," I said, "is Playfair."

"Man!" said my Scotch friend, "are ye Lyon Playfair?"

I assured him I was, but expressed surprise that he knew the name, to which he replied, looking from his six feet two inches with compassion on my five feet four inches, "Hoot, mon, yer name's traveled further than yer wee legs will ever carry ye."

From Blackwood

A young girl endowed with no special beauty of feature, but possessing an air and a hint of devilry that would have rendered attractive one much less favored, bounded into the centre of the room and began to dance in the circumscribed space between the lamps. It amazed us to find in the untutored performance of this little South Sea Islander a grace and verve rarely equaled behind the footlights in the civilized world. That her dance was original the interest displayed by the native assembly assured us. Indeed, it seemed an improvisation of the moment. After some preliminary steps in time to the singing, "Cutty Sark"—as we christened her, for a reason too obvious to require explanation—became bolder, and, making the Captain her objective, danced at him.

Encouraged by our applause, her abandon increased, until in a moment of extreme audacity she advanced close and snatching up the gold-laced uniform cap which lay on the mat at his feet, clapped it on her own head, and, thus arrayed, executed a rapid pas seul. Then, overcome with sudden shyness, she threw the cap down before him, and, darting out of the circle, concealed herself behind the singers.

The Model's Hard Trial.

Miss Siddal had a trying experience. * * * In order that the artist might get the proper set of the garments in water, and the right atmosphere and aqueous effects, she had to lie in a large bath filled with water, which was kept at an even temperature by lamps placed beneath. One day, just as the picture was nearly finished, the lamps went out unnoticed by the artist, who was so intensely absorbed in his work that he thought of nothing else, and the poor lady was kept floating in the cold water till she was nearly benumbed. She herself never complained of this, but the result was that she contracted a severe cold, and her father (an auctioneer at Oxford) wrote to Millais threatening him with an action of £50 damages for his carelessness. Millais paid the doctor's bill, and Miss Siddal, quickly recovering, was none the worse for her cold bath.

Missing.

From Cassell's Magazine.

The Police Inspector said: "About ten years ago I was watching some workmen pulling down a row of old riverside houses that had had a desperately bad reputation time out of mind, and I can recollect what a start it gave me when they showed me that nearly every house had a great trap-door through which anything could be dropped into the race of the tide below. Many a poor chap had gone to his death that way, I'll go bail. But I can tell you a curious thing that happened only the other day. A man had been drugged and robbed, but he told us that before he became insensible he had managed to lock and bolt his door, and locked and bolted it was when he came round again. How they had got in and robbed him he couldn't imagine. Well, we searched about and finally discovered that the door was really two doors one within another. He had locked and bolted the inner door into the frame safe enough; but then the frame itself was only another door with separate hinges of its own."

"I suppose the list of those reported missing is quite a short one in these days, is it not?"

"Some eighteen to twenty thousand a year! But don't look so startled. More than three-quarters of them turn up again in some way or other. You see, the list includes strayed children and runaway boys to begin with. Then there are the men who get locked up at night for something or other, and either are too careless or too ashamed to send to their wives, with the result that the poor women rush off to the nearest station in the morning to make inquiries. Quite a number of men go and hide after quarreling with their wives. Why, I came across a case the other day where a man had lived for four years within half a mile of the wife he'd deserted without her finding him. A big town is the only safe place for a fellow that's 'wanted' to hide comfortably."

The Ripening.

O yast, unwieldy land of ours!
Like some huge Titan boy thou art
Whose young blood surges through his heart
In a crude strife of powers,
Until some tingling moment when
One cry wrings all true souls, and then
Thou standest in the strength of wrath and tears—
Thou gatherest all thyself to tower above thy peers!

Thee, new-born far beyond the main,
God cradled in a new-found clime
That wistful Europe's dreams sublime
Might not seem all in vain:
Hope, reawakening at thy birth,
Thrilled the droopt songsters of the earth
To brief ecstatic joy. Erelong in thee
Shall they behold the pledge of one Humanity?

The nations, ay, the nations wait
Thy ripening. Shall they lift their eyes
To see thee knit thy thews and rise,
Single, and whole, and great?
Not sooner for the bugle-call,
Not sooner for the sound of all
The cannonades that roar beneath the sun.
Knowledge and Love and Toil shall slowly make thee one.

Must Hope be sung in sweet, sad wails
By Europe's rich-voiced nightingales,
Bleeding against a thorn?
Come, New-World Lark! Come, future seer—
In thy strong chanting men shall hear
Love dominant through the triumph hymn of Life,
While long-retreating drums beat the dead march of strife.

From a Funeral Sermon.

From The Fortnightly.

A wonderful piece of self-analysis, worthy of St. Augustine, which occurs in one of John Donne's funeral sermons, gives poignant expression to what must doubtless have been a common condition of so sensitive a brain. "I throw myself down in my chamber, and I call in and invite God and His angels together, and when they are there I neglect God and His angels for the noise of a fly, for the rattling of a coach, for the whining of a dog; I talk on in the same posture of prayer, eyes lifted up, knees bowed down, as though I prayed to God; and if God should ask me when I last thought of God in that prayer I cannot tell. Sometimes I find that I forgot what I was about, but when I began to forget it I cannot tell. A memory of yesterday's pleasures, a fear of to-morrow's dangers, a straw under my knee, a noise in mine ear, a chimera in my brain, troubles me in my prayer." It is this brain, turned inward upon itself and darting out on every side in purely random excursions that was responsible, I cannot doubt, for all the contradictions of a career in which the inner logic is not at first apparent.

What Wordsworth Would Have Walked For.

Andrew Lang in Longman's.

Wordsworth was "literary," but Wordsworth would not have risen early and walked far to get a new poem by Scott or Byron. No, he could wait for these with resignation; he was not in a hurry. But he rose early and walked long miles to get the newspaper during the Peninsular war. The majority of mankind is like Wordsworth in this respect. To study literature demands an effort of self-detachment. We must leave the world, and the hour, and the events. We must busk ourselves for a voyage into the past, or into time that never was or will be. We must abandon creatures of flesh and blood for the society of dreams or of the dead. To us, the little bookish minority, the effort is easy. We have not loved the world, nor the world us—the world as it stands. We are more at home under some departed Henry, James, or George, than under her present Majesty, who is so much better than any George, James, Charles, or Henry. We are more intimate with Falstaff, Hamlet, Athos, Dugald Dalgetty, or Colonel Esmond than with Mr. Chamberlain or M. Labori; more interested in Strafford than in Capt. Dreyfus. I am, say, more concerned to discover that Patrick Graham did not stay in Rome from 1466 to 1473, (as all the historians have declared,) or that Campbell of Cawdor killed Maclean in 1523, (not, O my erring brothers, in 1427,) than in the date of the bordereau. But this posture is inhuman, and we cannot ask humanity not to be human.

The Woman Outwitted. 1685.

Not far from hence there dwelt an honest man, a Weaver.
He had a wife, she was witty and fair, but her wit it did deceive her;
She was a grain too light, she calls him Fool and Ninny:
Which made the Man then often say, "I'll go unto Virginny."

* * * * * * *

But when she saw that he was gone, and that she there was stay'd,
She bitterly did wail and weep, and said she was betray'd;
"[O stay!] take me with you," said she, "I'll never more offend thee."
He cry'd, "Farewell, sweet wife, adieu! God send you to Virginny."

Then presently they hoist up sail, and had good wind and weather;
And seven long weeks they were at sea, before that they came thither;
He for a maiden sold her there, for fifty pounds in money,
And she another Husband had, when she came to Virginny.

They [man and wife] being parted thus, so many leagues asunder,
He carries money in his purse, there's none to keep him under,
But [here he] governs all at home, and with his friends lives merry;
Now many one doth title him a Merchant of Virginny.

A Sister-in-Law's Failings.

From "Rural Life," by Caroline Gearey.

One day, when I went to visit some old people I had made friends with, I found an elderly man sitting in their cottage in an attitude of grief, his face buried in his hands. The old lady introduced him as her brother, who had lately lost his wife.

"Was your sister-in-law a very sweet character?" I asked, when the grief-stricken widower had taken his departure; "your brother seemed to be greatly mourning his loss."

"Sweet!" replied the old lady. "Lor' bless yer, no, mem. Why, she warn't niver no sort o' wife from the very fust. I can remember her: a great big gal as allus wanted her own way, and wouldn't niver do nothink to please nobody. Not a pusson, if I may say so, as I ever tuk to. Yer know, mem," she added, "I always do say that yer can put up with yer own flesh and blood, same as yer can with yer own arms and legs—not that my legs are good for much now, being as stiff as two postes; but when it comes to them as ain't no flesh and blood relations, it do come 'ard, it do, to have to put up with their failin's."

Money No Object.

From Walpole's Letters.

"I liked her spirit (Fanny Murray's) in an instance I heard t'other night. She was complaining of want of money; Sir Richard Atkins immediately gave her a twenty-pound note. She said, 'D—n your twenty pounds! What does it signify?' clapped it between two pieces of bread and butter, and ate it."

Actors' Salaries.

From The Ladies' Home Journal.

Salaries vary with circumstances. The manager may find at $25 a week a player whose moderate talent exactly fits a part of considerable importance. He may have to pay $150 if the rôle is singular and fit candidates scarce. If he wants celebrity in addition to ability, he may be willing to make the salary $500 a week. In that case he takes into account the public value of the name and makes a feature of it in his advertisements. Not more than ten actors in America, aside from the stars, receive as much as $250 a week, and not more than five actresses are paid this amount. In fact, $150 a week is exceptional, and $100 will engage an excellent hero or heroine, a fine comedian, or a delineator of eccentric character. The wages run down to $75 for a soubrette, ingénue, or old man, to $75 for a old woman, juvenile man, or juvenile, and go along to utility and chorus men and women at $12 to $18 a week. Those are the wages of thoroughly competent actors in companies of good grade.

John Wesley.

Augustine Birrell in Scribner's.

John Wesley contested the three kingdoms in the cause of Christ during a campaign which lasted forty years. He did it for the most part on horseback. He paid more turnpikes than any man who ever bestrode a beast. Eight thousand miles was his annual record for many a long year, during each of which he seldom preached less frequently than 5,000 times. Had he but preserved his scores at all the inns where he lodged, they would have made by themselves a history of prices. And throughout it all he never knew what depression of spirits meant—though he had much to try him, suits in chancery and a jealous wife.

In the course of this unparalleled contest Wesley visited again and again the most out-of-the-way districts—the remotest corners of England—places which to-day lie far removed even from the searcher after the picturesque. In 1890, when the map of England looks like a gridiron of railways, none but the sturdiest of pedestrians, the most determined of cyclists can retrace the steps of Wesley and his horse and stand by the rocks and the natural amphitheatres in Cornwall and Northumberland, in Lancashire and Berkshire, where he preached his gospel to the heathen. Exertion so prolonged, enthusiasm so sustained, argues a remarkable man, while the organization he created, the system he founded, the view of life he promulgated, is still a great fact among us. No other name than Wesley's lies embalmed as his does.

"There is not such a thing as a decent old woman left. Everybody curls their hair, shows their neck, and wears pink, but your humble servant. People who have covered their heads for forty years now leave off their caps, and think it becomes them; in short, we try to outdo our patterns, the French, in every ridiculous vanity. Lady Northumberland gave an entertainment last week, in which was an artificial goose in her feasthers, and a hen with seven little chickens. The dessert was a landscape, with gates, stiles, and cornfields; but I have, I am afraid, tired you with the account of such follies!"

Kissing and Hugging Take Time.

From a Letter of Lewis Carroll's.

It's all very well for you and Nellie and Emsie to unite in millions of hugs and kisses, but please consider the time it would occupy your poor old very busy uncle. Try hugging and kissing Emsie for a minute by the watch, and I don't think you'll manage it more than twelve hours a day.

Whittier's Predicament.

"I must tell thee something droll. Last week the Amoskeag Veterans from New Hampshire, and a Massachusetts company, with military bands, came and paraded before our house, and Gov. Smyth of New Hampshire and one or two other officers called on me. When they left and I stepped out to see them civilly off, the men in epaulets got up a grand military salute, with music and three cheers to wind up with! Was ever a Quaker in such a predicament? I did. I fear, somewhat compromise myself by lifting, almost involuntarily, my hand to my hat—but I resisted the temptation and only pulled my hat lower down over my brows by way of testimony."

On a Camel.

From "In Moorish Captivity," by Henry M. Grey.

"The sensation has been likened to that which would be felt by mounting a stool placed on a springless cart driven over a plowed field. I found it all that, and more. Next to walking barefoot in chains, riding on camelback is, in the eyes of the Moors, the worst degradation they can put upon their prisoners."

England's Ruling Capacity.

From "Present-Day Egypt." F. C. Penfield.

England possesses a capacity for conducting colonies and rehabilitating rundown countries which almost amounts to genius. Overbearing and arrogant as the British functionary out of England often appears to be, he must be scrupulously honest and generally capable to find a place in the perfect, organized machinery guided from London. Frenchmen say that Egypt's restoration to prosperity could have been better accomplished by them, and some allege that this prosperity is more apparent than real, charging that much is neglected in the desire to make a favorable showing in the yearly balance sheet. But a frank investigation of what France does with her own dependencies, nearly every one of which is run at a loss, gives support to the belief that Egypt is better off under British guidance than she could be under that of France. No alien power could have done better in Egypt than Great Britain has. But her critics claim to recognize scant justification for Britain's absorption of the country of the Khédive merely because of her ability to do good work there, and point to the glaring flaw in her title.

Has England educated the Egyptians to govern themselves?

Not as yet, certainly.

Paraphrasing Shakespeare.

From The Saturday Review.

A certain English Consul in Morocco, traveling to the Court, stopped at a little town. Rivers had risen, tribes had cut the road, our Lord the Sultan with his camp was on a journey and had eaten up the food upon the usual road, or some one or another of the incidents of flood or field which render travel in Morocco interesting had happened. The town lay off the beaten track close to the territory of a half-wild tribe. Therefore upon arrival at the place the Consul found himself received with scowling looks; no one proceeded to hostilities, but he remained within his tent, unvisited but by a soldier sent from the Governor to ask whether the kafir, son of a kafir, wished for anything. People sat staring at him, motionless except their eyes; children holding each other's hands stood at a safe distance from his tent, and stared for hours at him, and he remarked the place where he was asked to camp was near a mound which from time immemorial seemed to have been the common dunghill of the town. The night passed miserably, the guards sent by the Governor shouting aloud at intervals to show their vigilance, banished all chance of sleep.

Cursing the place, at break of day the Consul struck his camp, mounted his horse, and started, leaving the sullen little town all wrapped in sleep. But as he jogged along disconsolately behind his mules, passing an angle of the "Kasbah" wall, a figure, rising as it seemed out of the dunghill's depths, advanced out and stood before him in the middle of the way. Its hair was long and matted, and its beard ropy and grizzled, and for cole covering it had a sack tied round its waist with a string of camel's hair; and as the Consul, feeling in his purse, was just about to bestow his alms in the English fashion, to address it as to rid himself of trouble, "Good morning, Consul, how goes the world with you? Yare the first Christian I have seen for years. My name was once Mohanna, now am Sidi bu Zibbala, the Father of the Dunghill. Your poet Shakespeare says that all the world's a stage, but he was an Englishman. I say all the world, I dunghill. I try him, Syria, England, the desert, and New York; I

WHAT INTERESTS CHICAGO

Grand Opera Does Not, and Theories Differ as to the Reason.

THANKSGIVING WEEK'S DOINGS

A New Marriage Record and Relief of a Destitute Centenarian—Amusements After Greek Models.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Dec. 2.—Once more Maurice Grau has found Chicago an unprofitable field for grand opera, and he has announced, not for the first time either, that he will not bring his stars here another season without a substantial guarantee. Except on one or two nights the patronage has been remarkably light. Few persons were in the boxes, and only a scattering of music lovers in the body of the house and in the galleries. The Auditorium's greatness only accentuated the slimness of attendance.

For this state of affairs many theories have been advanced. Some persons think—but this Mr. Grau denies strenuously—that the productions are not so high class as in the East. Other critics declare that Chicagoans do not want the kind of music that the grand opera people bring here. Perhaps there is ground for believing that the latter may be the correct explanation. Musical men and women who have discussed their reasons for not attending grand opera have said that they do not desire a combination of good singing and bad acting. They can get the one without the other at concerts. And if they wish to see acting, they argue, they can go to theatres. The claim is made that Chicago people are not deficient in musical taste, and in support of this it is pointed out that good concerts are well attended. Those who do go to grand opera in Chicago are in the main lovers of music, and the house lacks the presence of people who go to other functions that they do not enjoy, merely for the sake of being among those present.

A considerable portion of the younger element of Chicago's population celebrated Thanksgiving Day by getting married—at least, that is the inference to be drawn from the fact that the number of marriage licenses issued the day before Thanksgiving exceeded all records of the County Clerk's office. The local license clerk is quite a student of wedding statistics, and he says there are certain seasons every year when the number of permits to wed he issues reaches exceptionally high figures, Thanksgiving Day always being near the top. This year the three days preceding the holiday were marked by crowds at the license window. On Monday 100 couples applied for the important slips; Tuesday the number was 115, and Wednesday there were 161 licenses issued, so that the three days were ahead of any like period on record.

A local story of Thanksgiving week is that of a woman 104 years of age, who was found by the police in a destitute condition on the eve of Thanksgiving, and whose wants were relieved so thoroughly that she is certain of a cheerful Christmas, and of not experiencing any pressing need for many days after that. This woman, Mrs. James Fitzgerald of 394 Austin Avenue, told the officers who were sent to relieve her that she had lived in Chicago nearly fifty years, and when she spoke of her husband he was recalled as a man who had done the first railroad construction in this part of the country. He died fifteen years ago. Her son died in prison five years ago. He was far from a young man, being seventy-three years old, and when he was sentenced to the penitentiary for shooting a man strong efforts were made by friends to obtain a suspension of sentence. At that time the mother was in comfortable circumstances, but interest on mortgages ate up her property. The police collected a large sum for the woman, and citizens who learned of the case sent liberal contributions to her home.

Chicago artists have planned a Greek harvest festival to take place Dec. 5 at the rooms of the Central Art Association in the Fine Arts Building. The event is to be a recognition of the year's bountiful crops of grain and fruit. This tribute to Ceres is to be a costume affair, but the promoters are allowing a wide latitude in this regard, and the 1,000 persons who are expected to attend will represent nearly every nation and type. There is to be a big festival parade, and for this the different studio buildings are preparing groups. Lorado Taft will appear as Phidias. The formation of the parade will be by nations, the Greek and Roman groups leading, followed by the German, Italian, Spanish, English, French, Colonial American, Filipino, Japanese, and Chinese. Mrs. Lou Wall Moore is Chairman of the Artists' Committee in charge of the festival. The members of the Executive Committee are James Lane Allen, Lorado Taft, Mrs. James B. Lord, and Mrs. T. Vernette Morse. On the Committee of Ceremonies are August A. Carpenter, Jr., James Gamble Rogers, and Benjamin B. Lamb.

One of the rarest and by no means the least costly of the exhibits that Chicago will send to the Paris Exposition is the Atlan collection of ceramics, which is now on display at the rooms of the Atlan Ceramic Club. This is the only club of its kind in America to which the exposition authorities have granted space and accommodations for an individual exhibit. Scores of other ceramic clubs will exhibit, but the National League of Ceramic Clubs will have control of their contributions. The Atlan collection is superb in coloring and workmanship. There are three vases—one a peacock vase of Persian style, another in Moorish lustres, while a third is a Chinese creation. Only one of the many pieces is Japanese—a dainty vase decorated in bamboo design. Every piece is declared by connoisseurs to be of the highest class of ceramic work.

A fine harbor for yachts is being planned by the South Park Commissioners, to be constructed in Jackson Park, not far from the site of the World's Fair. The members of the Jackson Park Yacht Club own forty sailing and steam yachts, some of them racers, and are adding rapidly to this list and to the roster of the club, which now has 100 names. In a petition for the construction of a harbor, which has found favor with most of the Commissioners, the club members set forth that they wish to foster yachting along the south end of the city, where most of the wealth and fashion are, but where the sport has not been patronized nearly as well as on the North Side.

A great scene from Homer, "The Return of Odysseus," is to be dramatized and presented in Chicago by Greeks in the original Greek. In fact, for the revival of the Homeric play, there is to be no change in the text of the poet. The little auditorium in Hull House, where the presentation is to take place on Dec. 6, 7, and 8, is not large enough to accommodate all who are expected to apply for admission. Miss Mabel Hay Barrows of Boston has the management and direction of the play, and has engaged twenty-five native Greeks for the cast. These persons are now enthusiastically reading Homer and taking part in daily rehearsals, in which the details are observed with careful fidelity to classic models. The play is to be in six acts, and it will be in the nature of a great spectacle.

Two lectures in French will be given this month by the New York Committee of the Alliance Française in Berkeley School, Madison Avenue and Forty-ninth Street. The alliance is an association for the propagation of the French language. The first lecture will be on "Honoré de Balzac," and will be delivered Wednesday afternoon. The lecture will be followed by a discussion of the author and his works. The second lecture will be given by Prof. L. Boisse on Wednesday, Dec. 20, at 8:15 P. M. His subject will be "Literature for the Young in the School and in the Family." This lecture will also be followed by a discussion of the subject.

Y. M. C. A. Work on Governors Island.

The Committee on Army Work of the New York City Young Men's Christian Association reports that since the opening of a branch on Governors Island, early in the Summer, work has gone on uninterruptedly. Three meetings a week have been held, and the rooms, containing a library, games, piano, &c., have been constantly kept open. There are nearly 1,000 soldiers at this post, which is without a Chaplain. Efforts are now being made to raise $1,300 to carry on the work during the next year. Permission has been given at one point to start a temperance canteen, and the committee is raising $100 for the purpose of launching this enterprise.

The annual Thanksgiving shoot of the Second Battery at Creedmoor will go down as one of the most successful events in its history. Rain, snow, or hail, Brevet Major Wilson and his batterymen for some twenty-four years past have religiously journeyed to Creedmoor to enjoy the competition and dinner and the goodfellowship. Private Kelly, one of the oldest and most efficient members of the battery, has been appointed Quartermaster Sergeant. Private C. A. Lundborg has been appointed Guidon Sergeant, and J. J. Stevens has been appointed Sergeant. Lieut. E. F. Koehler will shortly be married, it is said, to a well-known young woman in Harlem.

The evening parade of the Twelfth Regiment at its armory last Wednesday night was an event which reflects great credit upon all concerned. It was the first regimental social and military event the Twelfth has held since its return from Cuba. The guard mount, with Capt. Blake as Officer of the Day, and Lieuts. Knapp and Lee as Officers of the Guard, was exceptionally well performed. The formation of the regiment for review and parade by Adjt. De Russy was prompt and the men on the whole evidenced the old-time snap and general steadiness characteristic of the Twelfth. This is all the more praiseworthy when the large number of new officers and the absence of preparatory regimental drill is considered. The manual of arms was well executed. The regiment is doing good work in its drills, something like 400 men turning out weekly out of 500 men actually available for duty. Col. Dyer is using every common-sense effort to bring up the Twelfth to its old standard, and thus far has made the most commendable progress. The Board of Officers will hold its annual dinner at Delmonico's Thursday night, and all the former Colonels who can be reached have been invited. Gen. Butt, Gen. T. H. Barber, and Col. Heman Dowd are among the number. Company E will hold a grand military ball at the Lenox Lyceum Saturday evening. The regimental band will furnish the music, and among those invited are the officers of the Twelfth, as well as some from other organizations.

Gen. Smith of the Fifth Brigade is anxious to have the armory of the Sixty-ninth provided with facilities for rifle shooting, and hopes to secure appropriation for this purpose. The regiment is without an indoor range, and is seriously handicapped in consequence. Gen. Smith realizes that if the Sixty-ninth could but get the needed indoor instruction, it would result in much larger qualification of men at Creedmoor, besides educating the men more thoroughly in the most important duties of the soldier.

***

Company I of the Seventh Regiment intends to have a big time on Tuesday evening, Dec. 19, at Delmonico's, and has arranged what is known as a "Christmas Gambol." There will be numerous presents, which will be distributed to the members of the company by lot, as well as a vaudeville performance. Both active and veteran members will take part, and the fun will commence at 8 o'clock.

***

Troop C, Capt. De Bevoise intends to give an exhibition of rough riding and mounted exercises at its armory in January.

Gov. Roosevelt will review the Twenty-second Regiment at its armory Thursday, Dec. 21. Company F, Capt. Bennett, will hold a dance at the armory Tuesday. The dance of Company D, Capt. Bell, held a few nights since, was a very successful event, and the company has arranged to give another dance on Thursday evening, Dec. 21. Lieut. W. F. Harding of Company K, recently elected, has been commissioned, and Lieut. T. Stevens of Company C, who was also recently elected, has passed the Brigade Board. In Company K Sergt. L. H. Grief has been appointed First Sergeant, Corp. Seigel Quartermaster Sergeant, Corps. Schlecht and Hanlon Sergeants, and Privates Denison, Goodwin, and Foster Corporals. Company K has decided to give another stag on Saturday evening, Dec. 23. The committee in charge of the last stag proved such a successful body that its powers have been further enlarged for the next one. The prizes for the one and two mile bicycle races, over which there was a dispute at the recent regimental games, will be withheld until the wishes of the League of American Wheelmen are made known in the matter.

A review of the Sixty-ninth Regiment, Col. Duffy, will be held at the regimental armory Tuesday night, Brig. Gen. George Moore Smith having accepted the honor of reviewing officer. This will be the first regimental armory ceremony since the return of the regiment from the Spanish war. A feature of the assembly will be the presentation of the Kemp Trophy by Edward Kemp, a veteran of the Seventh. Col. Duffy drilled the battalion last week, having no field officers for that duty. The First Battalion drilled on Monday, and the second on Tuesday. The first was made up of Companies B, C, G, H, and K, and the Second of Companies A, D, E, I, and F.

A history of the Two Hundred and Third Regiment, N. Y. V. I., is now being published by P. Samuel Rigney. Mr. Rigney was formerly a member of the Tenth Separate Company of Newburg, and served as a member of the Two Hundred and Third Regiment. The history has been carefully compiled by him from the official records. The preface has been written by Lieut. Col. Sanger, who was Lieutenant Colonel of the regiment, and who is now one of the Inspectors on the staff of Major Gen. Roe.

In the First Regiment Second Lieut. Bronson Winthrop has been detailed Quartermaster. Lieut. Winthrop served with this command as Quartermaster in the volunteers at Honolulu. First Lieut. Fiske of Company B, quartered at Mount Vernon, has offered a handsome gold watch, to be presented to the member of this company bringing in the most recruits from now until Jan. 15, 1900.

Ex-Capt. David M. Demarest has been tendered the nomination for Second Lieutenant of Company B, Thirteenth Regiment. Company A will give a euchre party at the armory Friday night. Company B will hold a euchre party Dec. 13, and the fifth series of five progressive euchres will be given by Company C on Friday evening, Dec. 15. The room of Company I is being handsomely decorated. The following members of the regiment have been awarded State medals for long and faithful service: Lieut. Col. George D. Russell, for twenty years; Quartermaster Sergt. E. J. Jennings, Corp. Edwin J. Chapman, and Private William J. Anderson for ten years.

Capt. A. M. Tompkins of Company B, Ninth Regiment, has issued very complete instructions to the members of his company relating to their various duties, and no member thereof not living up to regulations can claim "he didn't know." In conclusion Capt. Tompkins says: "It is an indisputable fact that the men who are ambitious and take an interest in their company always find pleasure and profit in being a member of the National Guard, while those who neglect their duty, fail to meet their obligations, and are slovenly are the ones who are continually complaining of the hardships of the service. I feel certain that Company B has none of the latter class now in its ranks." Company C will hold an election Friday for a Captain, vice Quinby, dismissed. Lieut. Meyers of Company I is the only candidate so far mentioned. Company G gave a smoker last night that was well attended. The company will hold an election for Lieutenant in a few days. Color Sergt. Rutherford Joel has been nominated by the committee. In Company H Private Thomas J. Connors has been promoted to Corporal. Promotions in Company I are these: Corporals Frank Williams and Edward Kepko to Sergeants, and Private Edward Mead to Corporal. Lieut. Wood of D has passed the board. A baseball team for indoor games has been organized in the Ninth, and will join the National Guard association of clubs. There has been pistol practice of the officers at the range for a special prize offered by Capt. E. J. Winterroth, Inspector of Small Arms Practice. A regimental athletic association has been formed, with the following officers: Capt. Timpson, President; Corp. Wescoe, Secretary; Corp. Brown, Treasurer, and Sergt. R. C. Chadsey, Physical Instructor. Lewis M. Thierry, formerly artificer in Squadron A, has been appointed Battalion Quartermaster of the Ninth. Lieuts. Healy and Lyon of Company E have passed the board, the latter having received his commission. F. Peskors of Company B has presented the non-commissioned staff with a likeness drawn with a lead-pencil of Drum Major George W. Hill which has excited the critical admiration of the visitors to the armory. An election will soon be held for a Lieutenant in Company K to succeed Lieut. Byrne, promoted Captain. Second Lieut. Robert N. Mackin has been elected First Lieutenant of Company F.

Members of the Seventy-first and friends are particularly interested in the regimental games and reception to be held at the armory Saturday night. The events include sprints and runs, bicycle races, relay race, obstacle race, bayonet race, sack race, and three-legged race. The regimental band will furnish music during the games. The 440-yard run for the championship of the regiment will bring out some fast men. Company F is in great hopes of being able to win the greatest number of points. The Hospital Corps will shortly be provided with a new and improved ambulance, which is now being constructed under the direction of a committee composed of Sergt. Canterbury, Corporal Archer, and Private Hollister. Dec. 28, 29, and 30 are the dates decided upon by Company E for its entertainment, known as "The Battle of Santiago, and Surrender of the City." Aside from the features mentioned in this column last week there will be some siege guns, aerial bombs, and burning houses. Col. William G. Bates has passed the brigade board. The following non-commissioned men have passed the examining board and have received warrants: Corporal R. A. Crockett, Company A; Corporals J. J. Lee, J. H. Miller, and A. W. Smith, Company C; Corporal J. H. McDermott, Company D; Quartermaster Sergeant B. Goldberg and Sergt. D. Werdenschlag, Company F; Corporals J. M. Gloeckner, J. T. Michaels, F. Depew, S. B. Bard, and Sergts. E. Madlinger and P. F. Howard, Company H; Quartermaster Sergeant C. J. Cameron, Sergts. W. H. Bartholomew, Z. Zeisler, Corporals P. B. McCahill, E. M. Dillon, A. J. Cohn, and J. Norris.

The officers of the Eighth Regiment express considerable satisfaction over the recent turnout of the regiment for divine service, the strength being ten commands of sixteen files, a highly creditable showing at a voluntary parade. The services consisted of solemn vespers, the celebrant of which was the Rev. James A. Dooley, Chaplain of the regiment, assisted by Fathers Murray and Fay as deacon and sub-deacon. The music, which was especially prepared for this occasion, was elaborate. Chaplain Dooley preached the sermon. At the close of the services a detachment of the regiment presented arms while the bugle call was sounded. The members of the regiment are showing much enthusiasm over indoor rifle practice, and the range, which is under direction of Major Romer, is crowded on shooting nights. The Major hopes to qualify all the men before the close of the year. From the records of volunteer service now fully completed, it appears that the Eighth furnished 500 men for the regular and volunteer service during the Spanish war. Company A furnished seventy-five alone. A basketball team has been organized, and under the Captaincy of D. W. Frost practices every Tuesday and Thursday evening. It is open to challenge from any team. A bowling team is in process of formation and will, when perfected, challenge any team among the regiments. The committee in charge is having shower baths constructed. The committee also intends to have all the entertainments absolutely free and to make the armory as near a clubhouse in social matters as it is possible for an armory to be. Saturday night is reserved for billiard and bowling tournaments and other competitions in the gymnasium and on the armory floor. Current literature, magazines, and periodicals have been placed in the billiard room. Company C, Capt. Hallock, will give a ball Dec. 18 in the New York Turn Hall, Eighty-fifth Street and Lexington Avenue. The Hospital Corps will give a ball on Jan. 12 at the same place. Company A, Capt. Melville, has made arrangements for a smoker, which will be given in a few days. Company I, Capt. Smith, has appointed a committee to make arrangements for a combination entertainment in the company room which promises to be unique in company social affairs. Besides musical and literary features there will be sparring, wrestling, billiards, and bowling competitions.

Lieut. (junior grade) Harry Fletcher, Engineer Officer of the First Naval Battalion, has been promoted to Lieutenant. The First Division will give a theatre party in the near future, and the arrangements are now being made. The entire battalion will drill on the New Hampshire Tuesday night, and a dance will follow. The State decorations for small arm practice, Spanish-American war, great guns, light guns, will shortly be formally presented to the members of the battalion. The Second Division feels particularly proud over winning the annual competition for proficiency at sea practice with light guns off the Scotland Lightship a few days since at a range of from 1,200 to 2,000 yards. The names of the winning team are Gunner's Mate E. V. Stebbins, Gun Captains E. C. De Kay and Edwin Crawford.

SAVED A TRAIN JUST IN TIME.

Leblanc's Reward Was a Free Pass on All Hungarian Railways.

Right in the heart of the Tenderloin, on Sixth Avenue, is a little cigar store whose proprietor, Leblanc, is the holder of a free pass on all the railroads in Hungary, in recognition of his having prevented a night collision at a railway junction some miles out from Budapest. At the time he was one of the largest wholesale butchers in Hungary. Although of French descent, as his name indicates, he and his parents were born in Hungary.

On the night in question he was returning from a trip to Vienna. On the same train with him were the King of Servia and the Chief Inspector of Railroads. Nearly every one else but himself on the train was asleep. When the train was nearing the junction Leblanc, looking out toward the other track, saw a train on it going, as his own train was, at express speed. A collision seemed inevitable. Leblanc sprang to his feet, caught the bell rope, and gave it a hard, strong pull. The engineer blew a long, shrill whistle and brought the train to a stop so suddenly that all the passengers, including the King of Servia, were shaken into a wide awake condition. The train stopped within a few yards of the junction crossing. The Chief Inspector of Railroads came through the train demanding to know who it was that had violated the railroad law by pulling the rope that brought the train to a stop.

"It was I," said Leblanc.

"And what justification had you?" angrily demanded the railroad inspector.

"That," said Leblanc, pointing to the junction crossing. As he spoke the other train dashed past at great speed.

The railroad inspector apologized for his harsh words and demeanor and thanked Leblanc as the savior of many lives. A short time afterward Leblanc received a complimentary letter from the Government, tendering him a sum equivalent to $10,000 for his act. He declined the money but accepted a pass. He and one other are the only persons who can ride free on Hungary's railroads.

RUNAWAY JUMPS A WALL.

A horse attached to a runabout, driven by a negro named Lewis Jones of 222 West Sixty-third Street, took fright at Sixty-sixth Street and Broadway yesterday afternoon and ran away. The horse broke a trace and threw Jones to the pavement, and then dashed down Broadway to Sixty-fourth Street. The animal turned into Sixty-fourth Street, and took to the sidewalk, and after it had gone a few yards, knocked down and ran over George Gescheid, four years of age, of 44 West Sixty-fourth Street. The child's left arm was broken, and it had a cut over the right eye.

After narrowly missing running down a number of other persons on the sidewalk the horse raced across Central Park West, nearly dashing into an electric car. It jumped and cleared the wall about Central Park and landed sixteen feet below in some bushes. The runabout caught on the wall, and the horse was freed from it.

Mounted Policeman Gorman and Patrolman Conway caught the horse and took it to the stables in Central Park. Jones, the driver, was unhurt, but he was placed under arrest. The horse and runabout came from a stable at Seventy-seventh Street and Broadway.

LINEMAN'S NARROW ESCAPE.

On Top of a Telegraph Pole Which Fell to the Ground.

Joseph McNally, a lineman in the employ of the Western Union Telegraph Company, twenty-nine years old, of 2,084 Honeywell Avenue, had a narrow escape from death yesterday afternoon. Several wires on a thirty-foot wooden pole opposite 25 East One Hundred and Sixteenth Street had become broken, and McNally was assigned to repair them.

McNally clambered up the pole and had two of the wires arranged, when his assistant called out to him that the pole was going to fall. The bottom of the pole near the ground had become rotted. McNally, realizing his danger, dropped his tools and clambered to the top of the swaying pole. He stood on the top of the topmost crossbar and held onto the apex of the pole.

The pole snapped at the bottom close to the ground, the bottom slipping to the curb, causing the pole to fall across the street. McNally balanced himself on the crossbar and fell with the pole. Just before the top of the pole struck the ground, McNally jumped and fell on his left side.

In jumping, McNally's feet struck some of the wires, tripping him. Otherwise he would have probably escaped uninjured. He received a fracture of the nose, and his left arm and leg were badly lacerated and contused. An ambulance was summoned from the Harlem Hospital, and McNally was taken to the institution.

Had McNally remained in his original position when he was informed by his assistant that the pole was falling, he would have been caught under the pole and crushed.

COURT INTERPRETER DEAD.

Veteran of Wars Here and in Italy Passes Away.

Charles E. Anchisi, sixty-five years old, a veteran of the civil wars of Italy and the United States and a court interpreter in the Harlem Police Court, died at his home, 104 West One Hundred and Fourteenth Street, last night. He had been a sufferer from heart disease, and had a stroke of paralysis Thanksgiving Day.

Mr. Anchisi was educated in a college in Navarro, Italy. He served with Garibaldi, holding a commission in the army, and when the civil war broke out in this country he entered the secret service. In 1880 he entered the customs service in the same capacity. In 1885 he was appointed court interpreter. He spoke French, Spanish, Italian, Greek, German, and English. A minute of his death was inscribed on the records of the Harlem Police Court yesterday, and notice of that fact sent to his widow.

DEWEY ARCH SUBSCRIPTIONS.

Citizens' Committee Pleased with Amounts Coming In.

The subscriptions for the permanent Dewey arch have increased during the week in a manner which has been most satisfactory to the members of the Citizens' Committee, and it is now expected that by Jan. 1 a list of subscribers will be published, and contributions asked from the general public.

Miss Helen Gould has definitely promised to give $5,000 when the fund reaches $250,000, and Howard Gould has promised a like sum. Ex-Gov. Morton has subscribed $5,000, and among others who have subscribed are J. D. Crimmins and several other members of the Executive Committee. It is expected that a large contribution will be received from a well-known New York banker to-morrow.

Increased Value of Metals.

A Massachusetts investigator has been studying the increase in value of the baser metals. He has made the following comparative table to show that the increase in value at the end of September had been, on a rough average, about 100 per cent., as a result of the "wave of prosperity." It is worth studying, the prices being for wholesale lots per hundredweight:

THE NEWS CONDENSED.

FOREIGN.—The northern part of Cape Colony is in rebellion and thousands of farmers there have joined the Boers. The British transport Ismore went ashore on the rocks in St. Helena Bay. The troops have been safely landed, but the horses are still aboard. A provision train loaded with salt pork for the British Army in Africa was wrecked and fourteen cars were demolished at Kenilworth, Ill. The troopship Bavarian arrived at Cape Town, and, leaving the foreign military attachés there, proceeded with about 2,000 troops, presumably to Durban. The Boers are apparently massing near Colenso. Communication has been opened with Kimberley by searchlight. Boer reports show a loss of 52 in the fight at Belmont and of 26 in a sortie at Kimberley. The American Committee to aid Red Cross work in South Africa will act through the Netherlands Red Cross Society. The German newspapers in general comment favorably on Mr. Chamberlain's speech. The London Daily News says that the "understanding" with the United States has been imperiled by Mr. Chamberlain's utterances, which have increased dislike of him here. The Hermandist revolutionists captured Maracaibo, in Venezuela, after sixteen hours of fighting.—Pages 3 and 7.

ATE RAT POISON IN A PIE.

SOMERVILLE, N. J., Dec. 3.—Howard Mettlar, aged forty-five, a driver for Cawley's bottling establishment, on returning home from work last night, ate a pie containing poison, which his wife had fixed for rats in the cellar. He afterward told his wife that the pie had a queer taste.

Upon hearing that he had eaten the poison, he went to Dr. Stillwell and emetics were administered. He then went home, where the emetics worked until he collapsed. He died at 2 P. M. to-day. Mettlar leaves three children.

INHERITANCE TAX ARGUMENT.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 3.—If the opportunity is afforded to-morrow, in the Supreme Court of the United States, argument will be heard in the inheritance tax cases which were advanced for argument by order of the Court at its last term. The argument for the parties objecting to the tax as unconstitutional will be made by John G. Carlisle, and the decision, which will clear up a large number of other cases, will be awaited with interest by those who contend that the law is unfair and unjust and who hope to secure disapproval of it from the highest court.

Judge Patterson of Troy says that it is evident, from the fact that the tax is derived from the inheritor, and is larger or smaller, according not to the wealth of the inheritor but of the donor, that it cannot be upheld as equitable.

If the announcement of decisions occupies too much of the time of the court to-morrow to permit the opening of argument in these cases, they will be taken up on Tuesday.

SUCCESSION OF RUNAWAYS

Police Horse Chases Another and Then Imitates Him.

HIS RIDER FARES THE WORST

Policeman Glynn Receives Serious Injuries in Central Park, and Two Other Persons Are Hurt.

Three persons were injured in a double runaway accident in Central Park yesterday noon, one of them, and the worst sufferer, being Mounted Policeman Mark J. Glynn, who, with a companion, was engaged in a thrilling effort to bring a frightened horse to a standstill. A score of narrow escapes occurred along the driveways while the exciting events were in progress, and the wonder is only that the casualties were so few.

The trouble began at 11:40 o'clock, when a small bay horse attached to a victoria, trotting leisurely down the East Drive, shook his bridle off his head. In the carriage were Abraham Mayer, an oculist, of 60 West Ninety-third Street, and Mrs. Mayer, both elderly persons, while William White of 333 West Forty-third Street, was the driver. The straps swinging against the animal's neck started him running, and White, after trying to choke the horse by pulling the tangled harness against his neck with the reins, jumped from the carriage when one of the lines broke. The Mayers also jumped out and struck heavily on the roadway, and the horse was off at full speed, dragging the empty vehicle behind him.

The runaway dashed across the Terrace Bridge and down the Centre Drive. Policeman James Fitzgerald started in pursuit at the Marble Arch, and Policeman Glynn joined him a short distance further on. One rode up on one side of the animal and threw his arm around his neck, while the other, with a firm grip on his nostrils, tried to stop the animal's breath. This they knew was their best hope of stopping the horse, since the bit had fallen from his mouth. They succeeded in bringing the horse almost to a walk, when the animal, with a sudden, swerving spring, threw Glynn from the saddle. He fell beneath the runaway's hoofs. The horse trampled squarely on his back and the carriage wheels passed over his back and legs. His own horse, badly cut by the shafts of the victoria, with a mad plunge, darted ahead riderless toward the gate at Eighth Avenue and Fifty-ninth Street.

Fitzgerald decided that this runaway was the more dangerous, and, leaving the horse with which he had been struggling, rushed on after the police horse. He caught up with him just outside the Park gate, but the Eighth Avenue asphalt pavement begins there, and his horse slipped on the smooth surface as he pulled him up against Glynn's horse, to head the latter off, and fell heavily, throwing Fitzgerald headlong. The policeman was not injured, but his horse was badly hurt on the back and legs, for he had turned an almost complete somersault. Seeing the other horse fall, Glynn's horse shied, and, turning, dashed back into the Park. Fitzgerald remounted his own animal and again gave chase, and succeeded in catching Glynn's horse at the Statue of Commerce, a hundred yards or so inside the gate.

The original runaway meanwhile had emerged from the Park and galloped down Broadway, causing cyclists, drivers, and pedestrians to scatter wildly to the right and left. The animal fell at Fifty-sixth Street and was captured by citizens, who held him till the driver claimed him.

Glynn made several attempts to rise after being thrown, but was unable to get on his feet, and lay where he had fallen until help came. He was carried to the sheepfold near by, and a Presbyterian Hospital ambulance with Dr. Sicard was summoned, and also Police Surgeon Edward T. Marsh. The doctors found him covered with bruises from head to foot, and his face badly cut, but there were no evidences of broken bones, and the only fear for him is that internal injuries may develop. After the physicians had dressed his wounds as well as they could with the means at hand he was taken to his home at 240 East Seventy-sixth Street in the carriage of Capt. England, commander of the Park police.

Meanwhile the Park ambulance had been sent to the Mayers. Charles Goldsmith, the attendant, found Mrs. Mayer suffering from shock and severe contusions on the forehead. Mr. Mayer had lacerated wounds on the forehead, scalp, and ear, and was also badly shaken by his fall. Another carriage was provided, in which they left for their home, where all information as to the accident was later refused.

White, the driver, escaped injury. He said that Mrs. Mayer had jumped first, although he called to her not to do so, and that Mr. Mayer followed. He insists to John O'Halloran, one of the proprietors of the Waldorf stable, where he was employed, that he had not jumped out until both of his fares were lying on the road, when there was nothing else for him to do. Mr. O'Halloran, however, immediately suspended him from work. When seen at the stables at Broadway and Fifty-third Street last night Mr. O'Halloran said that the horse had been driven all Summer by children because he was considered a gentle animal.

Policeman Glynn is one of the athletes of the department, and but a short time ago won a number of prizes at the precinct games. Both he and Fitzgerald were transferred recently to the Park squad from uptown precincts.

KILLED ON HUDSON BOULEVARD

Frederick C. Mussgiller, a wealthy real estate owner, of 353 Webster Avenue, Jersey City, with his wife, Amelia, left home yesterday with their two children for a drive to Bergen Point. When they reached Clendenny Avenue, on the Hudson Boulevard, the horses took fright at a railroad whistle. While Mr. Mussgiller was trying to check them the reins broke. Just then the wagon lurched and Mrs. Mussgiller was thrown out. She fell on her head and was instantly killed.

The horses had run but a short distance when two men, who declined to give their names, seized them by the bridles and succeeded in stopping them. None of the others in the party was injured.

HORSE SCARED BY BICYCLISTS.

Reckless bicycle riding caused a serious runaway on the Circle in Central Park, on the bluff just above the West One Hundred and Sixth Street entrance, late yesterday afternoon. A landau, in which were a young man and a middle-aged woman, driven by James Dunphy, private coachman for William Nelson Cromwell, a lawyer, of 12 West Forty-ninth Street, and drawn by a small bay horse, was passing slowly around the roadway when the horse took fright at some wheelmen, who passed close to his head, and bolted. The landau struck a tree and was practically demolished, while those in it fell upon the roadway. Dunphy's right hip was broken, but the others escaped without serious injury, though the woman was somewhat bruised.

The horse ran around the Circle several times before he was caught. He was a green animal, and had only come into Mr. Cromwell's possession on Saturday. He was much cut about the legs, but was led to Mr. Cromwell's stable, 118 West Fiftieth Street, where Dunphy lived with his wife. Dunphy was taken to the Presbyterian Hospital in an ambulance, and the others obtained another vehicle and were driven away. The police got their names as "Mr. and Mrs. Henry."

At Mr. Cromwell's house last night it was said that the male occupant of the carriage was Henry Nichols. When Mr. Nichols was asked for, however, word was brought that he refused to be seen. It was said that the runaway was "nothing serious," but no further information could be obtained. Another report, from a seemingly reliable source, was that Mrs. Cromwell and her son Henry Cromwell were in the landau. Dunphy is known as a careful driver, and was formerly in the employ of Gen. Gillespie.

The Circle, where the accident occurred, is much used by bicyclists. A large sign warns them against exceeding the legal rate of speed, but the smooth macadam tempts many to disregard this notice, and the place is also much frequented by beginners, whose erratic movements have quite as startling an effect upon the comparatively few horses that appear there as do the experts in scorching in violation of the rules.

Rider Thrown in Riverside Drive.

Mounted Policeman Andrew J. McNulty reported to Sergt. Dillon at the Arsenal yesterday afternoon that a saddle horse had thrown his rider, J. Demilt, in Riverside Drive, near Seventy-eighth Street, at noon yesterday, and then bolted down the drive, being captured at Broadway and Seventy-second Street. The horse was returned to Mr. Demilt, who gave his address as 60 Cedar Street. No damage was done. The name of J. Demilt does not appear in the Directory.

CAPT. GODDARD TO THE RESCUE

Calls to Task a Man Annoying Two Women, but Is Unable to Appear in Court to Prosecute Him.

Capt. F. Norton Goddard, the Republican leader in the Twentieth Assembly District; Harold Watrous, twenty-three years old, a wealthy young man of Hudson, N. Y.; Mr. Rice, thirty years old, a lawyer with offices at 55 William Street; a young author employed by D. Appleton & Co., two "very handsomely gowned and pretty young women," Policeman Beattie of the West Thirtieth Street Station, several citizens, &c. Such is the cast of a little play that was enacted in Fifth Avenue late yesterday afternoon which had all the elements of a small melodrama.

Watrous, Rice, and the author had dined at the Waldorf-Astoria. When they left the hotel and walked into Fifth Avenue Watrous suggested an automobile ride, and his idea was favorably received. The trio started down Fifth Avenue to hunt a machine when the two young women mentioned walked by. Watrous went up to them, and, touching one on the shoulder, said something to her which she indignantly resented. She and her companion stepped aside for Watrous and his party to pass, but when they did not the women started away, hoping to outwalk them.

Near the Holland House Watrous took out his handkerchief and, running in front of the women, asked one of them if she had not dropped it. The young woman burst into tears and looked around for some one to protect her. Capt. Goddard had been walking in the avenue, and in the last two blocks had overtaken the party. He suspected that the women were being annoyed and, approaching them, asked if they knew Watrous and his companions.

"Oh, no," they replied, "won't you make them stop, please?" Capt. Goddard's blood was pretty hot about that time, and he asked Watrous what he meant.

"You leave these young women alone, Sir," he said, "or I'll make you suffer for it. You are not a gentleman. Have you no sisters of your own?"

"It's none of your —— business," replied Watrous, rushing at Capt. Goddard. He seized the Captain by his coat collar and the two scuffled for a moment, until Watrous's friends, growing alarmed, seized their friend and drew him away.

Policeman Beattie saw the scuffle from a distance, and ran to the scene. The young women took advantage of the commotion to make their escape. Capt. Goddard made a complaint against Watrous, and the policeman took the entire party to the police station with a score or more of well-dressed men following.

The sight at the police station made Watrous less merry. "My people are prominent socially. How dare you place me under arrest?" shouted Watrous, his face white.

"I am a lawyer. This is an outrage," said Rice.

"I have written books; I am well known," declared the author.

"I don't care who you are," replied the Sergeant gruffly. "Officer, what's the charge?"

Capt. Goddard insisted that Watrous be held for disorderly conduct and assault, detailing the circumstances. The Sergeant entertained the complaint, and after taking Watrous's pedigree, sent him to a cell down stairs.

The Sergeant told Capt. Goddard he would have to appear in the Jefferson Market Court this morning to press the complaint. The Captain said it would be impossible, as he had to keep an engagement with Governor Roosevelt in Albany at 10 o'clock. He wanted to know if the prisoner could not be held until the day following. This the Sergeant could not agree to, and Capt. Goddard declining to break his Albany engagement, Watrous was released. Capt. Goddard expressed regret that he could not prosecute Watrous.

"It was a most outrageous case," he said. "There have been too many cases of this kind in Fifth Avenue in which some of our 'swell' young men participate. Only a few days ago a friend of mine—a most estimable woman—was grossly insulted, and in broad daylight."

When Watrous was released he was embraced by his friends. "It was only a trifle, don't you know," he explained to the Sergeant. "Might happen to any gentleman, don't you know. Took a little bit too much wine, don't you know."

LEVY'S AID TO RICHARDSON.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 3.—Representative James Hay of the Seventh Virginia District, who presided over the Democratic caucus Saturday afternoon, obtained a prominent position and an opportunity to be useful to Representative Richardson in his fight for the minority leadership for a sentimental reason.

The friends of Representative Sulzer, who sought every opportunity to advance the interests of their favorite, gave some attention to the selection of a presiding officer for the caucus. It occurred to them that as the owner of Jefferson's home at Monticello was a member of the New York delegation it might be useful to Mr. Sulzer to advocate the election as presiding officer of the Virginia Representative of the district in which Monticello is situated. Their efforts in behalf of Mr. Hay contributed materially to his election, and when the time came for the scattered Democrats to unite on Richardson the Virginia and New York men co-operated with great cheerfulness and unanimity.

Representative Levy cordially assisted in carrying out this programme, as he did in uniting the New York delegation when the moment arrived to use it for Richardson.

THE FLIGHT OF MILLER.

NORFOLK, Va., Dec. 3.—Capt. Christopherson of the Norwegian steamship Fortuna believes that Miller or one of his accomplices in the notorious Franklin Syndicate desires to leave the country by steamship. Mexico is the haven of refuge sought by the stranger, young, well dressed, and apparently slightly disguised by glasses, who presented himself aboard the Fortuna, as she lay at the Lambert's Point coal piers.

The Fortuna cannot under the law carry passengers, but the man declared that he had much money and was willing to pay for ocean passage to Tampico. He declared that he must go by sea and would stow away among the cargo if refused passage. The ship will be searched for him before sailing.

FAITH AND THE DOCTORS

Dr. Hillis Believes in Mind Cure, and Also in Physicians.

SOMETIMES A SPIRITUALIST

The Rev. Dr. Newell Dwight Hillis, in his sermon in Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, last evening, conceded that Christian Science, faith and mind cure were half truths. He cautioned the members of his congregation, however, not to fail to call in a physician should any member of their families fall ill. Dr. Hillis based his advice upon the following, which formed the text of his sermon:

"The Lord hath created medicines out of the earth, and he that is wise will not abhor them. My son, in thy sickness be not negligent, but pray unto the Lord and He will make thee whole. Leave off from sin and cleanse thy heart from all wickedness. Then give place to the physician, for the Lord hath created him. Let him not go from thee, for thou hast need of him. There is a time when in their hands there is good success. For they shall also pray unto the Lord that He would prosper that which they give for ease and to prolong life."—Ecclesiasticus xxxviii., 4.

The theme of Dr. Hillis's sermon was the question, "What are the half truths, and what are the whole truths of faith cure, mind cure, and science cure?" In referring to Spiritualism and its teachings, Dr. Hillis surprised and somewhat startled his congregation by declaring: "Sometimes I believe it and sometimes I don't; to be frank with you, my friends, I don't know whether I believe it or not."

Dr. Hillis described the wonderful structure of the human frame, and said that the human being was intended for a life of 100 years, and that none should die at an earlier age than 90 years. "By our failure to care properly for our bodies," he said, "one-fifth of the human race has to support the other four-fifths." Continuing, Dr. Hillis said:

"The books of such persons as Dresser, Wood, Eddy, Hazard, Marston, Grimke, all represent practically the same thought, differing only in the variations of emphasis. Not a few of those who are interested in the school of science are persons of great refinement, of the highest intellectuality, of disposition most amiable and beautiful. Many of the ideas taught by such writers as Henry Wood and Mrs. Eddy are full of sweetness and light. These writers have seized upon important Christian truths that some other students have neglected, and have used them so as to fill the life with gentle trust and serene hope.

"Yet, in praising and fully accepting the Christian element in the 'science' teaching, it does not follow that we must accept its philosophy, that flies in the face of every scholar renowned as chemist or physicist or philosopher. The genius of the system is that 'mortal errors,' misnamed 'mind,' produce all diseases; that mind alone suffers; that the body can no more feel a pain than can an iron wheel or a piece of granite; that when the mortal senses say 'we are sick,' God says 'the real man cannot be sick'; that a mental cure is the discovery made by a sick person that he is well; that food neither strengthens the body nor weakens it; that strength comes from the mind; that diet, exercise, bathing, and rubbing have no effect upon the health, but that subtle mental practices can dechemicalize disease; that every apparent instance of disease and suffering is a figment of the mind, and that health and happiness alone exist did man but know it.

"Many of those who hold this philosophy are bringing their children up in a way that is very beautiful. They teach their babes that there is no such thing as fear, either in the darkness or in the daylight. They rear them without medicine, and without any thought of disease or accident. So long as the parents are prosperous and can shield the child, and so long as the child succeeds in escaping accident or maiming, all is well, but the day of shock and revelation is inevitable, when these children will enter the real world, and find old soldiers without feet or legs, and 50,000 brakemen who in the last twenty-five years have lost hands or arms. Nervousness many of the science cures and the mind cures are real cures; they are also manifold in number and important in nature.

"It follows that in these cases the removal of fear, anxiety, and remorse has been followed by a return of nerve force—a fact that opens up a vast field for mental therapeutics; but, having affirmed the influence of the emotions as curative agents, it remains for us to note their limitations. In at least three realms mind cure and faith cure have never availed for any influence whatever:

"First—Every form of science cure fails in times of extreme accident through maiming by electric cars or railway collisions. No finger has ever been restored; no organ once lost has been recovered.

"Second—Insanity through accidents has never been cured. During the late war a soldier's skull was injured by an explosive shell. For several years he wandered about a poor simpleton. Finally physicians who were interested in the case lifted a piece of the skull. The moment the pressure was removed, intelligence flashed into the eye, and the man exclaimed: 'Yesterday we were at the battle of Manassas. Where are we to-day?'

"Third—The mind cure and the faith cure avail not for changing the nature or interfering with the effects of drugs or foods. The authoress of 'Science and Health' affirms explicitly that the influence of foods and drugs is determined by the prevalent belief regarding them. If the human race come to believe that alcohol is a food, a mild and delicious beverage, rich in nourishment, we are told that alcohol would probably become the customary nourishment for infants, and that, if the race should come to believe that milk is intoxicating, pledges would have to be circulated against the use of milk as an intoxicating beverage. Experience has proved this idea to be both foolish and false, and with the fall of this principle fall more structures based thereupon.

"In view of the false ideas as to prayer and Providence, reason asks, Is there a rational ground for these great truths? Through overworking and overeating many have incurred physical ailments, and through lack of foresight and thrift many have incurred want and trouble. For such persons to run to God with their troubles as a method of saving doctors' bills and avoiding the consequences of sin, makes prayer almost contemptible, makes the praying man one who pesters God with small matters and runs to Him as one runs to a storehouse or a granary. In such cases prayer would seem to be of the nature of a premium upon self-indulgence.

"But prayer is not the asking of a beggar. On its highest side prayer has a thousand noble uses. It is the soul in its luminous hours, in its regnant moods, pouring forth its finest thoughts, its most refined emotions, its deepest and sweetest penitence, its highest hopes and aspirations in the presence of its Divine friend. As some child approaches an all-loving mother or father, as the aspiring pupil looks up to and admires his noble master, as some eager student pours out his heart to some wise and worthy teacher, so the soul pours out its deepest thoughts, its finest feelings, unto Him who is kinder than the kindest, nobler than the noblest, friendlier than the friendliest."

PRIESTHOOD CLOSED TO HIM

Holds that the Roman Church Is Now the Sole Uncompromising Defender of the Bible.

The Rev. Dr. Benjamin F. De Costa, who in September last resigned the rectorship of the Protestant Episcopal Church of St. John the Evangelist, was yesterday afternoon received into the Roman Catholic Church. The ceremony took place in the chapel of the Academy of the Sacred Heart in West Seventeenth Street. It was strictly private, only a few Catholic and Protestant friends of Dr. De Costa being present, but the chapel had been elaborately decorated with roses and the altars were brilliant with many candles. It is understood that the candidate's Protestant baptism being accepted as valid, the baptism was not conditionally repeated as is done in doubtful cases.

Dr. De Costa being a married man is, therefore, not eligible to the priesthood in the Roman Catholic Church. Having no ecclesiastical prospects, he will return to literature, and devote himself to writing and lecturing, for which purpose he has made preparation by study and travel in foreign lands.

This action on the part of Dr. De Costa will not come as a surprise, for it has been long predicted. The majority of those who have hitherto left the Episcopal for the Roman Church have been ritualists, but Dr. De Costa has never had much to do with ritualism. At one time the ritualists expected that he would join them, but he pronounced the movement "unreal, hopeless, and uncatholic in its spirit and method." Ritualists, he declared, were merely imitators, doomed to extinction in the near future by the broad church movement.

IN THE BRIGGS CONTROVERSY.

He also took a prominent part in the controversy over the ordination of Dr. Briggs a few months ago. He was a bitter opponent of the latter, and threatened to cause a public protest to be made at the ordination services. He also talked of having Bishop Potter tried before an ecclesiastical court if he ordained Dr. Briggs. He did neither, however, but resigned from his rectorship and afterward gave up his membership in the church altogether.

Dr. De Costa became prominent as a controversialist many years ago in connection with the Heber Newton case, framing and signing a presentment in connection with the late Prof. Buel of the General Theological Seminary, and the Rev. Dr. McKimm, now of Washington. The late Bishop of New York, Dr. Horatio C. Potter, put the case in the pigeon hole, and his nephew, the present Bishop, declined to take it out.

Dr. De Costa has prepared for publication a statement in justification of his course, in which he takes strong ground on the Bible question, holding that the Roman Catholic Church is the true Bible church. The paper, those who are close to Dr. De Costa say, will not prove acceptable to Bishop Potter and the "higher critics," and he will deal out to them the declarations of Leo XIII.

In his letter of resignation to Bishop Potter, Dr. De Costa took emphatic issue with the Bishop, who had spoken of "what a higher scholarship has done for us in our generation for the advancement of godliness and good learning throughout the world." He declared that, on the contrary, it was driving people away from the religion of Christ.

ANSWER TO BISHOP POTTER.

"Christianity," Dr. De Costa continued, "was never designed to entertain any comparative religions, and the system you applaud can only degrade the Episcopal denomination to a plane where the maintenance of the simplest element of Christianity will prove impossible.

"As for your own diocese—the central and most important—when its actual state is known it will be seen that it is rapidly approaching the condition of the bloodless heart. Spiritually your strongest corporations are failing. As things are tending, far-sighted friends say that if the cathedral is ever finished it will prove the sarcophagus of Episcopalianism, the coffin of its creed."

Dr. De Costa holds that the Church of Rome alone offers the true basis for the unification of Christendom, and is the only system that can meet the advanced science and the intelligence of the age. Otherwise, that the Roman Church is the Church of the future.

Lately Dr. De Costa stated to a friend that before the civil war, being requested to append the statement of his denomination to his autograph, during a visit to the Young Men's Christian Association, he took the pen and added "Catholic." In his time, however, despite his leanings, he has said some strong things about the Roman Catholic Church. He believed, like Cardinal Newman, that "the confession of error is good for the soul."

The "profession of faith" in the Catholic manual includes a belief in the incarnation, passion, death, and resurrection of Jesus Christ, the Real Presence, the primacy of St. Peter, and especially the authority of "The Holy Scriptures, which we must interpret and understand only in the sense which our holy mother, the Catholic Church, has held and does hold." The concluding words are, "So help me God, and these His holy Gospels, which I touch with my hand."

The clause relating to the Scriptures is one for which Dr. De Costa has long contended, in opposition to Bishop Potter and his friends, and he holds that the Roman Church is the only existing body that can now be relied upon for the defense of the Bible in its entirety and integrity. He intimated that he would cast his lot with that Church, for the reason, among many others, as stated, that it is "the Bible Church."

ASKED TO JOIN OTHER CHURCHES.

Since his resignation from the Episcopal Church it appears Dr. De Costa has had invitations to join many denominations, including the Reformed Episcopal, the Catholic and Apostolic, and the old Catholic. He was even invited by the editor of The Independent, it is said, to cast in his lot with the Congregationalists. An end was put to these offers by the announcement that he was receiving instruction from the Jesuits in this city.

Dr. De Costa was rector of the Church of St. John the Evangelist for eighteen years. He preached his first sermon in New York in the church in 1863, in which year he came to this city after having served in the war as Chaplain of the Fifth and Eighteenth Regiments of Massachusetts. He has taken an active interest in labor questions, and is a member of the Knights of Labor.

In devoting himself to literary pursuits, however, Dr. De Costa will be following his natural bent. He has written over half a hundred books and pamphlets, mainly upon religious and historical subjects, besides contributing to magazines and church papers. Among his best known publications are "The Pre-Columbian Discovery of America by the Northmen," "A Narrative of Events at Lake George from the Early Colonial Times to the Close of the Revolution," "The Moabite Stone." "The Fight at Diamond Island," "The Rector of Roxburgh," and "The Pilgrim of Old France; or the Huguenots on the Hudson."

X RAYS FOR A KING.

Tonga's Ruler Will Submit to Examination in Chicago.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO Ill., Dec. 3.—The King of Tonga, whose realm is 10,000 miles away, is expected to arrive in Chicago thas week from Australia for an X-ray operation. This is the information derived from a letter received by W. C. Fuchs, the X-ray photographer, from Dr. Donald McLennan, royal physician to King George III.

The imperial physician, who is the power behind the Tonga throne, did not state that his charge was the King, but Mr. Fuchs considers the inference to be so plain as to permit little or no doubt, and he is making preparations to receive royalty in his studio.

A further explanation of the trip may be deduced from a previous letter written by Dr. McLennan in August. He asked for skiagraphs of the vital organs, and especially of the kidneys, saying he was planning a trip to Chicago in company with a patient whose ailments required examination by the Röntgen ray process.

BROOKLYN ELEVATED BLOCKED

Shortly after midnight traffic on all the Brooklyn elevated lines was brought to a standstill by the snapping of a driving rod on an engine attached to a train of the Ridgewood line, bound for the bridge, as it rounded the curve at Myrtle Avenue and Adams Street, leading to the City Hall Station. As trains on the Fifth Avenue, East New York, and Ridgewood lines have to pass this point to get to and from the bridge the blockade very soon became complete.

At 2 o'clock this morning the situation had not been relieved. At the offices of the company information as to the precise extent of the accident was refused and employes of the company were instructed not to answer questions put by anxious patrons.

In the meantime crowds had been collecting at the Brooklyn Bridge Station, waiting for the outgoing trains. Patrons were allowed to pay their fares and pass the turnstiles without being informed of the blockade. The employes could not tell inquirers when the trains would go out, and refused to allow patrons to use the company's telephones to inquire for themselves.

Many finally left the station in despair. Those remaining held an impromptu indignation meeting, at which the management of the road was discussed in no complimentary terms. One irate patron proposed taking a collection on the spot for a fund with which to bring suit against the company, but no definite action was taken.

CAPT. PRICE FOOLS REPORTERS

Even as busy a man as Police Captain Price of the West Thirtieth Street Station finds time occasionally to perpetrate a joke. He enjoyed one yesterday at the expense of several reporters.

On Saturday night the Captain called a reporter into his private office and said he had something important to tell him. "Don't say a word until I give you permission," he enjoined. The reporter promised upon his honor.

"There's going to be a big safe blown in this precinct to-morrow," the Captain whispered. "I've got the tip, and my men will be on hand. Don't say a word."

It is hardly necessary to say that the reporter swore to keep the secret. He had a dream of a "beat," but somehow other reporters received the same information, and Capt. Price was so besieged by them that he imparted a little more information. "It'll be to-morrow afternoon," he told them, "at Fourth Avenue and Twenty-sixth Street." Then, drawing the reporters around him closely he whispered, "The office of the Consolidated Gas Company."

By 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon there seemed enough reporters around Fourth Avenue and Twenty-sixth Street to organize a press club. They kept a close watch, but could see no sign of a safe blowing. When they were about to leave one of them discovered a flicker behind the closed blinds in the gas company's office. A few moments later a man raised the window shade. This seemed a strange method for burglars, but the reporters awaited developments. There were several extra policemen on duty around the place, and this fact gave them encouragement.

About 3 o'clock there was a deep muffled sound, and a moment later smoke issued from the opening at the top of the window. Policemen with drawn clubs kept the reporters back, despite desperate efforts on the part of several of them to scale the walls and capture the burglars. The safe had been blown open, but not by thieves. On Saturday the safe had balked after twenty years' service, and the officials were unable to get a large sum of money out of the safe. An expert was sent by the manufacturer of the safe to unlock the vault, but owing to the age of the mechanism he found it necessary to use a small quantity of dynamite. This had been anticipated, and Capt. Price had been informed so that his men might not be unecessarily alarmed.

A HOBO'S WINTER QUARTERS.

Special to The New York Times.

GREENWICH, Conn., Dec. 3.—A "hobo" who has been living in contentment in the cottage owned by H. B. Riggs, a New York merchant, at Cognewog, back of this village, for two months, was forced to move yesterday by Sheriff Fitzroy, who, with his son Robert, made a call upon him.

The "hobo" at first acted as if his visitors had come to collect rent, but finally cooled down and moved out. He said his name was Charles Roberts, a Swede, of White Plains, and that, being out of work, he had settled down in the Riggs cottage for the Winter. He had a large supply of wood on hand and some straw for a bed. Providence, he said, was providing him generously with food.

Neighbors who saw smoke coming from the kitchen chimney and knew that the house was supposed to be empty had notified the officer. They think their henneries and gardens have been an aid to Providence in providing Roberts with food.

TO RACE FOR MAIL CONTRACT.

Special to The New York Times

CHICAGO, Dec. 3.—It is the general opinion among local railroad men that the officers of the Lake Shore and Pennsylvania Roads are quietly laying plans for a lively speed contest to capture the fast mail business between New York and Chicago, contracts for which will be let in a few months. This probably is the largest and most profitable mail contract in the country, and the time made is a factor in the award of the contract.

Both roads are getting new improved and powerful passenger engines and patching up all the weak spots in their tracks. The question of superiority resolves itself into one of roadbed and track. In his the Lake Shore, with its New York connection—the New York Central—it is said has a little the better of it.

DOCTOR SUED FOR DAMAGES.

Special to The New York Times.

POUGHKEEPSIE, Dec. 3.—Charles Peters of Hopewell, a member of one of the most prominent families in southern Dutchess County, has brought action against Dr. Leslie Sutton of the same place to recover $20,000 damages for the alienation of his wife's affections.

Dr. Sutton is a young physician who has an extensive practice in the town of East Fishkill, and is a Pension Examiner for this county. Mr. Peters is employed in a responsible position on the New Haven Railroad.

The complaint alleges that Dr. Sutton was in the habit of calling on Mrs. Peters at night, entering the house by the back door, and that Mrs. Peters when requested by her parents and her husband to put an end to these visits declined to do so. This led to a violent quarrel and separation, Mrs. Peters leaving the village and her little girl going to her parents.

A fine whiskey for use as a tonic or stimulant, "OLD SARATOGA." Rosskam, Gerstley & Co. make it. Acker, Merrall & Condit sell it.—Adv.

Kearsarge and Kentucky has been contracted for and delivered. All the armor for the battleships Alabama, Illinois, and Wisconsin has been contracted for, and deliveries under the contracts will probably be completed by May, 1900. The armor for the five vessels above named was contracted for at $400 per ton, exclusive of a royalty for face hardening, for which $11.20 per ton might, under certain conditions, be paid.

"In August and September of the present year contracts were made for 2,152 tons of armor for the four harbor defense monitors authorized by the act of May 4, 1898. At the same time contracts were made for 116.58 tons of armor for the battleships Maine, Ohio, and Missouri, this latter small quantity of armor being necessary in the early stage of interior construction. The above armor for monitors and battleships, aggregating 2,268.58 tons, was contracted for at $400 per ton. All the deliveries will probably be completed by April, 1900.

"There remain to be contracted for 7,358 tons of armor for the Maine, Ohio, and Missouri. These vessels are now building, and it is imperative that their armor should be contracted for early in the coming year; to delay it beyond that time will in all probability delay the completion of the vessels beyond the contract date of completion. Under existing laws $400 a ton may be paid for armor 'of suitable quality' for these vessels; but $400 a ton will not apparently buy the best armor, which for such vessels is, of course, the only 'suitable' armor.

"It will probably buy armor made by the ordinary process of face hardening, which, though good, is not the best, and the department does not therefore consider it suitable for the vessels in question. Armor of this kind was reluctantly ordered for the four new monitors, because the vessels were progressing rapidly, and the department desired to avoid the delays and embarrassments likely to arise if their armor was not forthcoming when required. Moreover, these vessels are of a low freeboard type, and offer comparatively small targets, while the contrary is the case with battleships, whose prestige is very great, and should not therefore be impaired by the use of any but the very best armor.

WANTS RESTRICTION REMOVED.

"In addition to the 7,358 tons of armor required for the Maine, Ohio, and Missouri, there will be required about 9,000 tons for the three battleships, and about 5,100 tons for the three armored cruisers authorized by the act of March 3, 1899, a total of about 21,458 tons of armor required in all, and not yet contracted.

"It can be asserted that marked improvements have recently been made in the quality of armor and that the manufacture of such improved armor is now successfully and commercially carried on both in this country and abroad, and that it has been adopted by all leading maritime nations except the United States for their latest ships of war. Its superiority over that heretofore produced is unquestioned, and its use is considered an imperative necessity.

"It is urgently recommended that in the early days of its next session Congress enact such special legislation, by joint resolution or otherwise, as may be necessary to enable the department to make contracts early in the coming year for 7,358 tons of armor of the best quality that can be obtained in this country for the Maine, Ohio, and Missouri, and that the provision of the act of March 3, 1899, limiting the price of armor to $300 per ton, and the restriction preventing the armored vessels therein authorized from being contracted for until the armor therefor is contracted for, be removed.

"Whatever may be the future action of Congress regarding the establishment of a Government armor factory, it can hardly affect the supply of armor for the Maine, Ohio, and Missouri, as it will under any circumstances be impracticable to obtain it from such a source in reasonable time to complete the vessels above referred to.

"During the last fiscal year 281,169 tons of coal were purchased at a total cost of $1,679,510.55, as compared with 452,531 tons purchased during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, at a total cost of $2,122,005.28. The average price per ton during the past year exceeded by $1.29 the average of the previous year. Eighty-five thousand nine hundred and fifty-three tons, at an average cost of $5.13 per ton, were purchased abroad and paid for on shipboard, and 195,216 tons, at an average cost, including transportation, of $6.34 per ton, were purchased in the United States.

"The increased cost of coal purchased during the fiscal year 1899 was due to the necessity of large shipments to distant points. The fleet at Manila consumes about 4,000 tons a month, and the freight charges alone from the Atlantic Coast to Manila are usually from $6 to $7 per ton."

THE BROOKLYN NAVY YARD.

In the chapter devoted to navy yards and docks Secretary Long says of the Brooklyn yard:

"This is the most important of all the yards, and should always be kept in a condition of the highest efficiency, in order that the very extensive work which is constantly under way here may be performed at a minimum cost.

"At the last session of Congress $987,062 was appropriated under the head of public works, Bureau of Yards and Docks, for carrying on the work of rehabilitating this yard, which includes removing crib work, &c., Whitney Basin; extending quay wall, cob dock; extending steam engineering shop No. 28, and building No. 33; an administration building and coppersmith shop for steam engineering; extending the yard sewers, railroad system, and electric plant; two officers' quarters; reconstructing and enlarging building No. 22; a coal-storage and coal-handling plant; and $375,000 to restore the steam-engineering building destroyed by the fire of Feb. 15, 1899. Congress also promptly appropriated $750,000, which was made immediately available, for the new machinery plant for the Bureau of Steam Engineering, and the work is now in progress. When completed this shop, it is believed, will be one of the most complete and efficient in the world.

"The estimates for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901, include $300,000 for the completion of repairs to dry dock No. 2, and the same amount to begin the construction of a new granite and concrete dry dock, to cost $1,000,000. Appropriations are also asked for reconstructing building No. 21; to continue paving and grading; to complete quay wall, Whitney Basin; to extend electric light and power plant; for a pumping plant for dry dock No. 3; a storehouse for naval supply fund stores; and for a bascule bridge over the Wallabout Channel."

OTHER RECOMMENDATIONS.

"Among the many other topics treated is that for fostering the Naval Reserve, the consolidation of the naval bureaus of construction, engineering, and equipment in the interest of more harmonious action; the construction of barracks for enlisted men, and a review of the various bureau recommendations as to the desirability of changing the material of the League Island and the Mare Island dry docks from timber to stone and concrete.

"The warships claiming bounty and prize money from the many captures and engagements during the war are set forth in detail.

"The Secretary says the survey of the transpacific cable route indicates that it will be entirely practicable. It is intended also to survey a cable route from Guam to Yokohama.

"It is proposed to supply all new ships with smokeless powder. The 12-inch gun has been so greatly developed that it has been designated as the heaviest gun for the latest battleships, instead of the 13-inch gun. Many improvements in naval ordnance are under way, including uniform calibre for small arms and machine guns.

"Work on the design of Gunboat No. 16, to replace the Michigan on the great lakes, has been suspended pending negotiations with Great Britain for a modification of the treaty. Secretary Long reviews also the various naval incidents of the last year.

CONSTRUCTION AND ESTIMATES.

The Secretary gives a table showing naval construction going on abroad, as compared with that in the United States. From this it appears that only Italy and Japan laid down less tonnage than this country during the present year, and that Italy alone had less tonnage under construction. The total tonnage under construction is: England, 531,680; France, 255,533; Germany, 148,235; Italy, 120,840; Japan, 130,000; Russia, 222,976; United States, 123,236.

The naval estimates for the fiscal year 1901 reach the total of $74,230,309.15, being an increase of $25,025,239.57 over the appropriations for the present fiscal year. While this increase is large, it is to be found in the three items of public improvements, the construction and repair of vessels, and increase of the navy—construction and machinery.

BICYCLE MEN WILL GO TO PARIS.

CHICAGO, Dec. 3.—Three of this country's fastest short-distance bicycle racers—Arthur Gardiner, Earl Kiser, and Tom Cooper—will go to Paris next year. Prizes offered by the exposition company will amount to $55,000.

Early in March they will sail for the other side and will go first to Genoa. Three months will be spent in that city in training. Then they will go to Paris, taking pains to keep in training until September, when the greatest three-day bicycle meet ever held will take place. It will be one of the attractions of the exposition.

COUNTESS AT A MISSION

FORTUNES SPENT IN CHARITY

A woman of gentle breeding, a Countess, extending the hand of fellowship and uttering words of encouragement to wondering, hopeless men whom she called brothers, was surely the strangest of the many strange sights that were to be seen on the Bowery yesterday. The spot where this scene was witnessed was the Bowery Mission, and the titled friend of the friendless was the Countess Adeline Schimmelmann of Denmark, she who cruises about the world in her yacht Duen to save lost souls. This is not the first time that the Duen has brought its message to American shores, but not until yesterday had the Countess addressed a meeting in this city.

The audience that assembled to see and to hear her afforded a study. It was made up of men who, through their own fault or otherwise have been abandoned of fortune, and have descended very low on the social ladder, yet without losing every vestige of self-respect. It is doubtful whether they knew that a Countess was to speak at the mission. It is equally doubtful whether they would have cared if they had known. Others there were, merchant seamen in blue jumpers, and men with toil-soiled garments, down on their luck, out of work, lonely, despondent, who had been impelled to enter by the need of fellowship with those who would make them welcome for a space, and of maintaining some association at least with softening influences.

The doors of the mission opened at 11:30 in the morning, and in a few minutes there was not even standing room. A fight occurred in the middle of the hall, and a big fellow was requested to leave by the ushers. Mrs. Sarah J. Bird, who is the moving spirit of the mission, and is familiarly known as the "Mother of the Bowery," addressed her boys, as she called them, and deplored the fact that trouble had occurred. "We pride ourselves upon being gentlemen here," she said. "You are men of intelligence. Many of you have been in good circumstances at some time or other, all of you have seen and learned things in the hard school of experience. You can reason, and have not ceased to be men and to act as men because everything has not been coming your way. The fight would not have occurred had not that man begun even this early making a beast of himself with the liquor that has brought him to what he is."

WAITING FOR THE COUNTESS.

This appeal pleased the men, and the listless look on many faces brightened into interest. The Countess had not put in her appearance, and Mrs. Bird said that in courtesy to their distinguished visitor they ought not to begin the exercises until she arrived.

At noon precisely the door opened and a woman's bonnet appeared in the rear of the rows of men standing behind the seats and down the aisles. Mrs. Bird went forward, and remained at the back of the hall for a moment.

It was "her," however. A comely, sweet-faced woman in black advanced through the crowd, which made way respectfully; she ascended the platform, and was introduced to the men by Mrs. Bird as "Our Countess, the Countess Schimmelmann."

Superintendent J. Greener Hallimond then called upon the men, whose interest was now thoroughly aroused, to sing "All Hail the Power of Jesus' Name." The habitués of the place did so. Gradually the strangers, some of whom perhaps had almost forgotten how to sing, joined in, and the last two verses of the hymn were sung in strong, hearty chorus, though not a few of the singers' eyes were moist.

Superintendent Hallimond offered a prayer, and there was more singing. Next, in honor of the Countess, Victor H. Benke, the converted organist, played the intermezzo from "Cavalleria Rusticana," the men listening with keep appreciation, and then the Countess herself arose

"Dear friends," she said, speaking in a gentle voice with a German accent, "I cannot tell you how my heart goes out to you. Such a sight as this is not unfamiliar to me, and I feel more at home here than in the big hotel where I am compelled at present to stay. Much of you I see a dear brother in Christ. Christ gave His blood for you, and you are unspeakably precious to Him. I know how many of you feel. I could describe it, for God has given me the privilege of being able to see into your hearts. In your wan, weary faces I can see that you are asking, 'Why, if I am unspeakably precious to God, has He forsaken me?' Why are you come to this pass? The text on yonder wall says, 'Seek first the Kingdom of God and its righteousness, and all other things will be added.' Perhaps you have not been seeking the Kingdom of God first. Come to my Saviour, Jesus Christ, and all other things you need will come to you."

The Countess then told about her career. She was the daughter of a nobleman who was many times a millionaire. She was taken to Germany when a girl, and was, later, a lady of honor to the late German Empress Augusta. Though reared in luxury, her heart yearned toward the friendless and suffering, and having found, she said, how vain were earthly pleasures, she gave herself to Christ and devoted her life to succoring the needy.

TORTURED, MIND AND BODY.

In this work of love she had suffered as much distress as her hearers could ever know, and had been persecuted and even threatened with death. When her father died his millions fell into money-grasping hands. She was kidnapped by persons who wanted to get her fortune, kept for a long time in confinement, tortured in mind and body. She was offered the choice of liberty with wealth and honor if she gave up her work and religion or of dying in her place of confinement. She laughed, she said, and replied that she would rather die a miserable death acknowledging Christ than possess the whole world and deny him.

She was finally liberated, and heard God's voice calling to her to go out into the world and save souls. Wherefore she had purchased her yacht (which formerly belonged to Prince Waldemar of Denmark) and cruised along the Scandinavian and German coasts carrying on her work of evangelization among the fishermen and sailors. Last year she was prompted from on high to come to the United States. She cruised on the lakes. She passed the Winter in Chicago, where she erected a shed in which she gave food, shelter, and help to 50,000 men.

The Countess said that she had spent two fortunes in helping the poor, and it was with deep sorrow that she had to inform her hearers that she could not extend material aid to them. She begged them not to believe that she was a hypocrite. "My money bag and heart are both weak," she said. "If I am living in a big hotel it is because I am compelled to spend a little money on my sick body, otherwise I should die in a few days." In her native city, she said, she always lived at the Home for the Homeless. Although practically in straitened circumstances now, she was confident that God would provide her with yet another fortune to carry on her work, and her hearers need not be surprised to learn that she had come into possession of millions which she would devote wholly to helping those in distress.

When a very young woman, she said, she developed a fad for making earthenware, and spent several hours every day in a pottery near her home, where she got a man to turn the wheel for her. He was a ragged, callous man, upon whom her efforts at conversion had no effect, until one day she presented him with a suit of clothes. He was deeply grateful to her, and thereafter listened attentively to her teaching. After a few weeks he came to her one morning and bade her good-bye. He said that they would never meet again on earth, but he hoped he might meet her in heaven, and begged her to pray for him.

MURDERER AND ROBBER.

He went away, and soon afterward she read in the newspapers that a notorious murderer and robber, who for a long time had been eluding the police by hiding in a pottery, had given himself up and had been tried and sentenced to death. The man bore the same name as her protégé, and, convinced that the condemned man was he, she tried to save him and made efforts to see him that were balked by her relatives, until she threatened to appeal to the Emperor. Then they pretended to accede to her wishes. They instituted inquiries and told her that the prisoner was not the man she supposed. She unfortunately believed them and took no further action. In due course the criminal was executed, and soon afterward she received a visit from the Chaplain of the prison who brought a message to her from the dead man. It was: "I am joyfully going before my God cleansed of my sins, and I hope to meet you again in heaven."

When the Countess had resumed her seat, Mrs. Bird called upon all those who had been saved; or who were resolved to be saved, to announce the fact. Many men responded.

One man rose and fervently exclaimed:

"Thank God, I was saved in Hoboken. He can save us anywhere."

The humor of this struck the audience and there was much laughter.

A flashlight photograph of the scene was taken, and this occasioned not a little uneasiness to some of the audience, who did not know what was taking place until the flash apprised them.

Mrs. Bird invited all those who desired to have the honor of taking a cup of coffee with the Countess to remain. Every man in the place staid, and a cup of coffee and a sandwich were served to each. The food was provided by Mrs. Bird.

The majority of the men remained for a supplementary prayer meeting, and even those who did not went away with their bodies refreshed and their minds strengthened, perhaps, by the determination to try one more decisive fall with fate.

BRYAN MAKES A FORECAST.

GALVESTON, Texas, Dec. 3.—W. J. Bryan, who is here with ex-Gov. Hogg on an outing, spoke to-day at some length on next year's campaign. Mr. Bryan states that the Democrats will make great gains next year among large classes of people.

"These people comprise the wage-earners," said he—"those who have been directly affected by the consolidation of the great manufacturing concerns of the country, commonly called trusts. In this class are enumerated day laborers, office men, drummers, &c. These are the people who will vote with the Democrats next year.

"With a continuation of such an increase on our side for the next twelve months, it will not be a question of whether or not the Democrats can win, but how large the majority will be. I have no fear for the outcome. The recent elections to an unbiased mind plainly indicate that the Democrats had the better of it in nearly all States in which elections were held. In Ohio, Mr. McKinley's home State, the Democratic gain is more clearly shown than anywhere else, except in Maryland and Nebraska. The vote given Jones was anti-Republican, and had there been in the race it most assuredly would have gone to McLean. Next year, with the present ratio of increase, Ohio will go Democratic by a safe majority.

"The Republicans would like to cover me with the glory of personally winning the fight in Nebraska. They would, if possible, lead the people to believe that there were no issues in this election and that I was so personally magnetic as to lead the people at the polls with nothing more than myself as an incentive. The truth is, the matter is the people of Nebraska have been awakened. They realize that it is time that a change was being made in the administration of the affairs of the Government, and they propose to throw off the yoke of a single money standard, a militarism, and to check the avarice and greed that have almost become the objective of that party.

"And not only in Nebraska is this the case, but I find from both personal investigation and from those who are in a position to know, that the people in many sections of other States heretofore strongly Republican have made up their minds to join the free-silver forces next year."

THE QUARANTINED STEAMERS.

No Important Change in the Situation —Engineer Storey Doing Well.

There was no important change yesterday in the situation at Quarantine, where four steamers coffee laden from Santos are being detained owing to the discovery on one of the vessels—the J. W. Taylor—of three supposed cases of bubonic plague. The other detained vessels are the Roman Prince, with 40,000 bags of coffee; the Lassell, with 23,000 bags, and the Ragusa, with 25,000 bags.

Seven lighters with the cargo of coffee discharged from the J. W. Taylor are anchored off Clifton, S. I., under close observation of the policeboat Patrol. Three lighters of the seven have served the eight days' detention required by Health Officer Doty, and are free from further quarantine restriction as far as Dr. Doty's department is concerned. The Health Board, however, is taking care that the cargo is not landed, and the health boat Syrus Edson is keeping the lighters under surveillance.

The agents of the Ragusa had a representative visit Quarantine yesterday, who consulted Dr. Doty in regard to the detention and disinfection of that steamer. This representative said, after learning that his vessel was to be subjected to the same regulations as required on all vessels arriving from Santos, that he believed his principals would arrange to land her cargo at some other port.

Second Engineer Storey of the J. W. Taylor, who was taken to Swinburne Island on Saturday, suffering with a pimple on one of his toes, which is looked upon as one of the subsidiary symptoms of the plague, was reported yesterday by Dr. Doty as doing very well. Dr. Doty stated that he was in communication with the Government looking toward arrangements for the sending of Health Inspectors to infected ports on the South American coast to superintend the loading and unloading of vessels.

FOR THE PARIS EXPOSITION.

The Prairie Sails with United States Exhibits on Board.

The United States auxiliary cruiser Prairie sailed yesterday from the Brooklyn Navy Yard for Havre, France, with the first shipment of the United States Government exhibit for the Paris Exposition. The vessel will proceed to Norfolk, Va., and to Baltimore, where she will take aboard additions to her cargo, and will then go direct to Havre.

The cargo which the Prairie has taken on at this port consists principally of about a dozen carloads of structural iron for the United State machinery building at the exposition. Materials for the installation of the educational, social, and economic exhibits, and a number of cases of photographs, charts, maps, &c., for the educational exhibit are also on board.

At the crack of a pistol in the hands of James J. Jeffries and amid the yells of 3,000 spectators the six-day international bicycle race at Madison Square Garden under the auspices of the American Cycle Racing Association was started last night promptly on the second of midnight. Thirty-eight riders in nineteen teams were ready for the contest, with the double object of gaining fame and carrying off as much of the $4,000 offered in prizes as their speed, luck, and endurance would admit of. Among these were many of the old-time favorites in the long-distance contests and quite a large contingent of men known in the "sprinter" field as yet unknown in the six-day game.

This is the first race of its kind under the Collins law, which prohibits any contestants riding more than twelve hours of twenty-four. It was this law that brought about the new arrangement of starting the race in teams of two, the idea being that when one man wishes to drop out temporarily he signals his partner, who takes his place in the swift pace of the long-distance men.

The teams in the contest are:

Team No. 3—"The Parisians," Jean Fischer and M. Chevalier of Paris.

Team No. 5—"The Marseilles Pair," Marius The and M. Pastaire of Marseilles, France.

Team No. 6—"The Two Freds," Fred Schinneer and Fred Forster of New York.

Team No. 7—"The Likely Combine," Earl D. Stevens of Buffalo and Charles Turville of Philadelphia.

Team No. 8, "The Unpaced Champions," Otto Maya of Erie, Penn., and Archie McEachren of Toronto, Canada.

Team No. 9, "The Indoor Kings," Jay Eaton of Elizabeth, N. J., and Robert Walthour of Atlanta, Ga.

Just before the pistol signal the following men of the first relay lined up on the north side of the Garden: Pierce, Boake, Chevalier, Aronson, Pastaire, Forster, Turville, Maya, Walthour, Dickerson, Babcock, Stone, Ruel, Adolph Michaels, Rivierre, Peabody, Comeau, C. W. Miller, and Julius.

C. W. Miller, the Chicago favorite, and his partner, Frank Waller, were wildly cheered as they appeared on the track. Most of the men had their backers in the crowd, and expressions of good-will hurled from vigorous lungs greeted each man as he made his appearance. Then Jeffries made a short speech, fired his pistol, the crowd howled, and the bunch of impatient cycle men on the wooden track were off.

Around the ten-lap to the mile track the men pedaled, the speed increasing during the first few laps until it had reached the limit. Chevalier, the Parisian, led at the start, and as his black head bent over the handlebars, the crowd forgetting Miller for the moment, gave him a mighty cheer. Comeau soon overtook the Frenchman, but after the first two laps C. W. Miller forged ahead in a mighty burst of speed and amid howls of joy from his friends and backers that made the rafters tremble.

It was "Go it, old man!" "Knock 'em, old boy!" "You are all right!" and similar outbursts that lent wings to the Chicago man for the time and brought him well in front. Then the scene changed. Comeau again forged ahead followed by Turville and Miller, and the bunch of pedalers close behind. How they went up and down the steep bank without pitching head foremost over the handlebars was a mystery to the bicycle novices which many of them did not attempt to solve.

The pace set was tremendous. It was remarked by old racing men that never before in a long-distance contest was the pace so swift and kept up with such energy. Chevalier again forged ahead, but his lead was short-lived. Then Miller overtook him and those same old cheers of enthusiasm broke forth. This was along during the first mile.

The pace soon became too swift for Comeau, or else he was conserving his energy, for he dropped behind and remained there. At the fifteenth lap, Miller, who had been in the meantime passed by Chevalier again and then by Mayo, pushed himself in the lead. In the next few laps Babcock, who got some cheers, was in the lead. After that for the first five miles the race was a seesaw, with Miller and Chevalier never far behind.

Chevalier seemed to have a large following, and never failed to respond to the applause. At the end of the first five miles Julius led in 13:24 2-5. At ten miles Chevalier led in 25:50 2-5. Miller, who was pushing the Frenchman hard, then passed him, and again the yells reverberated among the rafters and filtered through to the street.

The first accident happened at 12:35 when Revierre fell and lost two laps. He climbed on his wheel, however, and pluckily rejoined the racers. Aronson of Team 4 made the first change, at 12:50, his excuse being that his saddle was too low. He continued at 12:57. He had ridden twenty miles when he stopped, in 51 minutes and 24 seconds. On the third lap of the second hour Aranson fell, five others going over him. No one was hurt, however, and soon the men had mounted their wheels and were off at top speed.

At 1:55 o'clock this morning Walthour, Chevalier, Peltier, Turville, and Stone, were badly hurt by falls. The men were bruised and cut about the legs and body. Chevalier's head was badly cut.

FRESH FISH DEALERS COMBINE.

BOSTON, Dec. 3.—The Journal to-morrow will say: "The biggest event in the history of a fresh-fish industry will occur in the coming week, when a charter for the incorporation of the fresh-fish dealers of Boston will be applied for. All of the dealers in Boston will be in the corporation, which will be capitalised for from $3,000,000 to $5,000,000.

"In time it is intended to include the entire fresh-fish industry of the country. When that shall have been accomplished, the capitalization will be greatly increased.

"The organization has been brought about by John A. Neal and other well-known fish dealers, working in conjunction with L. D. Baker, the President of the Boston Fruit Company, who is the only man connected with the new corporation who is not in the fish business. The Journal learned yesterday that Mr. Baker will without doubt be the President of the new organization."

ROBERTS DENOUNCED AT HOME

Special to The New York Times.

SALT LAKE CITY, Dec. 3.—At a meeting of the Democratic State Committee last night, called by the Chairman, J. H. Moyle, who is the attorney for B. H. Roberts, for the purpose of obtaining an indorsement of Roberts and a petition that he be allowed to take his seat in Congress, the indorsement was refused after an exceedingly warm session. Many prominent Democrats who are not members of the State Committee were present by special invitation.

Moyle and the other supporters of Roberts, who are Mormons and nearly all polygamists, insisted that the party was in honor bound to support Roberts and use all the influence it possessed to have him seated in Congress. They denied that Roberts was nominated and elected by the influence of the Mormon Church, and declared that the campaign was purely political. There was no law, they contended, by which Roberts could be deprived of his seat.

This line of argument precipitated a row. The Gentile members and the progressive Mormon element handled Roberts without gloves. They declared that he received his nomination through church influence and false pretenses, that he had assured the Gentiles that his family relations were all right, and that he was not living in polygamy, and, that during the campaign, when the charge was openly made, he promised that he would refute it, but never did so.

The party, they said, could not afford to indorse Roberts in this fight, which was purely a fight against polygamy. Roberts would have to look after himself, they declared, emphatically.

The opposition to the resolution of indorsement was so strong that it was never put and the meeting broke up in disorder.

THE DEMOCRATS AND ROBERTS.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 3.—Considerable diversity of opinion exists among the Democratic members of the House of Representatives as to the best policy to be followed by the party to-morrow when the Republicans object to the administering of the oath of office to Representative Roberts, the Mormon member-elect from Utah. The Democrats have not yet conferred on the matter, but some understanding may be arrived at to-morrow morning before the House meets.

Some of the leaders believe that to refuse to permit a member-elect to be sworn in will establish a dangerous precedent and interfere with his constitutional rights. They think, therefore, he should be permitted to take the oath of office, and the matter of his eligibility then be determined by a committe of the House appointed for that purpose. This is the opinion of Representative Bailey of Texas, and it is said to-night that he will ask that Mr. Roberts be sworn, but at the same time will declare that this does not commit him on the question of the right of Mr. Roberts to sit as a member.

Other Democrats believe that as a matter of policy no objection should be raised to the plan of procedure determined on by the Republicans. An objection to the Republican plan of procedure at this stage, they assert, will give the impression to many who do not investigate the question thoroughly that the Democrats are in favor of Mr. Roberts sitting as a member of the House, and that no attention will be paid to the contention that the objection was made on constitutional grounds.

Representative Richardson, the leader of the minority, said to-night that no plan of action on the part of the Democrats had been determined upon, and he preferred not to be quoted as saying what in his opinion they should do.

MEET TO OPPOSE ROBERTS.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 3.—The crusade in this city against the seating of Brigham H. Roberts, as a Representative from Utah culminated in a largely attended mass meeting in the First Congregational Church this afternoon. As many prominent clergymen of Washington as were in a position to be present occupied seats on the platform or in the audience.

Dr. Josiah Strong, President of the League for Social Service of New York, under the auspices of which the meeting was held, presided. Addresses were made by the Rev. Randolph H. McKim, rector of Epiphany Church; the Rev. Dr. Frank M. Bristol, pastor of the Metropolitan Church; the Rev. Dr. S. M. Newman, pastor of the First Congregational Church, and A. T. Schroeder of Salt Lake City. Several other Salt Lake City clergymen were present, including Dr. C. Iliff, Superintendent of Methodist Missions in Utah; the Rev. G. L. Martin, a Presbyterian, of Salt Lake City, and Dr. Sarah J. Elliott, who has lived in Utah as a Deaconess in the Episcopal Church for seven years.

Dr. Iliff is President of a committee in the Methodist Church which was appointed to oppose the seating of Roberts and to disseminate information in various parts of the country. He has just completed a tour which included most of the States between Maine and Florida.

"We are here to protest against the representative of an alien civilisation taking his seat in our next Congress. We are met to protest against admitting among our lawmakers a man who is an acknowledged lawbreaker. We are Democrats, Republicans, Methodists, Presbyterians, Baptists, Episcopalians, and others, but are not met as such. We are here to join hands in protecting the sanctity of the home and thus preserving the life of the Nation. We are not here to oppose the Mormon religion, only so far as the religion of the Mormons affects the political interest of one of the United States. We believe it to be necessary to make it a crime against the United States. In order to do so we must have an amendment to the Constitution. This agitation is, in fact, the first step."

FOOD FOR COLTSNECK GOSSIP.

Special to The New York Times.

MATAWAN, N. J., Dec. 3.—The residents of Coltsneck, a little farming settlement between this place and Freehold, are gossiping over the events that have taken place there within the last week. Earl in the week Miss Sadie Wolcott, daughter of Thomas I. Wolcott, a well-to-do farmer, eloped with Warren Matthews. The parents of Miss Wolcott strenuously objected to Matthews as a son-in-law. Matthews and the young woman drove to Freehold, where they were married by the Rev. I. P. Brokaw. They returned to Coltsneck and were entertained for a day or two by relatives, and then left for a trip through New York State.

Following the elopement came the announcement of the marriage of Miss Annie Brindley, a young colored woman of Coltsneck, to Edward Smith, a white man of Marlborough. The farmers and their wives uttered many protests against this alliance. Smith and his colored bride are settled at Marlborough, apparently oblivious to these comments.

THE WEATHER.

Since Saturday morning a limited area of low pressure has moved from Eastern Nebraska to the District of Columbia, while the marked high area which has covered the West has gradually extended eastward and southward, and last night covered the entire country from the Mississippi Valley westward. As a result there have been general snows or rains in the Ohio and Upper Mississippi Valleys and lake regions and also South Dakota. There have likewise been light rains in Tennessee and East Gulf States.

Temperatures have fallen decidedly, except near the Atlantic Coast. The lowest reported temperature in the United States is zero at Williston, N. D. In the Pacific Coast and plateau regions the weather has been fair, with little change in temeprature.

Snow is indicated to-day in the Upper Ohio Valley and lake regions, and snow or rain from Western and Northern Virginia northeastward through New England, probably continuing during to-morrow near the New England Coast. There will also be rain to-day in North Carolina.

It will be colder to-day in the Atlantic States and lower lake region, and continue cold generally, except in the extreme Northwest, where the temperature will rise to-day or to-morrow.

On the Atlantic Coast the winds will shift to the northwest and become fresh to brisk.

TOMBS MISSION ANNIVERSARY.

Work for Prisoners Performed at an Annual Cost of $1,700.

The anniversary of the Gospel Mission to the Tombs, established many years ago by the late Dr. Howard Crosby, and continued by the Rev. Dr. Roderick Terry of the South Reformed Church, was celebrated last evening at the South Reformed Church by religious services and addresses by Dr. Terry, the Rev. Howard Agnew Johnston of the Madison Avenue Presbyterian Church, Chaplain Monroe, and George B. Steery, the Treasurer of the mission fund.

Dr. Terry said that the Christian and philanthropic work of spreading the Gospel among the inmates of the Tombs was made possible in a modest way by the contributions of a faithful few, and that every dollar subscribed for the Tombs Mission resulted in much being done for the persons—innocent as well as guilty—awaiting trial in the prison. He appealed to the members of the congregation to aid the work.

Treasurer Steery said that heretofore the funds necessary to maintain the mission had been provided just as the emergency arose, and the annual sum required was only $1,700, including the Chaplain's salary and the expense of the music and printing.

FARMERS JOIN THE BOERS

BOERS MASSING NEAR COLENSO

LONDON, Dec. 4.—Serious news comes from the northern sections of Cape Colony. The whole border district between Colesberg and Burghersdorp has declared for the Boers. In Venterstad alone more than 2,000 have joined the rebellion. The farmers have formed a commandeering committee and talk confidently of a triumphant march on Cape Town. Gen. Buller's proclamation has been torn down and trampled upon, and the loyalists are bidden to hurry to Cape Town to prepare coffee for the rebels.

With a larger army in the field than the country ever before mobilized, it can be said that the loss of 3,500 men, entailed before the enemy's borders have been crossed, is a serious matter, and, while there is no feeling of despondency as to the eventual result of the war, it is regretfully admitted on all sides that the strength of the Boer resistance has been woefully underrated.

It is now seen that the attempt to hold a useless position at Mafeking was a serious tactical mistake, as was also the endeavor to keep the large civil population in Kimberley.

Perhaps the brightest news for British readers to-day is the announcement that President McKinley has designated the son of Secretary Hay to succeed Mr. Macrum in Pretoria. The Daily Telegraph says:

"This appointment is a graceful concession on the part of the United States Government to British feeling. Countrymen's interests will be safe in the hands of the new Consul."

South African news is now six days in arrears. The censorship does not yet permit details of the Modder River battle to be transmitted. Some vague statements have been published in the Cape Town papers; and according to these the Boers numbered 8,000 men and were intrenched on both banks of the stream, although mostly on the northern bank. The British, according to these accounts, drove the enemy across the river, compelling them to retreat, and established themselves on both banks. These details, however, are too meagre to enable an accurate idea of the engagement to be formed.

A dispatch has reached London announcing that Lord Methuen is again in the field, and it is also said that Gount Gleichen, who was wounded in the fighting at Modder River, was struck by a bullet in the neck.

The official list shows that a modification has been made in the command of the Sixth Division. Instead of Lieut. Gen. Sir Charles Mansfield Clarke, the commander will be Major Gen. Thomas Kelly-Kenny, Inspector General of Auxiliary Forces and Recruiting, with Major Gen. Knox and Major Gen. Clements as brigade commanders. Gen. Kelly-Kenny has had no South African experience.

With regard to Natal, it is still doubtful whether the bridge over the Tugela at Colenso has been destroyed. There is a report that the British drove the Boers off what attempting to destroy it, but the probability is, that the structure was mined and fired afterward.

According to a dispatch from Pitter's Kraal, dated Tuesday, Nov. 28, the Boers were then attempting turning movements from Steynsburg and the district north of Storkstrom, in co-operation with the rebels, by way of Maraisburg and Tarkastad, against Gen. Gatacre's column.

The wreck of the troopship Ismore may result in the loss of 350 horses.

BRITISH TRANSPORT ASHORE.

LONDON, Dec. 4.—The War Office publishes the following dispatch from Cape Town, dated yesterday:

"The transport Ismore is ashore on the rocks in St. Helena Bay. The troops have been safely landed, but the horses are still on board. Her Majesty's ships Doris and Niobe, with the transport Columbian, have gone to her assistance.

"Col. Kekewich reports under date of Nov. 30, that the Bechuana police captured the Boer laager west of Kimberley Nov. 28.

"Communication by searchlight with Kimberley has been established from Modder River."

"The Boers have re-concentrated at their old positions near Colenso, back of Grobler's Kloof, and everything points to a determined attempt to prevent the British crossing the Tugela River.

It is reported from Frere Camp, Natal, under date of Nov. 28, that the reconnoissance made that day by Gen. Hildyard and Lord Dundonald's command gave an excellent opportunity for studying the country. On approaching Colenso the British found on every side scenes of devastation that testified to the thoroughness of Boer looting. The Williams farm and others had been ransacked from end to end. In some cases the contents of every room of the farmhouses had been destroyed. The Boers had evidently burned what they could not carry off. The poverty of the Boer commissariat was testified to by the cornhusks that were to be seen about the deserted campfires of the enemy.

The wreck of the armored train, which was still visible, showed that a Boer shell had broken an axle, which had obviously caused the accident to one car that lay on its side. The other car was upright, but both were completely riddled by the enemy's artillery fire.

Two graves near by bore the inscription, "To Fallen Soldiers."

The main Boer force was thought to be not far from Chieveley Station.

BOER REPORTS ON THE FIGHTING

PRETORIA, Nov. 27.—The Boer commander on the western border reports that twelve burghers were killed and forty wounded in the fighting at Belmont.

Commandant Delarey has reported to President Krüger that the burghers, in spite of their determined defense of Gras Pan, Nov. 25, were completely surrounded by the British and were compelled to retire.

Commandant Dutmot ((probably Dutoit) sent the following report yesterday from Kimberley to the Council of War:

"Early yesterday the British made a sortie, supported by cannon and Maxims. Under cover of darkness they advanced in the direction of Bloemhof. Two hundred brughers encountered them, and I brought up an additional 100. Nine burghers were killed and seventeen wounded. The British left two on the ground, but an ambulance removed these."

The Boer lagger at Derderpoort was attacked Nov. 25 by a strong force of the Natal Mounted Police. Mr. Barnard, a member of the Volksraad, was killed.

ATTACHÉS ARRIVE AT CAPE TOWN.

Troopship Bavarian Leaves the Foreign Military Men There.

CAPE TOWN, Nov. 28.—The troopship Bavarian, from Queenstown Nov. 10, with Col. Ivor Herbert, Assistant Adjutant General for the Home District, and the foreign Military Attachés, together with the Connaught Rangers, the First Battalion of the Royal Dublin Fusiliers, and a contingent of miscellaneous troops, in all more than 2,000 men, arrived here to-day.

Col. Herbert and the Military Attachés immediately landed, and the Bavarian proceeded with the troops, presumably to Durban.

PROVISION TRAIN WRECKED.

CHICAGO, Dec. 3.—A train of fourteen refrigerator cars containing salt pork intended for the British Army in South Africa was wrecked to-day near Kenilworth, Ill., on the Milwaukee division of the Chicago and Northwestern Railroad.

The cars were completely demolished, but it is believed the greater part of the pork can be saved. A serious delay in shipment, however, will result.

The wreck is supposed to have been caused by a broken journal, although hints were passed among the crowd of trainmen and spectators to the effect that the journal had been tampered with at Milwaukee by overzealous Boer sympathizers. These suggestions were scouted by the officials of the road.

AID FOR WOUNDED BOERS.

The American Committee to Act Through Netherlands Red Cross.

The American committee formed to aid Red Cross work in South Africa has made arrangements to make use of the Netherlands Red Cross in giving aid to the wounded Boers. The Netherlands Red Cross Society already has nurses and physicians in the field at the seat of warfare.

Chairman John V. L. Pruyn of the American committee reports that the committee has already received many offers from doctors and nurses who are anxious to go to South Africa, but he says that no American corps will be sent unless later called for by the Netherlands Society.

All money and supplies collected will be placed at the disposal of the Netherlands Society. Those who wish to contribute in aid of the Boers may send their contributions to Tunis G. Bergen, Treasurer of the American committee, at 55 Liberty Street.

WATER SUPPLY INQUIRY.

First Meeting of Merchants' Association's Committee—The Scope of the Investigation.

The first meeting of the committee appointed by the Merchants' Association to undertake an investigation of all questions relating to the water supply of New York will be held this afternoon at the office of the association to effect a permanent organization and outline plans for future work.

The appointment of this committee, which will be known as the Committee on Water Supply, was determined upon by the officers of the association after the Board of Public Improvements on Nov. 22 had granted the association's request that action upon the proposed contract with the Ramapo Water Company be deferred for three months. The investigation to be undertaken by the special committee is intended to cover the entire subject of the city's present and future water supply, particularly the points as to the necessity of an increased supply, the best sources of such supply, if necessary, and the best method by which an additional supply may be obtained. This will include an examination into the expediency of the proposed contract with the Ramapo Company. The report of the committee will be ready for publication by Feb. 1.

As constituted at present, the committee consists of Arthur J. Baldwin of the law firm of Dill, Bomeisler & Baldwin, R. R. Bowker, proprietor of The Publishers' Weekly; D. Le Roy Dresser of the firm of Dresser & Co., Prof. F. J. Goodnow of Columbia University, Charles L. Guy, lawyer; John M. Perry of the law firm of Manice, Abott & Perry, E. E. Alcott, General Manager Albany Day Line; John R. Van Wormer, Secretary Lincoln Storage Company; E. P. North, Vice President American Society of Civil Engineers; Rudolph Hering, sanitary engineer; M. E. Bannin of the firm of Converse, Stanton & Co., Horace E. Deming, lawyer; W. C. Le Gendre of Brown Brothers & Co., F. W. Hinrichs of the law firm of F. W. & A. E. Hinrichs, W. A. Marble, Vice President, R. & G. Corset Company; Frederick Potter, D. McM. Stauffer, Vice President Engineering News; R. W. G. Welling, lawyer, and Henry G. Prout, editor of The Railway Gazette. Others will be added. The general counsel of the Merchants' Association, James B. Dill, will be assisted in connection with the work of the committee by Wheeler H. Peckham of Miller, Peckham & Dixon, Delos McCurdy of McCurdy & Yard, and Alfred R. Conkling.

NEW TROLLEY LINE OPENED.

Plainfield and Elizabeth Connected After a Prolonged Effort.

Special to The New York Times.

PLAINFIELD, N. J., Dec. 3.—After several years of effort on the part of the Riker-Hine trolley syndicate in obtaining franchises and building its line, the electric railway between Plainfield and the Elizabeth City line was formally opened last night, and is now in active operation.

At the Baltimore and Ohio crossing, between Cranford and Roselle, there is a break in the trolley tracks, as the Baltimore and Ohio will not allow a crossing at grade, and the viaduct has not yet been built for the use of the trolley. Cars are being run regularly about every half hour, but until the viaduct at the Baltimore and Ohio crossing is built it will be necessary for passengers to transfer at that point and walk across the tracks from one trolley car to another.

TEST OF RAPID TELEGRAPHY.

Pollak-Virag System Successfully Used Between Here and Chicago.

A successful test was made last night of the Pollak-Virag system of rapid automatic telegraphing between this city and Chicago. The wires ran from The World by way of Pittsburg and Fort Wayne, to The Tribune Office in Chicago.

Joseph Virag, one of the inventors, handled the New York key. Although the wires were not in perfect working order, he managed to send four messages at the rate of 1,000 words per minute. It took only two seconds to send the following:

Editorial Rooms World, to Tribune, Chicago:

The message was repeated back on an ordinary Morse instrument, with the reply:

Editorial Rooms Tribune, Chicago, to World, New York:
It is snowing in Chicago; but it is pleasant Chicago snow. TRIBUNE.

FIGHTING INDIANS IN MEXICO.

Several Engagements Between Yaquis and Troops Are Reported.

AUSTIN, Texas, Dec. 3.—Information reaching here to-day from Ortiz, State of Sonora, Mexico, states that Marshal Terhune, an expert mining engineer, who has been in the mines in the Yaqui country for some months past, has arrived at Ortiz. He announces that since Nov. 18 the Yaqui Indians and the Mexican military forces have had several severe engagements, attended with loss of life.

The first of these engagements was on Nov. 18, just north of Cocori, and during the engagement there were forty-eight Indians and five soldiers killed outright.

In addition thereto there were twenty-three soldiers wounded and something over one hundred squaws and Indian children captured by the military forces. These prisoners will be sent to Guaymas by the military authorities, to be held as hostages. The place where this engagement took place is on the Yaqui River, just at the entrance to the mountains. This section of the country is very heavily wooded, and hence the engagement was conducted on the usual guerrilla warfare order.

The battle was between the main bodies of both factions. The Indians were massed in force, and the soldiers had a very large quota of men. Mr. Terhune states that at his mining camp, some distance from the scene of the battle, reports were meagre, but sufficient to show that the soldiers had come upon the camp of the Indians in the woods and engaged them in combat. The fighting was very severe, and lasted most of the day.

The Indians were finally put to flight, and this explains why so many of their women were captured, as their retreat was made in dire confusion, and the women became separated from the warriors. There were several other engagements of minor importance during the week following.

Death in a Fire Near Princeton.

PRINCETON, Dec. 3.—Henry Cunningham, a well-known character about Princeton, was burned to death this morning at his home in Stony Brook, two miles from here. He is supposed to have set his apartments on fire accidentally. He was in Princeton last evening, and started for home after midnight. This was the last seen of him. About 4 o'clock this morning Richard Sweeney, a milkman, discovered the house on fire. He succeeded in awakening a colored man who lived in one part of the house, but they could not arouse Cunningham, who was in the portion where the fire was. The body was found to-day.

Williams Confesses the Murder.

TRENTON, N. J., Dec. 3.—Edward Williams, the negro arrested last night for the murder of Minnie Elsley at Yardville, and who is now in the Trenton Jail, has confessed his crime to Prosecutor Crossley. He says he had been drinking, and in a quarrel with Miss Elsley knocked her down with his fist and then struck her with a club.

Constitution the Foundation of a Colonial Policy—Discusses Great Questions at Elks' Memorial Services.

Brooklyn Lodge No. 22, B. P. O. Elks, held its annual memorial services at Plymouth Church yesterday afternoon. The services were in memory of forty members, including Hasson H. Wheeler, Harry Kennedy, John M. Ward, Alonzo B. Pettit, Charles H. Byrne, Walter L. Sinn, Henry C. Saffen, David L. Foutz, William H. Leaycraft, Aaron J. Wechsler, David F. Roche, and Harry Gilbert. The Rev. Dr. Newell Dwight Hillis, pastor of Plymouth Church, conducted the preliminary exercises. The memorial exercises were conducted by Exalted Ruler George W. Dalton and other officers of the lodge. The singing was by Mrs. Ida V. Walker, Jennie King Morrison, Mrs. Kavanagh Parker, Thomas C. Connors, and Charles E. Walker. Gen. Horatio C. King played the organ voluntary.

Justice John Woodward of Jamestown Lodge, B. P. O. Elks, of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, Second Department, delivered the memorial address. Justice Woodward, in the course of his address, referred at length to matters of National interest, including the Philippine question, the future of Cuba and Puerto Rico, the industrial conditions prevailing at home, and the necessity of preserving in the Nation an incorruptible judiciary.

JUSTICE WOODWARD'S ADDDRESS.

Justice Woodward said in part:

"A society that thus commemorates the lives of its members, a brotherhood that holds the virtues that conduce to the promotion of public and individual happiness as the chart of private conduct, is surely the most effective instrument for civilization. That nation only is mighty that holds as her dearest possession a treasury of noble names, for names are only won by deeds, and deeds are far more precious and enduring than gold.

"Cynics may sneer at such demonstrations of popular affection as marked the recent Dewey celebration, where millions poured their plaudits at the feet of a conquering hero, homeward returning from the field of war. They may place, if they will, all hero worship in the calendar of human superstitions, and may laugh at it as a sporadic survival of barbarism in an enlightened age. But they forget that it is only a universal expression of a national ideal, and that ideals alone can inspire virtue and must ever precede achievement. A country that has outgrown the civic virtue all hero worship in the calendar of human is on the broad, smooth road that declines to ruin and decay. Mockery is the natural expression of decadence; cynicism is the keynote of despair.

ON NEW PROBLEMS.

"To conserve the true traditions of the forefathers is the only way to prepare the generations to come for a destiny of glory; for no nation can have a great future that has not also great traditions, and traditions are but memories of men. This should, therefore, also be a commemoration service in a larger sense. This year has been a year of struggle and achievement. Unforeseen contingencies have arisen and we have met them. New problems have come up and we have solved them; unexpected opportunities have confronted us and we have embraced them. And there are contingencies, there are problems, there are opportunities yet to follow, that will demand our prayerful and consecrated attention. It is our duty, brothers, to commemorate to-day the deaths of those who so recently offered up their lives for their country, who, when duty called, forsook home and kindred for the barren joys of war. These it is our duty to commemorate, for the cause wherein they fell was holy. Are there any here who would like to issue with me as to the necessity and importance of the last war and the war yet being carried on in the Philippines? If there are, these will nevertheless agree that war having been declared, our citizen soldiery deserved all praise for obeying their country's call.

"But while commemorating the departure of those whose self-sacrifice has given us a heritage of noble opportunities and a legacy of duty let us study carefully the new and unusual conditions that now confront us, that we may meet the problems of life as bravely as they solved the riddle of death. They will then have died to some purpose; for, while succoring the oppressed, they will also have saved their countrymen from the apathy that is national stagnation and decay.

CALLS THE HOUR CRUCIAL.

"The smoke of conflict has not yet lifted from the battlefield; the passions of men have not yet had time to cool in the afterthought of reason. The thousand foes of our National welfare are already clamoring for greedy recognition and for shameless spoil. It is a crucial hour, that demands the display of the highest virtue. It is a crisis in our National life.

"Let us be charitable, and solve the problem of hate by the law of love; for love alone is growth, development, evolution. Hate is decay, death, disintegration. Let love reign! Such is the teaching of the new Christianity that knows not war, and that is to save the future of the world for universal peace.

"In Cuba and Puerto Rico are thousands of fellow human beings to whom the inestimable advantages of education were never given. In carrying them the boon of freedom and the benefits of our civilization, shall we not also extend to them the long-suffering patience and the gentle forbearance that are born of charity? Let us cover their shortcomings with the mantle of charity and lead them slowly into the full light where all things are clear. So doing we shall also educate ourselves to a loftier conception of our statehood and thus only, moreover, shall we learn to apply the charity that begins at home.

"In the Philippines eight millions of people of an alien race and a most complex character may eventually become either a corporate part of our nation, or American subjects in a colonial protectorate. Whether this is desirable or not it is not for me to discuss. I only know that it seems certain, and when it happens we must be prepared to face it.

AS TO A PHILIPPINE POLICY.

"We must win the good will of the Filipinos before we can rule them, and we can win their good will only by kindness and forbearance. I have no specific policy or method in mind that will solve the intricate situation as it is at present. But there, as well as here, the will of the majority of intelligent men should determine our governing policy, and should modify our control. The Filipinos themselves must be heard, and we must teach them to fit themselves for at least local self-government, that they also may be represented where they are taxed. Neither there nor here must we be untrue to the genius of our Government and to the spirit of our institutions. Each State, Territory, and colony of our magnificent domain must ever be part of a harmonious whole and must contribute to the grandeur of the Nation. And it is the Constitution that must be the foundation stone of our whole colonial policy, as well as of all domestic law.

"The struggle between capital and labor is the unavoidable result of our civilization, the concomitant of a commercial age. Monopolies, trusts, and other business combinations are often a blessing—often a curse. Yet they are but the natural result of the law of the survival of the fittest, which operates with merciless severity from the lowest forms of animal life to the highest. We are, I believe, in a transition stage—on the ascent through the slow and destructive process of industrial adjustments to new conditions—to a higher civilization.

"An able and incorruptible Judiciary is the soul of the body politic, and this soul can only be kept pure by constant vigilance on the part of its guardians—the lawmakers, the voters of the country. We have, I believe, as able and pure a Judiciary as there is in the world—one that is thoroughly representative and sympathetic, one that is of the people and for them. We cannot therefore guard it too jealously. We cannot prize it too highly."

ALL WANTED TO SEE DEWEY.

Jane Noonan, the Applewoman, Talks with Gen. Merritt's Distinguished Visitor and His Wife.

There was great bustle and excitement about the Governors Island Ferry landing at the Barge Office yesterday afternoon. Word had come across from Governors Island that Admiral and Mrs. Dewey were calling upon Gen. and Mrs. Merritt on the island. The crew of the Governors Island ferryboat excitedly communicated to the gatekeepers on this side that the distinguished couple were due to return to the city on the 3 o'clock trip. The news quickly spread to the ferry guard and found its way among the truckmen stationed in front of the Barge Office a few doors away. There was commotion among this patriotic gentry, who spread the news through the Barge Office. Everybody in the vicinity who had seen Dewey wanted to look upon him and his bride together, and those who had not seen him were more anxious still.

It wanted a few minutes to 3 o'clock by this time, and a concerted rush was made for the ferry entrance. Several Immigration Office clerks found excuses for getting away from the offices for a few minutes. A corps of battery boatmen were on hand, mingling with revenue inspectors, interpreters, relatives of immigrants, and truckmen. Several casual pedestrians stopped to see what the excitement was all about. Jane Noonan, the apple woman, age uncertain, weight 200, when she heard the story of Dewey's coming, left off business at once.

Jane has missed no opportunities of meeting great men since the last war. She shook hands at this same ferry landing with Gen. Worth, after the latter had recovered from his desperate wounds received in Cuba. By the same token she has greeted Gen. Shafter at this spot, slapped him on the back, and told him he was a "fine big General." Likewise she greeted Lieut. Hobson, but she only shook hands with him. She had no opportunity of meeting Admiral Dewey before, and this chance was too good to lose. She yanked a clean apron out from underneath her stand, and, putting it on, turned her business over temporarily to Mrs. McCormick, who keeps a stand near by, and took her place with the expectant crowd near the ferry gate. The ferry boat pulled in at last and touched at the wharf.

"There's Dewey. There he is," cried a half-dozen persons who had seen the Admiral during the reception ceremonies. As the military figure in dark overcoat and gray mousachios left the ferryboat with his wife on his arm, and accompanied by Gen. Merritt, the soldiers on duty and otherwise about the dock drew up and gave a profound salute. As the party passed out the ferry gate somebody shouted, "Hurrah for Dewey!" and up went a ringing cheer. "Hurrah for Mrs. Dewey!" and the cheers were louder still, and the crowd closed in closer with respectful, but enthusiastic smiles and bows. The recipients of this spontaneous outburst smiled broadly as they acknowledged the compliment.

Mrs. Noonan stepped up to the couple and dropped a profound courtesy.

"Give me your hand, Admiral," said she. "Shure an' yure the greathest hayro of thim all." The Admiral extended his hand and Mrs. Noonan grasped it enthusiastically.

"Faith and I hear you did kill all thim Spanyards down thaire," she said, patting him on the back in a motherly fashion.

"I killed all I could," was the laughing reply.

"But ye didn't kill any Americans?"

"No, not a single American," he said.

"Shure and you're a foine Admiral, and good luck to yez both," added Jane, bestowing a final admiring glance on the couple as the party passed on to the elevated station, all laughing heartily.

The crowd enjoyed it hugely, and gave the party a final cheer as they passed up the station steps. Jane was left the heroine of the evening, and walked proudly back to her apple stand to tell about it. She had many comments to make.

"Sure but he's an old mon, is'nt he," said she. "An' the iyin papers make him the picture of a young mon, an' the lady you can see, she's a rale lady and has lots of money. Ah, but its a foine woman he has for a woife. She do be havin' a beautiful face on her. An' would ye believe Admiral Dewey would shake hands with me? Shure he did like the rale gintlemon he is. An' whin I told him what a hayro he was, he shmiled that swately on me.

"I had it on the tip of me tongue to tell him that if it wasn't for the Corkonians and Kerry men they'd niver a won the war, but the crowd was pressin' and the woife was twistin' her face with laughin,' and I clane let it pass by. I wonder did they think I was crazy. I wish I had taken two apples to thim. I wonder would they take thim. Ah, but this day hes been a day of it."

Newspaper reporters were unable to find Admiral Dewey in the city. Hotels were visited and their clerks cross-questioned. The clubs were appealed to, but all in vain. The reporters kept up the wild, but fruitless search until late at night, when it was learned that Admiral and Mrs. Dewey were in Washington; had been there all day in fact. It was further learned that Gen. and Mrs. Daniel Butterfield had called on General and Mrs. Merritt during the afternoon.

FALLS THROUGH A DRAW BRIDGE

TRENTON, N. J., Dec. 3.—Martin Staiger, a prominent citizen, was killed this evening by falling from the end of an open draw bridge to the ground, a distance of thirty feet.

Staiger was crossing the bridge, and was near the end when it started to open. He turned to look back and lost his balance, and in this way fell. Staiger was the father-in-law of ex-Assemblyman James W. Lanning, who is now a member of the Democratic State Committee.

MRS. BIGELOW IN BELLEVUE.

Woman Who Accused Cabman of Theft May Be Insane.

Mrs. Emily Bigelow, twenty-eight years old, who attracted attention in the Jefferson Market Police Court Friday by declaring that she had been drugged by a cabman and robbed of $3,000; was taken to Bellevue Hospital yesterday by Henry Beyer of 642 East Twelfth Street and placed in the insane pavilion for observation.

The Grand Hotel was given as her home at the hospital, and she was said to be a housekeeper. Mr. Beyer would not say anything about the case.

Mrs. Bigelow is a daughter of Robert Eames, who made a fortune in Grand Rapids, Mich., and she was married in San Francisco in 1898 to Hiram Bigelow. The marriage, however, was not a happy one, and a year and a half ago she brought suit in Grand Rapids for a divorce, but the case was settled out of court.

Boycott Pianomakers' Wares.

CHICAGO, Dec. 3.—A novel boycott of the wares of the piano manufacturers who have locked out their employes was decided upon by the Chicago Federation of Labor to-day. The plan is to induce the renters of pianos to shun the product of the factories involved in the labor troubles. Wherever the tabooed instruments are found on rent the users are to be asked by a committee of the federation to return them to the warerooms where they were obtained and to replace them at once with instruments made in factories that have refused to join the lock-out.

EVENTS ON THE SPEEDWAY

Throngs of Spectators There to Watch the Fast Horses.

DRIVER PREVENTS A DISASTER

Mr. Boynton Clings to the Reins and Finally Subdues His Plunging Mare Brunhilde.

It was like a Summer morning on the Speedway yesterday, and for several hours the crowd of spectators was the largest ever seen there. They stood two and three deep against the railing on the west side of the roadway, while on the east side they were strung out for a mile along the stretch. On the roadway were some of the best road horses in the country, dashing back and forth in brushes.

There was a runaway shortly before noon, when the sport was at its height and the roadway was crowded with rigs of every description. Through the courage and presence of mind of Melville C. Boynton, who held the reins and guided his plunging horse as much as possible until it was caught, a serious smash-up was avoided. In two or three instances the rig hooked to the runaway struck other wagons, but it did nothing more serious than to scratch off a little paint.

The runaway animal was the gray mare Brunhilde, 2:15¾, one of the fastest horses that frequent the Speedway. She had been in poor condition of late, but yesterday showed plenty of speed, and finished first in several lively brushes. Finally Brunhilde was turned with several other horses, and a good start was made. Brunhilde was leading, and looked like a winner until after the quarter had been passed, when she broke and started to plunge. Mr. Boynton tried to quiet her, but it was of no avail, and the cry to clear the road was passed along the line. The mare was traveling at a furious pace, but her driver threw himself back in the wagon and clung to the reins. A number of men rushed out into the roadway in an effort to stop the mare, but this only frightened the animal. Finally, near the three-quarter-mile post, Mr. Boynton succeeded in slowing the animal up, and a mounted officer caught the bridle and brought her to a standstill. Mr. Boynton was enthusiastically applauded for his courage and horsemanship.

One of the first and liveliest races of the morning was between Dr. Gill driving Jack, 2:12½, and George Huber behind Little Gem, 2:14¼. The horses were very evenly matched, and turned to a good start. For the first quarter they traveled nose and nose. At the half Little Gem made a spurt and took the lead, but Jack, on being touched with the whip, increased his speed, and in a few paces had his opponent at his rear wheels. When the horses were pulled up Jack was an open length ahead.

G. Coleman's Baylight, 2:32, won several lively brushes. The first victim of his speed was David D., 2:09¼, driven by J. W. Cornish. After a start in which David B. had a slight advantage, they went to the quarter in time which showed Baylight to be much faster than her record. Baylight had recovered what she had lost on the start, and was on even terms with David B. at the half-mile post. A little coaxing caused Baylight to quicken her stride, and before the three-quarters post had been reached David B. was beaten.

Commodore Porter, 2:13, driven by H. Reilly, had a pretty race with the team Neva Wilkes, 2:14, and Brown Lace, 2:19¼, owned by Mr. Harrison of Philadelphia. The Commodore picked the team up on the way down the stretch, and the horses were started on even terms. For a while it looked as though the team was too much for the Commodore, but he finally settled into his stride, recovered the lost ground, and passed the team at the three-quarters post amid the applause of the spectators, who seem to be partial to a team race or a race in which a team is entered.

DOCTORS SECRETLY MARRIED.

Bride Now Looking for Her Husband, Who Has Disappeared.

The following marriage notice published yesterday brought to light a romance between two doctors that has ended unhappily:

CORNEY—NEWGEON.—On Friday evening, June 30, 1899, at No. 6 East 128th St., by the Rev W. Warren Giles, Mary Frances Newgeon, M. D., to Robert Blair Corney, M. D.

The bridegroom has disappeared, and the bride is making desperate efforts to discover his whereabouts. Mrs. Corney, when seen last evening at her home, talked freely on the subject. She said she had been a practicing physician for more than ten years, and first met Dr. Corney, who is about twenty-eight years old, in professional way. According to Mrs. Corney, the bitter opposition of the doctor's family prevented him from marrying her early last Spring. He went to Detroit and she followed him there, and on June 30 they were secretly married.

"I abided by Dr. Corney's wish," said Mrs. Corney, "and guarded the secret of our marriage as closely as possible. He said he would acknowledge the marriage in the Autumn. I thought Autumn commenced on Sept. 1, and told him that I had suffered enough. He begged me to put off the announcement, told me several stories regarding his mother which were false, and on Sept. 12 he disappeared completely. I should like very much to find him. The trouble lies with his family."

WANAMAKER'S WANAMAKER'S WANAMAKER'S WANAMAKER'S

Christmas at the old Stewart Store

ALL New York—everybody beyond our borders who can come to New York—must come to enjoy the Wanamaker Christmas Store. Christmas business is the most unbusinesslike business we do—for we give a good part of the profits to our helpers and much more of it to the public in the beautiful things we provide to give them pleasure—but it is our pleasure, too; a great long step out of the usual. Yet the usual here is never humdrum.

We shall not make definite statements this morning about the decorations, for their beauty is just unfolding. We'll wait till we're sure of the full bloom.

To-morrow we commence a magnificent art show—

Half Hours at the National Gallery of London

Mr. H. Halsey-Stirling, an English critic, has had employed a wonderful miniature painter—Frank Dixon—who has reproduced several scores of the world's great paintings now hanging in the National Gallery. Art critics here and abroad unite in classing the work as unrivaled. The pictures are shown by a new projecting machine perfected by Mr. Halsey-Stirling, and each seems as though hung up in reality for your pleasure.

A special gallery, with ample seating capacity, on Third floor. Half-hour exhibitions to-morrow—10 and 11 a. m., 3 and 4.30 p. m. The owner values the outfit at $30,000.

The Halsey-Stirling Exhibition

I was present recently at a talk given by Mr. H. Halsey-Stirling, of London, which he calls: "Half Hours at the National Gallery." With an exceptionally perfect machine, a tripnoticon, invented by Mr. Halsey-Stirling, he threw on the screen the enlargement of Mr. Dixon's miniatures. The effect was startlingly realistic to those who had seen the original masterpieces as they hang in the old building on Trafalgar Square. Technique, values, chiaroscuro, textures, appear in surprising fidelity. It is no excess or exuberance to grow enthusiastic over these reproductions. Take the portrait of Gevartius by Van Dyck—there is the exact brushwork. Take Turner's "Towing the Old Fighting Temeraire"—there is the rainbow glow of lurid brilliancy softened by art.—David C. Preyer, in The Collector and Art Critic, New York.

It is hardly necessary to urge early Christmas shopping. It isn't early now—Christmas is a bare three weeks away. We have many hundred more helpers than last year; we are better ready in every way—the store seems bigger because handier. But buy as you please—come enjoy the Christmas store at any rate.

The New India and Foulard Silks

We are really proud of these first comers—the Printed India Silks and the charming Foulards, made for the spring of 1900—and to-day make special exhibition of them in the Rotunda. Will you take first pick?

These first cases held

1746 yards of the 60c silks
2711 yards of the $1 silks
1674 yards of the 85c silks
1065 yards of the 75c silks
722 yards of the $1.25 silks

There are colors—the newest, but the raven-blacks with designs in pure white are, maybe, most charming of all. The printings are from the size of a pin-head to a palm leaf a foot long.

Rotunda.

The Christmas China Store

There is good reason for this china store finding its position—and your favor—so quickly. Experts are on watch continually—here and in Europe; we are not hampered with any factories, and we are quite the largest purchasers of china for retail selling.

The newest lots were timed for Christmas—and are here.

Decorative Plates, 75c to $25—quite two hundred styles.
Dresden china for the table, sideboard and dressing case—charmingly decorated—for instance, Pen Trays, $1.25 and $1.50; Chop Plates, $4 to $5; Asparagus Dishes, novelly shaped, $8.50 to $10.

There are exquisite new Dinner sets—Cauldon, Haviland—but it's doubly pleasant to come and see it all.

Basement.

Men's Suits to Order

Thank you. We have taken nearly the necessary number of orders for business suits at $25

You recall the proposition: We had an overplus of the fancy cheviots and worsteds bought to make into $30, $35 and $40 suits. We use them in the suits at $25 until stocks are ship-shape.

Some yet.

No hodge-podge—you are told exactly which grade you are getting—but it's mostly a matter of taste.

Second floor, Fourth avenue.

We shall serve you not only well but comfortably. Come to either store that seems roomiest at the moment—

Golf Capes---And Others

Women's Wraps—"Do you know, I believe Wanamaker sells more wraps than any other store in town," said a visitor to her friend the other day. "There is surely most variety here." And, after all, what is a store but what people think of it? We've stopped telling how big the stocks are—because nobody can grasp what the figures mean—and to say big unmeaning things is simply to boast. We've no idea of boasting—we won't.

We keep close to Fashion—closest, we believe, because of our splendid Paris organization—and furnish stocks with a prodigality new to New York.

Prices are fair—very discerning people know they are low, because they appreciate the carefulness we demand and the results that come of it.

$10—Golf Capes, made of double-faced diagonal cheviot—body color navy blue or black; the blue with fancy plaid back, the black with black-and-white back. Of course the plaid furnishes the finish, and the pretty cape. Full sweep, growing gracefully longest in the back.
$15—Golf Capes of much the same materials, but is finished tailor-fashion, with bands liberally stitched; has monk's hood, finished with fringe.
$16.50—Golf Capes of same goods, but cape is very long—36 in.—and has less of the plaid showing, but the cape and collar are of plaid

Here are hints of the other capes—

$35—Imported Capes of black melton; with many stitched bands of cloth, the designs outlined with row of black-and-white braid. This description sounds wretchedly poor, but the cape is charming—full satin lined—and is 32 in. deep.

In the Upholstery Store

There's so much to interest furnishers—everybody who has den, flat or mansion to beautify—that we give this word, even though Christmas talk has to wait.

First: The newest old-old hangings for cozy corner and den come from India just now—we brought them. They're shown in a rare jumble of beauty in a little store of their own.

Screens—some just for usefulness as protectors agaipst draughts; some so beautiful as to make one wish for more places to put them, $1.85 to $165—some with meritorious paintings and quaint glass work.

But the store is full of oddness and beauty. These things merely hint of it.

Blankets

Is the goose to supersede the turkey as a Thanksgiving fowl? It seems to have been largely used this year—and the wish-bone is thick. That's a cold winter, even if late—if goose bones can foretell. And blanket selling is going on, just as though it was zero weather now. Possibly our way of selling them is bringing us the bulk of the business.

Down Quilts—our make; odorless and fine. Silk—plain one side, the other side is figured. $8.50 and $10.

Music Boxes and Criterions

We'll be entirely frank about it—the perfecting of the American music boxes—using flat discs, as does the Criterion—is almost ruining the sale of the splendid Swiss boxes. We are willing to sell what we have at half price—which meets trouble more than half way and gives you opportunity to get a splendid machine far below cost. Nobody questions the perfection of the Swiss boxes. We've only a few. At the half prices the range is $20 to $225.

The American Criterions are $14 to $175.

Angora Cats of High Degree

On the Fifth floor (Ninth street side) we have built a special little store to hold the splendid Angora Cats and Kittens our representative has collected down in Maine.

There are cats of many colors, with wonderful and wondering eyes; their fur in all the beauty that comes of high breeding and good health.

CAUSE OF POSTAL DEFICIT

Postmaster General Smith in His Report Lays It to Abuses.

SECOND-CLASS MAIL FRAUDS

Mr. Smith Figures a $12,000,000 Loss on Matter Which Should Bring a Profit—New York's Needs.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 3.—The annual report of Postmaster General Charles Emory Smith was made public to-night. Its chief feature is a plea for Congressional action to stop the abuse of second-class mail privileges, which he says results in an annual waste of upward of $20,000,000. The Postmaster General says:

"The most urgent need of the Postal Service is the rectification of the enormous wrongs which have grown up in the perversion and abuse of the privilege accorded by law to second-class matter. There are many improvements and advances awaiting development and application; opportunities for speedier transmission and delivery, fields for broadening the scope of the mail service and bringing it closer home to the people, possibilities of reduced postage, but above and beneath and beyond all, of those measures of progress which experience and intelligence are working out, is the redemption of the special concession which Congress granted for a distinct and justifiable public object from the fungus growths and the flagrant evils that have fastened upon it.

"For this costly abuse which drags on the department and weighs down the service, trammels its power and means of effective advancement in every direction, involves a sheer, wanton waste of $20,000,000 or more a year. The postal deficit for the current year is $6,610,776. But for this wrongful application of the second-class rate, instead of a deficit there would be a clear surplus of many millions. It is not now proposed to restrict the privileges of legitimate publications or to modify the design of the law, but only to bring back its application to its original and just scope.

"The aim is not to change what Congress meant to establish, but only to lop off the excrescences which have grown upon it. These alien and illegitimate additions have come to equal, if not to exceed, the proportions of the intended and rightful recipients of the privilege.

EXTENT OF ABUSES.

"As strikingly illustrating the extent and effect of the abuses to which reference is made, attention is particularly invited to the appended statements and exhibits. Calculating upon the basis of the count of pieces and the weighing of volume made in 1890, and adhering to the rule of estimating which has been observed in the department from that time, the weight in pounds and the receipts for postage on the several classes of matter mailed during the year ended June 30, 1899, are as follows:

Class.	Weight. Pounds.	Postage. Paid.
First	128,517,992	$65,937,732.98
Second.
Paid at pound rate	352,703,226	3,527,032.26
Free	62,241,700
Transient	25,289,355	1,564,290.00
Third	68,227,169	10,093,882.50
Fourth	21,776,347	3,421,181.80
Foreign	5,531,079	2,546,900.44

"Careful inquiry has been made through experienced Postmasters and by an examination of the records of the department, and it is believed that fully one-half of all the matter mailed as second-class and paid for at the pound rate, is not properly second-class within the intent of the law, and ought justly to be paid for at the third-class rate. This gives the enormous quantity of 176,351,613 pounds from which the department derives only a fraction of the revenue to which it is fairly entitled. The third-class rate of postage is 1 cent for each two ounces or fraction thereof, nominally 8 cents a pound, but in reality, through the operation of the fractional provision, the rate is higher.

"A division of the amount of postage received for third-class matter by the number of pounds of such matter mailed shows that the department actually derives a revenue of 14.75 cents a pound from this class. If, therefore, there had been paid, as there should have been paid, the average third-class rate on the 176,351,613 pounds, which was wrongfully transmitted at the pound rate, the department would have received $26,011,862.92, instead of $1,763,516.13, which it actually received, and the postal revenues would have been increased by the handsome sum of $24,248,346.79.

PROFIT SHOULD ACCRUE.

"The actual financial exhibit of the department for the last fiscal year is as follows:

Total expenditures	$101,632,160.92
Total receipts from all sources	95,021,384.17
Deficit	6,610,776.75

"Had this 176,351,613 pounds of mail matter, really of the third class, but transmitted at the pound rate, paid, as it should have paid, the average third-class rate, the financial exhibit would have been this:

Receipts, as above given	$95,021,384.17
Total receipts	119,269,730.96
Total expenditures	101,632,160.92
Surplus	17,637,570.04

"Or, if it be assumed that the matter would pay only the nominal rate of 8 cents a pound, this would be the showing:

Receipts, as given above	$95,021,384.17
Additional revenue from 176,351,613 pounds third-class matter, at 8 cents	12,344,612.91
Total receipts	$107,365,997.08
Total expenditures	101,632,160.92
Surplus	5,733,836.16

NET LOSS $12,344,612.91.

"This is what the financial exhibit of the postal service for the year would be if the matter carried through the mails were classified and rated as the law intended it should be. It would show a large surplus instead of a large deficit."

Following these figures the report states that while this wrongly classed matter amounts to one-fourth of all mail carried, it pays but one fifty-fifth part of the revenue, and by reckoning the cost of transportation at 8 cents per pound, carrying service costs the Government $14,108,129.04, and the return in revenue being but $1,763,516.13, which it actually received, and the postal revenues would have been increased by the handsome sum of $24,248,346.79.

CHARACTER OF OFFENDERS.

As to the character of the abuses which lead to this loss Mr. Smith says:

"The first is the paper-covered books put out under pretense of being serial publications. They have nothing of the nature of periodicals. They do not possess a single one of the attributes which Congress meant to require in publications that should be entitled to the second-class rate. Their 'consecutive numbering' is a travesty; their issuance at 'stated intervals' a parody; their 'subscription list' a fiction; their claim of being published 'for the dissemination of information of a public character' a burlesque. There is nothing to distinguish them in substance from bound books, and the discrimination in their favor is most unjust to the publishers of finer literature.

"The second abuse is connected with the advertising 'house organ' and the so-called trade journal. One of my predecessors, Postmaster General Bissell, characterized it as the 'bogus trade journal.' There are many genuine trade journals which are as legitimate as any periodicals and justly entitled to all their privileges. These are not included in the criticisms. But the trade journal described is simply an advertising scheme. It is not designed to disseminate information of a public character, and has no standing as the exponent of any trade or industry. These prints do not conform in any just sense to the requirements of the law, but offer only a nominal and technical conformity.

"The third abuse grows out of the privilege of sample copies. The sample copy of a regularly admitted paper or periodical, counting for support upon its merits, is presumably designed to induce a new subscription by exhibiting its merits in a new quarter. But, as a matter of fact, in many instances the sample copy has become not the individual exhibit, but the potential cloak of a thousand times multiplied distribution without regard to subscriptions, and solely as the plea and pledge for advertising.

REMEDIES SUGGESTED.

"The department alone is powerless to remedy the evils. Though they violate the policy and purpose of the law, yet they are shielded by its want of precision respecting subtleties and devices which could not have been anticipated, and by constructions which restrict freedom of administrative action. For this reason the difficulty must be cured by the lawmaking power. The points to be reached are clear and well defined. It is vital to re-establish in their proper classification and forbid the privilege of the pound rate to serial libraries of books, to 'house organs' and other sheets of an exclusive advertising character, to sample editions for advertising purposes, to advertising circulars which are masked under the names of fraternal societies, to returns by news agents of unsold periodicals, and to schemes by which publishers pervert their prerogatives by sending matter in their own names at the pound rate for advertisers and purchasers who have not the privilege."

Regarding our new possessions, the Postmaster General says:

"The presence of United States troops in the new island possessions and Cuba, in constant communication with home, constrained the establishment of mail facilities for their needs and the practical obliteration of the old local postal system, with the extinguishment of Spanish authority, compelled a reconstruction of the whole service for the requirements of the native population."

NEW YORK'S POSTAL NEEDS.

Speaking of the New York Post Office and its restricted facilities, the Postmaster General says that the demand for an enlargement of accommodations is just. He says the Post Office is greatly overcrowded and "some provision for relieving the congestion is imperative, and the suggestion is made that, in addition to the present office, there should be another structure, centrally and conveniently located, where certain classes and divisions of the mail could be received and dispatched.'

"New York furnishes one-twelfth of the postal revenue of the country. Its business is growing with phenomenal rapidity. Its immense and increasing interests have the strongest claim to consideration, and it is entitled to the best equipment and facilities that can be provided. In advancement of the postal service, not merely of New York, but of the whole country, which is intimately connected with it, I trust the subject will receive the favorable attention of Congress."

From the section devoted to money orders it is gathered that during the last year there has been an increase of $20,000,000 in the amount of domestic orders issued and that the system has been successfully introduced into Cuba and Puerto Rico. There is a demand from the business public, says Mr. Smith, for orders for fixed amounts ranging from 25 cents to $2.50, payable to payee or bearer, and the plan has the approval of the department.

In the matters upon which legislation is recommended Mr. Smith includes a note on the amendment of the inter-State commerce law to prohibit telegraph and express companies or any of their employes from aiding or abetting in green-goods or lottery swindles or in any other scheme carried on partly by mail and partly by common carrier which is in violation of the postal laws.

In conclusion, Mr. Smith states that the postal service, being the business branch of the Government, is being conducted more and more, year by year, on business principles.

CENTRAL FEDERATED UNION.

Meets in New Headquarters, Where Beer Is Not Sold—Tammany Administration Denounced.

The desire of delegates to the Central Federated Union to hold meetings in places where no liquors are sold has at last been gratified, and yesterday that body met for the first time in its new headquarters in the University Settlement at Rivington and Eldridge Streets. The cigarmakers, brewers, and waiters will now have no occasion to complain about non-union cigars, non-union beer, or non-union waiters, which had been often done in former meeting places, and it was Morris Brown, delegate of the Cigarmakers' Union, who advised the Central Federated Union to meet in the University Settlement. He thought the delegates could transact business without the assistance of beer, and as for cigars he remarked: "Let the delegates buy cigars from union shops and bring them along with them."

A letter was received from Mayor Van Wyck's secretary acknowledging the receipt of a protest against the taking away of the work of house shoring and moving from a certain contractor who paid his men union wages and giving it to another man who underpaid his men. The letter stated that the complaint had been referred to the Commissioner of Buildings.

Delegate Briody did not think that any good would result to the union house shorers through the Mayor. "Mr. Van Wyck is no good," he said, "and Mr. Croker is no better, and they are not friends of organized labor. The new contractor who underpays his men jumped into his place through Commissioner Brady, and nothing will be done to him. He knows no more about house shoring than a greenhorn immigrant knows about America. I do not believe that he could go through a civil service examination on house shoring, and I'd like to see them examine him."

Delegate Jacobs of the Cigarmakers said that several of the largest cigar manufacturers in this city had asked the union to recognize their products as union-made under certain restrictions, which the union, however, refused to grant. By recognizing those factories, Delegate Jacobs said, the union would have an accession of about 1,000 new members, but the union felt certain that those manufacturers would eventually unionize their factories without any conditions whatever. The union had been extensively agitating for the use of its label on cigar boxes, and in the West, where the products of these manufacturers were sold, the workingmen were demanding union products.

Delegate Cowan of the Amalgamated Society of Engineers spoke of the Wire and Nail Trust, which has been reported as having increased the wages of its employes 40 per cent.

"The fact is," said Delegate Cowan, "that about a year ago the trust crushed out of existence six unions in Cleveland and reduced the wages of the men 33 1-3 per cent. Soon afterward the trust raised the prices of its goods 250 per cent. We have had a boycott against the trust ever since, and although they secured injunctions against us we kept up the boycott, and have not been arrested."

Delegate George Warner of the Machinists asked the Central Federated Union to send a protest to the convention of the American Federation of Labor that will soon be held in Detroit against admitting delegates from what he called a scab plumbers' union of this city, which had been recognized by the Plumbers' National Union, while the genuine and original local union of that trade in this city was ignored. Delegate Cowan suggested that an effort be made to reconcile the two plumbers' unions, but Mr. Warner said that was impossible, and his request was granted.

NO STRIKE YET ON THE BRIDGE.

Trainmen, It Is Said, Will Not Go Out on Account of Badge Deposit.

Some of the employes on the Brooklyn Bridge said yesterday there was no likelihood of any strike among the trainmen being caused by the order of the railroad company requiring the men to pay a deposit of $3 each instead of $1 for their badges. This money is refunded when any employe leaves the service and surrenders the badge. The badge entitles the wearer to free rides on any of the trains or trolleys of the Brooklyn Rapid Transit system.

Superintendent Barton of the Brooklyn Bridge traffic said the objections were confined to a few men, who were pacified after matters had been explained to them. Some time ago some of the employes abused the free-ride privilege and lent their badges to their friends to ride on. The men then had deposited $1 each for a badge, and it was decided to raise the deposit to $3 and make the men responsible for the badges.

Some of the men said they had other grievances similar to those that had led to the strike of the trolley men last Summer, but they were not strong enough to fight at present. The employes on all the branches of the Rapid Transit system were quietly organizing, and when they are ready they will again present their demands or go out on strike, they said.

WORK ON "BIG SIX'S" FARM.

The Land Committee of Typographical Union No. 6, consisting of J. W. Sullivan, H. W. Hesson, and James H. Breslin, yesterday made its report to the union at its meeting in Beethoven Hall on the operation of the farm for unemployed members of the union at Bound Brook, N. J. The receipts of the farm for the year were $9,801.47, and the expenditures were $9,770.21. Among the receipts was an appropriation of $2,500 from the union's funds, and $1,000 from two subscribers. The value of the year's crop was $3,075.27.

In regard to the home which the union maintains for the printer-farmers, and the experiment in giving these same wprk, so as to make them at least partly independent, the committee said: "The home kept the men better fed and under better moral and physical conditions than most of them had been for years. The table was at all times well supplied, the sleeping rooms were spacious and airy, and the medicine bill averaged less than a dollar a week. With hardly one exception the men who worked from the close of the season earned enough clothing and labor to buy their Winter's $33, from October 28 to the first of next April. "The result of this home experiment, in the opinion of your committee, justify all its outlay. The details of the Bound Brook Home were in large part carried on by the men themselves. Their chapel Executive Committee ordered the provisions and checked them when brought in."

The work on the farm had its drawbacks, the committee said, and during the drought in the early part of the Summer, which lasted seven weeks, about eleven acres of the produce was destroyed, and much of the rest was damaged. The loss disheartened some of the plot holders, and had a bad effect on all.

The committee recommended that with Dec. 1 50 per cent. of the out-of-work assessment be transferred to the Farm Fund. The committee being of the opinion that considerable sums might be contributed to the union from outside sources for the farm, recommended that the Secretary-Treasurer be authorized to receive voluntary subscriptions.

DEATH FOLLOWS VACCINATION.

The death of Lena Baranno, eighteen months old, whose parents live at 254 West Forty-first Street, was reported to the Coroner yesterday by Dr. Palmer C. Cole of 254 West Forty-second Street, who attributed death to blood poisoning, superinduced by vaccination. The child died Saturday evening, and Dr. Cole was only called in a short time before.

Dr. Cole learned that the child had been born in New York, but had returned to Italy with parents and had been vaccinated on the ship by the authorities at Naples Nov. 11.

HENRY FOURNIER ARRESTED.

Charged with Running Automobile Too Fast—Knocked Over a Policeman.

Henry Fournier, the French automobilist, was arrested in Madison Avenue, at Thirty-sixth Street last night, for violation of the speed ordinance. Accompanied by Arthur A. Zimmerman, the ex-bicycle champion, and the latter's father, Fournier started out for an automobile spin.

Passing by Thirty-second Street they were hailed by Policeman Illach of the West Thirtieth Street Police Station, who commanded them to decrease their speed. They paid no attention to him.

Illach called Bicycle Policeman McAdam, who gave chase. At Thirty-sixth Street the policeman rode in front of the automobile, was knocked off his wheel. His machine was wrecked, but he escaped injury. The three men were then taken to the station, where a charge was preferred against Fournier. He was later released on bail.

M. Fournier protested against his arrest. He said Policeman Illach had acted like a "ruffian"; that the automobile had not exceeded the speed limit; that it is incapable of more than six miles an hour on the level; that it was going up a heavy grade, and was making about half that speed, or far within the limits. He explained that the machine was especially constructed for use on the theatrical stage, and had been made purposely very slow.

Boy's Shot Results Fatally.

Albert Bassler, who was shot in the abdomen on Thanksgiving Day while digging sand worms on Berrian's Island, died yesterday in St. John's Hospital, Long Island City. He was digging worms while Charles Halfner, sixteen years of age, was shooting rats. One of the bullets hit Bassler in the abdomen. Halfner carried Bassler to a boat and rowed him to Astoria, where he was treated at a drug store and then sent to the hospital. Halfner, who says the shooting was accidental, is still locked up in the station house of the Seventy-fifth Precinct. He will be arraigned this morning.

SECRETARY ROOT'S PROPOSALS.

The recommendations of the Secretary of War with reference to the future government of Puerto Rico undoubtedly contain the general principles that he would wish to apply, in due time, to the Philippines. These are fairly simple, and it is to be remarked that they have received the cordial approval even of some of the journals that have been the most ardent opponents of the policy of the Administration.

What the Secretary recommends is, in substance, that the new possessions shall be placed under a government in which the decisive and controlling part shall be allotted to agents of the United States, the chief of whom are to be appointed by the President, with the consent of the Senate. These agents are to constitute the executive branch of the superior or provincial governments, and they are to have the advice of a Council in which the natives are to be represented. The minor or municipal governments are to be made up of the natives, in part by election, but with the final control in the hands of the United States. The judiciary of the higher grades is to be appointed by the President and Senate, and appeals are to lie from its decisions ultimately to the Supreme Court. Legislation is subject to the veto of Congress, or of the President when Congress is not in session.

A system of this sort is necessarily elastic. It is framed and can be at any time modified by Congress. Provision for a greater share in the government by the natives can be made when it is found safe and desirable. The success of the plan will obviously depend on the way in which it is administered. Were it possible, we should greatly prefer to see the government of the new possessions put more directly and completely in the hands of the President and of agents, very few in number, appointed by him with the consent of the Senate. One Governor General, with the power to appoint his subordinates, aided by a Council composed in part of natives selected by him, whose general policy should be outlined by the Government at Washington, and kept under the close supervision of the proper department, but with a large discretion as to details, and especially with generous pay—this, we are persuaded, would give greater promise of efficiency than the more scattered distribution of functions and powers suggested by the Secretary. It would secure more definite responsibility and be safer from the influence of spoils politicians. It is doubtful whether it could be procured from Congress, but we should have been glad to have Congress asked for it.

Meanwhile the system actually recommended will yield good results in proportion to the honesty and fidelity with which the President seeks good results from it.

ULTIMATE RESULTS OF RAILROAD CONSOLIDATION.

The published reports of recent concentrations of railroad interests have been followed by the usual denials. These disclaimers have not removed from the public mind the very distinct impression that new relations of amity and alliance have been established between important trunk lines. It is quite possible to effect a practical consolidation of interests without a written bond. There may be no written bond in this case. Nevertheless, it appears to be true that the understandings that now exist between the Pennsylvania and the Baltimore and Ohio on the one hand, and between the New York Central and the Chesapeake and Ohio, with its Western connecting lines known as the "Big Four," on the other, are of a nature so close that they substitute the status of common interest for the old status of rivalry. If the further reports of a good understanding between the Central and the Pennsylvania rest upon a sound foundation, it is evident that all the important trunk lines leading from the Eastern seaboard to the interior and the West, excepting only the Erie, are now virtually under one control and have a common policy. This state of affairs, if completely established, would abolish competition in freight and passenger rates between the East and the West.

The first public comment upon this union of interests will be that it creates a giant railroad monopoly which constitutes a public peril. This is the superficial view. A virtual monopoly has perhaps been created, and conceivably this concentrated power might be used and abused to the public injury by the imposition of extortionate charges for carrying passengers and freight. Populists and the seekers after popular "issues" will be swift to view and describe this transaction as another sharp turn of the screw that is squeezing the life out of the toiling masses.

There are considerations of weight which make it seem improbable that the experienced and capable business men who are in control of these associated railroads will prove to be as shortsighted as the professional enemies of capital will believe them to be. The wisest and most successful business men of the present day, the really gifted captains of industry, do not favor the policy of discouraging business by high charges. The power of a monopoly is put to a very poor use when it is employed to extort "what the traffic will bear." The sound and wise rule of modern business is to impose such schedules of charges as will invite the largest volume of traffic, and then to employ men of such ability in management that the business is always carried on at the lowest possible cost, leaving a good return to capital after good wages have been paid to labor.

This, we say, is the rule with men of great ability at the head of great corporations. It is not yet the universal rule, for not all corporations are fortunate enough to have such men at the head of their affairs. But we are not ready to believe that the power which controls these associated railroads will be employed to burden the business of the country with extortionate rates, because that would be a foolish policy. More money is to be made by the wiser method, the modern method.

Another consideration which makes against the view that a dangerous monster has been created which will presently crush us is the present state of public opinion. The minds of the mass of the people are just now supersensitive on the subject of monopolies. It would not be a very wise or a very safe policy for a great master of railroads to begin an indiscriminate advance in rates determined only by his own greed and not by the cost of the service. Probably the most conscienceless monopolist in the land would admit that, with the people aroused against him and a Legislature at his heels, the outlook for a career of unmolested depredation would be highly unfavorable.

Mr. BRYAN and all the politicians and newspapers that are tributary to the cause of Bryanism are clamoring against trusts and consolidations of capital. Every Legislature has not only its demagogues who are on the alert to seize upon material for popular agitation, but as well its sincere and able men wishing only the public good, who look upon the "aggressions" of capital as a public danger and seek by honest opposition to check them. Since the Granger agitation twenty years ago there has not been a time more unfavorable for the operations of a railroad monopoly that was really bent on enforcing a policy of extortion.

It must be remembered that the people will have their way in the end if the matter is serious enough to interest and arouse them. The inter-State commerce law has forced the railroads out of the status of independent competitors and into the status of business alliance. This last estate they may be permitted to enjoy indefinitely if in their use and enjoyment of it, they are guided by those enlightened principles of business management that make a corporation successful without making it unpopular.

THE SPONGE IN FRANCE.

A general amnesty bill will shortly be introduced in the French Chamber which will return to their former place those men who, for their advocacy of the cause of Capt. DREYFUS, became the victims of a military conspiracy. It will be a Government measure. A political expedient the Moderate Republican press will doubtless call it. Foreigners may see in it a political subterfuge. But the Cabinet which frames this bill should not be carelessly condemned. A political expedient it is; it is not a subterfuge. The past acts of the Waldeck-Rousseau Ministry give that accusation a full denial.

By a general amnesty act DREYFUS will be restored to the position he occupied in the army prior to his arrest in 1894, the case against EMILE ZOLA for the alleged libeling of the court-martial that acquitted ESTERHAZY will be dropped, Col. PICQUART will be restored to rank and titles, and the professors of the Université de France who lost their positions through alleged insults to the "honor of the army" will be reinstated. The act of amnesty will be a wise and patriotic expedient, for it alone can neutralize the disturbing elements of France and bring tranquillity to the country.

The passage of the bill is a foregone conclusion. It will, of course, be opposed by the personal friends of the victims and by those Deputies whose ideas of individual justice are paramount to all considerations of State. Lieut. Col. PICQUART recently expressed this sentiment in a letter addressed to M. WALDECK-ROUSSEAU protesting against the offered amnesty. He said: "True appeasement can only be obtained by the proper and impartial administration of justice. To give amnesty to a man who is unjustly accused would be to rob him of the moral reparation to which he is entitled." These words have peculiar force when it is recalled that the proceedings at Rennes not only established the innocence of DREYFUS for all fair-minded persons, but showed that M. ZOLA spoke the truth when he declared that ESTERHAZY was acquitted "by order," and revealed the fact that PICQUART was entirely innocent of the charges against him.

Is it right, then, to deprive these men of a chance to clear themselves through due process of law? Is it right to allow the men who conspired for their ruin to go unpunished? These are the questions on which M. WALDECK-ROUSSEAU and his colleagues have deliberated. But whatever personal feelings they may have had in the matter, it is evident that they have waived them when brought face to face with the hard fact that nothing but the contemplated act would restore tranquillity to the distracted country.

It is, therefore, with a spirit of indulgence that foreigners should view the act, fully realising that no procedure of French law could win to ZOLA, to PICQUART, or to DREYFUS a single mind that has not already been made aware of the entire truth. So evident is the innocence of these men that one might almost regard trials to vindicate them as an insult to the intelligent people of France. As to the unhappy remnant of the conspirators, those whom a remorseless fate has not already visited, they will be despised by regenerate France. Their punishment will be greater than any court-martial could inflict.

THE CASE OF MR. ROBERTS.

An informal caucus or conference of some score of prominent Republican members of the House has made arrangements for the disposition of the case of the Mormon member from Utah. When his name is called from the roll on which the Clerk is required to place it, because of the entire regularity of his credentials, objection will be made to his taking the oath of office and the rights and privileges of a member. A special committee will then be appointed by the Speaker to consider his case. Until that committee makes a report on which the House shall have acted, or the committee is discharged and action taken without its report, Mr. ROBERTS will be excluded from the House. As this programme is agreed to by the future Speaker of the House as well as by the titular leader of the Republicans on the floor, there is no reason to suppose that it will not be carried out.

We confess that it seems to us an extremely radical policy, for which there is no need, and which sets up a precedent that is likely to lead to abuse. The House has two powers with reference to its members, one of exclusion and one of expulsion. The latter is practically discretionary, and requires a two-thirds vote. The former is pretty clearly defined by the Constitution, which says that "each House shall be the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own members," and defines those qualifications. So far as we have been able to learn, Mr. ROBERTS lacks none of the constitutional qualifications. That there are grounds for his expulsion after he has been admitted to the House is a proposition sustained by some excellent authorities, but that these grounds justify his exclusion is a very different proposition. If they do not, it is a serious thing to set the precedent of exclusion on objection. That recognizes a power in the House, and in a mere majority, that is liable to outrageous abuse. We think it would be in every way wiser and fairer to admit Mr. ROBERTS and then to proceed with the question of his expulsion in an orderly and sober fashion.

A SLAP-DASH SOCIOLOGIST.

The world would be better off if all women were turned out of their jobs to-morrow. I would except school teachers and perhaps a very few other classes. One of the greatest evils of modern civilization, I think, is the woman wage-earner. Her existence is a crime against natural laws. Nature intended man to be the producer, woman the consumer.

Some women, it's true, won't marry. Some women should never marry, but you can't organise society upon the exceptions to its laws. The healthy woman, the woman of the majority, should marry, if she can get a husband, and she would be much better able to find a husband if she had not reduced men's wages by her industrial competition. —The Rev. Dr. S. G. SMITH of the Department of Sociology, Minnesota State University.

It would be unscientific to talk in that way about oxen or honey bees or oysters. Even man has individuality, and women are full of it. Sweeping generalizations may be permitted to the ethnologist, who has to deal with whole races of men; or to the anthropologist, whose subject is all men through all the ages. Sociology has for its field the relations of man to his fellow-man. There the infinite details that make up the sum of human conduct are the very subject matter of the inquiry. A detail so important as the unlikeness of temperament or circumstance that makes men and women differ from each other in inclination or behavior cannot be disregarded by the conscientious student of human society.

Nobody but a very raw and hasty sociologist would denounce wage-earning by women as a crime against natural laws, and then try to limp away from the consequences of his assertion by declaring that society cannot be organized upon exceptions to its laws. You might as well declare that all apples are white, treating red apples as exceptions for which it is not worth while to formulate a law, as to try to ignore the very great number of women who from preference or mischance remain single and without male support.

It is doubtless better for society that women single and unprovided for should support themselves than that they should be cared for as paupers out of the earnings of men. That is where Dr. SMITH'S sociology breaks down. The number of women who have no natural protector cannot be sensibly diminished by preaching the duty and obligation of marriage. Their existence is a condition that confronts the sociologist. The fact that many or most of them will get work and become wage-earners must be accepted as another condition. If as competitors of man in the labor market they diminish his opportunities and his wages, that is another condition to be recognized. If man had the field to himself, without female competition, he would not be much more inclined than he is now to offer himself in marriage. The bread and butter question is only one of the many factors that determine the ratio of the single to the married.

If man cannot hold his own against the competition of women, he is poor stuff and entitled to no pity. Woman, however, has now and then need to be protected against woman. There is one class of female competition that is not fair. We mean the young women who live at home and pay no board because their parents are able to support them, yet who seek and obtain employment in order to get money for finery and luxuries. They are content to work for very low wages because they have no living expenses; and their appearance in the market has a tendency to fix the wage rate at figures which involve wretchedness and semi-starvation for the girl who has to support herself altogether.

The action of the Republican caucus in refusing to consider a change in the rules taking power from the Speaker and the Committee on Rules makes it certain that the autocratic and arbitrary methods now in vogue will not be modified for at least two years. And though they are arbitrary and autocratic, it is by no means certain that they could be changed to advantage. In a body of 357 members and over 60 committees it is simply impossible that every member and every committee shall have the same right to the time of the House. Such a practice would reduce the House to a mob, and anything like deliberate action would be out of the question. Not only would this be true, but there would really be less freedom and less practical equality for members than there is now. At present, though the minority is sometimes deprived of its full rights, it is always practicable to fix the responsibility for such a denial, and that is what holds the majority in check. The reported remark of Mr. REED that the House is "no longer a deliberative body," whether we care to "thank GOD" for it or not, is undoubtedly true.

It is reported from Albany that a school of athletics, with special attention paid to boxing and wrestling, for the exclusive benefit of members of the Legislature, is to be opened at once. It is understood that the plan was due to the recent system of physical culture adopted by the Governor. In these circumstances it is perhaps significant that the instructor engaged for the legislative school has already been worsted in a match with the one who has undertaken the arduous task of improving Col. ROOSEVELT'S style of fighting.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

—So we are not to have the regenerator of Santiago as Surgeon General, after all. Well, the disappointment can easily be endured. That Gen. WOOD would have made an admirable successor to Gen. STERNBERG is practically certain, and there is no doubt that a man as competent as he to vivify and energize the army Medical Department will be hard to find. But still more difficult would it be to find a man so obviously designed as Gen. WOOD for the exercise of wide administrative authority in one of our new possessions or dependencies. His qualifications for such work include those of character, training, and experience—a combination rare indeed in any land and especially precious in this one. We have heard rumors that the General is not quite as popular in official circles at Havana as he is in "the States," and whispers have reached us that went so far as to hint that "there are others," but the rumors and the whispers are natural enough in the circumstances, and are more amusing than disquieting. Gen. WOOD has sheaves to show, and jealousy cannot blight them.

—In a pamphlet entitled "Twenty Famous Naval Battles," recently issued by Prof. E. K. RAWSON, Superintendent of Naval War Records, the author takes occasion to criticise with some severity that compeller of endless discussion, the "loop" made by the Brooklyn at Santiago. Prof. RAWSON declares that the Brooklyn, when the Spaniards came out, was to the westward of the other American ships, that of them all she alone turned to the right instead of the left, and that by so doing she not only endangered the Texas, but "lost an opportunity especially to distinguish herself, either in an encounter with the Viscaya or in leading as the Spaniards flew westward." Summing the matter up, the professor says: "It was a manoeuvre which, if followed by the fleet, would have resulted detrimentally. To have turned to the westward in common with the almost simultaneous movement of the vessels nearer the Morro was the wiser plan; it would naturally be expected of her from her extreme westward position." In reply to these rather curious statements, The Washington Star quotes, but does not name, "an officer of the Brooklyn" as saying that the "loop" came after considerable progress had been made straight from the westernmost position toward the harbor mouth, and that it was Capt. COOK who, without consultation with Commodore SCHLEY, gave the order to port the helm. This is a new version of the incident. The unidentified officer continues: "When Capt. COOK returned to where the flag officer was standing the latter asked him if he had put his helm aport, and, receiving an affirmative answer, resumed his study of the course which it was expected the Spanish ships would pursue. When Capt. COOK gave the order to turn the helm aport he issued it because he feared the purpose of the Spanish fleet when it came straight out of the harbor entrance was to dash between the Brooklyn and the Texas, and it was for this reason and for no other that the helm was put aport, instead of to starboard."

—While Americans and Britishers have been laboriously stringing together misfit fragments of various dead languages in a vain attempt to make an endurable substitute for the atrocious word "automobile," the French have adopted the wiser course of asking a suggestion from the machines themselves and of accepting the reply as final. As printed in the Parisian papers, the name thus obtained for the new carriages is "teuf-teuf," evidently a fairly successful approximation to the sound made by the liquid fuel engines which serve as motors for a majority of the French machines. We are not, to be sure, particularly impressed by the beauty of this onomatopoetic achievement, but it has certain elements of grandeur about it, nevertheless. In the first place, it is a natural, not an artificial, word, and it describes and identifies the object meant in a way requiring no extensive classical education to understand. The weak point about "teuf-teuf" is the narrowness of its range. It fits only one kind of motor carriages, and leaves the very important electric variety unnamed. Still, our ex-friends have done pretty well with the difficult problem in nomenclature—much better, at all events, than we have. In its way, and so far as it goes, "teuf-teuf" is distinctly commendable. Its close relationship with the "choo-choo cars" of English-speaking infants is obvious and interesting.

—Speaking with all the authority and impressiveness given by holding the Presidency of the Anti-Imperialist League, ex-Gov. GEORGE S. BOUTWELL denies the truth of the statement recently made by ex-Senator F. J. DUBOIS that the New Englanders opposed to expansion would have to unite with the Silver Republicans of the West in support of BRYAN. "We won't coalesce with anybody's platform," Mr. BOUTWELL says. "When we get this year fixed right we will talk about the next one. I am a one-year man myself." Questioned on the same subject, Mr. ERVING WINSLOW, who is known in the Luzon hinterland as Young-Man-Sorry-He-Isn't-a-Hunted-Patriot, beat resonantly upon his suspender buckles and proclaimed that "the anti-imperialists have but one issue, and there is no possibility of such a combination as Senator DUBOIS outlines." The only ATKINSON was more voluble and explicit. "The purpose of the anti-imperialists, who are now a dominant minority," he said, "is to take the balance of power in the next Congress and by reflex action, possibly in the present Congress, putting all their work into about 100 Congressional districts in which they are now either a majority or else now hold the balance of power." The language used by Mr. ATKINSON is a bit obscure, but his general meaning can be gathered without much trouble, and as these three have spoken the position of the league is no longer in doubt.

—A Berlin publisher has issued a map of South Africa in which the Orange Free State takes in Bechuanaland and what is now called Natal forms a part of the Transvaal. The changes of boundary are emphasized by the use of colors, and, taken all in all, the new map is certainly a pretty specimen of prophecy. The possibilities of the future are infinite, so an absolute denial of the accuracy of the cartographer's vision might have its perils, but just for the sake of his creditors it is to be hoped that he hasn't put quite all of his capital into these pleasant predictions.

CONGRESS AND UTAH MEMBERS.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In your issue of to-day I find a letter with the caption "Republicans and Polygamy," signed "D." In that letter appears the following paragraphs:

"In looking over a file of old papers under date of Jan. 18, 1882, I ran across the following:

"'On Tuesday of last week, in a debate on the contested election case of the Delegate from Utah Territory, a resolution was offered in favor of excluding from Congress any Representative from that Territory "guilty of living in polygamous marital relations, or of teaching or instigating others to do so." Adopted by a vote of 189 to 24, the negative votes being all Republican.'"

I have before me the manuscript for a volume I have carefully compiled on "Contested Election Cases in the Organization of the House of Representatives," and for the information of the readers of THE TIMES—particularly of "D"—will state that no such resolution was voted on as stated; that as a consequence it could not have been adopted, and the negative votes could not as a further consequence have been "all Republican."

A resolution containing the language quoted was presented by Mr. Haskell of Kansas; was ruled out on points of order made by Mr. Randall of Pennsylvania and George D. Robinson of Massachusetts, and was never voted on. What was voted on and adopted was the substitute submitted by Mr. Reed of Maine, referring the papers "in relation to the right to a seat as a Delegate from the Territory of Utah to the Committee on Elections, with instructions to report as to the prima facie right or the final right of claimants to the seat as the committee shall deem proper." That substitute resolution of Mr. Reed's was agreed to on a count by the Speaker (Kiefer) by yeas, 180; nays, 24. No member asked for tellers, nor for the yeas and nays, and of course they were not taken.

I was Journal Clerk of the House at the time and remember the facts, but now state them from inspection of the Record. "D" had best be careful about relying on "files of old papers."

THE LAW OF BEING.

Emile Pickhardt in Boston Globe.

So long as the earth on its axis shall turn
And circling its orbit shall go,
So long as the sun of its Summers shall burn,
So long as its rivers shall flow;
So long as the tide of its oceans shall rise
And ebb and its mountains endure,
So long as the stars shall begem the night skies,
We shall hear the sad wail of the poor.

And they who to-day are the poor shall be rich,
And they who are rich shall be poor,
And this is the wisdom of heaven, by which
The safeguard of being is sure;
And if there were neither apparent extreme
Of station and wealth to compare,
Our lives' very sameness to mortals would seem
A pennance too grievous to bear.

But through the mutations of being there flows
This law of infinite degree,
And herein creative intelligence shows
What mankind has e'er failed to see,
That were it not for this arrangement, all wise,
Our consciousness never would gain
The thrill of sensation, and even our eyes
In darkness would ever remain.

Consider a moment just what it would mean,
(If such a thing ever could be,)
If there were no contrast in life to be seen,
In man or in flower or tree;
No varying shade in the red of the rose,
No change in the violet's blue;
No sickness or trials, no grievance or woes,
No false to compare with the true.

Or think, if for instance, fair Sympathy had
No object on which she might spend
Her bountiful treasures, no suffering, sad,
No penury where she might lend;
Ah, soon would her beautiful face, among men,
Be seen nevermore, for 'tis said
That she can live only by giving, and then
Sweet Sympathy soon would be dead.

So, were there no hatred there could be no love,
No false, there could never be truth;
Were there no below there could be no above,
No oldness, there could be no youth;
No joy could we know had we never a pain,
No sweet could we taste without sour,
And were there no losing there could be no gain,
No weakness, there could be no power.

And, thus, in this law of duality rest
The very foundations of life,
And those who are ever cast down and distressed
Because there is sorrow and strife,
Should learn to discern, if they're not all too dull,
That naught can the matter amend,
For if some great power this law should annul,
Our very existence would end.

RELIGION ON THE STAGE

The Rev. Dr. Silverman Condemns a Modern Class of Plays.

TRAFFIC IN SACRED THINGS

Presentations Which Invite Scots to Controversy and Tend to Promote Skepticism.

The Rev. Dr. Joseph Silverman preached yesterday morning at Temple Emanu-El on "The Presentation of Religion on the Stage." He began by saying that there was no doubt that the theatre had its origin in the church, and that the drama sprang from religious ceremonies. The early priests resembled actors rather than devotees of religion. Their stately, measured processions and ceremonies led in time to dramatic performances of religion, which, however, in time became vulgarized, so that the church had been compelled to assume the austere rôle of censor. Dr. Silverman continued:

"The church finally excommunicated actors. The evangelical churches, as a rule, frown upon the theatre and regard it as a hot-bed of vice. For this view there is some justification, for the stage too frequently panders to the lowest tastes of men. But let us be just. The stage has its legitimate place, and it may be the ally of the pulpit. Nay, it has some advantages over the pulpit, for it is not dogmatic.

"There was a time when religious plays were an essential part of the theatre, but that was when religion dominated every phase of life, when art and music were merely handmaids to religion. Now, however, the 'Passion Play' at Oberammergau has lost some of its original grandeur. Formerly the peasants there regarded the scene of the 'Passion Play' much as they did a church, making obeisance and saying their prayers on entering. But they said real prayers, just as real as in a church. The performance, too, was not merely a play, but a lifelike reproduction of the origin of Christianity. Nowadays a different spirit prevails, and many persons have wondered if the time has not come to stop the 'Passion Play' at Oberammergau.

"There is, in fact, not enough fervent devotional spirit in the world to-day to warrant the representation of religion on the stage. The object of such a performance to-day is to make money, and every performance is subservient to that end. Is it right that the loftiest sentiments of the human soul should thus be made the subject of commercial traffic? And if it be claimed that the object of such a performance is to make men more religious, to teach truth, what form of truth shall the sage put into his play? Shall it be Catholicism, or Judaism, or the doctrine of any one of the many divisions of Protestantism? Religion is a controversial subject, and any attempt to present it on the stage must necessarily invite controversy, and open new hostility between the Church and State. We are not allowed to teach religion in the schools, and the reasons for that rule also apply properly to the stage.

"I object to the performance of religion on the stage, also, because it tends to promote skepticism. After all, it is only a play, and its presentation in that manner tends to bring religion into contempt. The stage is no true mirror of life. A mirror reflects real things absolutely, but the stage merely gives a reflection of an imitation. Love affairs and intrigues, ambition, social conduct, may properly be put on the stage, for we are all able to understand the necessary exaggerations. But we all know how the portrayal of a religious hypocrite on the stage has a tendency to prejudice us against religion.

"The performance of 'The Christian,' with the ambiguous presentation of the character of the priest, or of such a play as 'The Children of the Ghetto,' in the view it affords of religion, counteracts any good it might otherwise have done. If you stir up a stagnant pool you are bound to set poisonous germs free. I don't mean that you should let the pool remain—remove it rather, but don't bring the women and children to the bank while you are doing sanitary work."

Dr. Silverman said that there were some things too sacred not merely for the stage, but almost too sacred to be mentioned to close friends. Shakespeare understood this, he said, for, although there were in his works some 550 Biblical quotations or allusions, he nowhere attempted to reproduce religious rites or ceremonies. The speaker censured the performance of "Ben-Hur," but without going into detail.

CHURCH CORNERSTONE LAID.

Ex-Mayor Schieren on Lutherans' English Missionary Movement.

The cornerstone of St. Stephen's English Evangelical Lutheran Church, at Newkirk Avenue and East Twenty-eighth Street, in the Vanderveer Park section of Brooklyn, was laid yesterday afternoon. The principal address was made by ex-Mayor Charles A. Schieren of Brooklyn.

"Our English missionary movement in this city," said Mr. Schieren in the course of his address, "has met with remarkable success. Since its organization last year we have planted three new English congregations. From every part of Brooklyn we receive applications for the establishment of English Lutheran churches. This is the best indication that English Lutheran churches are wanted. Last month we organized another mission at Greenpoint, right in the heart of a large German and Scandinavian population. The children of these people want English preaching; having been born here, they are Americans, and are anxious to have church services conducted in the language of their country. We are trying to supply this growing demand and are planting English missions wherever needed. Those that we have already established are doing well."

The services were held in a tent erected just opposite the site of the new church. The congregation met at its present place of worship, on Flatbush Avenue, near Avenue C, and marched in a body to the tent.

The Rev. Luther Gable, pastor of the church, conducted the exercises. The Rev. A. Steimle made an address and the Rev. A. S. Knabbuschuh, Christ English Lutheran Church, read the Scriptures.

St. Stephen's Church was organized about a year ago, and is in a flourishing condition. The building now being erected is to be a chapel only. It is to cost about $6,000. The church building proper, the construction of which is in contemplation, is to cost about $40,000. Ex-Mayor Schieren has given $500 to the building fund.

9TH REGIMENT ARMORY SERVICE

Dr. Peters Declares War in the Philippines the Holiest Undertaken.

Chaplain Madison C. Peters in the second of his series of patriotic services being held Sunday afternoons in the Ninth Regiment Armory, spoke yesterday on expansion. "You may call it imperialism or whatever you please," said he, "but the war in which we engaged at Manila was the holiest war ever undertaken. The United States was taking the part of the good samaritan.

"If the spirit of our Constitution has been violated in the Philippine matter, it has been violated all through our National history until long custom has condoned the offense. The United States has a mission to the world, and that mission is to see that all the world gets the benefits which we are enjoying."

DR. JOHN HALL'S SUCCESSOR.

Believed Congregation Will Be Asked to Vote on Mr. Morgan's Name.

The congregation of the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church has not yet been asked to vote upon the recommendation made by the Pulpit Committee, that the Rev. G. Campbell Morgan of the New Court Congregational Church of London be called to the vacant pulpit. No reference was made to the subject at yesterday's morning service, but immediately after the Pulpit Committee held a secret meeting, to make additional talk on the subject. When the committee room door was opened one of the members volunteered the statement that "an egg was hatching."

H. Edwards Rowland, Chairman of the committee, said: "I cannot say anything about the nature of our conference this morning, but in a few days we may have something definite to announce." Mr. Rowland also declined to say whether or not he had heard from Mr. Morgan during the past week, but added that the committee will meet at the church at 7:30 o'clock Thursday evening.

The belief in some quarters that Mr. Morgan's name will be withdrawn and another recommended because of the factional differences in the church was shattered by one of the church members, who said that in all probability it will be formally decided this week to at the congregation next Sunday to vote upon the acceptance or rejection of Mr. Morgan in the near future.

The announcement was made from the pulpit that a meeting of the congregation will be held this afternoon at 4 o'clock to elect Trustees to succeed the late Robert Borner and Robert W. Stuart, George F. Vieter, and John W. Auchincloss, whose terms of office expire Dec. 15.

FOOTBALL IN THE PULPIT.

PRINCETON, Dec. 3.—President Patton of Princeton University this evening in the pulpit congratulated the members of the football team and based his sermon on the moral lessons to be drawn from their success.

He urged the students through life to show the same tenacity of purpose in attaining lofty ends as was shown by the members of the football team in attaining victory.

THE LAFAYETTE MEMORIAL.

To correct false reports leading to complaint against the Lafayette Memorial Commission, which has in charge the School Children's Lafayette Monument, to be erected in Paris in 1900, Robert J. Thompson, Secretary of the commission, has written a letter to the editor of Art Interchange in this city. The complaints allege that the commission's disposition as shown favoritism in the not having held competition from American artists for designs for the monument. In reply Mr. Thompson says:

"On Nov. 7, 1898, with but eighteen months before it in which to compete the work, this commission addressed an inquiry as to the advisability of competition to twelve of the prominent sculptors of the country, namely, Messrs. St. Gaudens, Ward, French, Bartlett, Niehaus, Partridge, and others, including Karl Bitter and H. K. Bush-Brown. The consensus of opinion of these gentlemen was against competition, the principal sculptors above mentioned declining even to enter competition. When it was found that the best sculptors did not approve of competition, and would not enter it, an expert jury and council, composed, of the highest authorities in America in art, was selected by the commission. This jury consisted of Mr. J. Q. A. Ward, the President of the American sculptors and President of America; Mr. George B. Post, President of the American Institute of Architecture, and Mr. John Large, President of the Society of American Artists."

Upon recommendation of this jury the commission appointed Paul Wayland Bartlett, his subsequent designs and the amount of money to be expended being subject to the approval of the American council and jury. Mr. Bartlett's design for an equestrian statue as approved by the American jury and accepted by the French jury, of which M. Roujon, architect of the Louvre, was Chairman. This jury had been appointed by the French authorities to pass upon the designs. Mr. Bartlett's collaborators were selected by himself, his selections being approved by both the American and French juries.

The design calls for one of the largest equestrian statues in the world. It is proposed to use an alloy of silver and gold in the bronze, which, by the wax process of casting to refine and beautify it, also, if possible, to cast the entire figure of colored marble, Colleoni style, with rich bronze architectural ornaments. A staff reproduction of the entire monument will be specially erected for the purpose of dedication on the 4th of July, 1900, United States Day at the Paris Exposition. The entire cost of the memorial is not yet known. The fund on hand amounts to $100,000, but this will be considerably augmented by premiums on the sale of Lafayette dollars.

SANTIAGO POLICE TRANSFER.

SANTIAGO DE CUBA, Dec. 3.—Yesterday the Municipal Police were transferred to the Military Department. Under command of Capt. Pierce, 150 men, in new gray uniforms and wearing felt helmets similar to those worn by the New York Police, paraded, making a fine appearance.

Until now the force, owing to the jealousies of municipal politics, has been inefficient, and the Mayor and Council requested the transfer thus accomplished. Many former members failed to pass the rigid examination insisted upon by the American authorities, and the present personnel is a great improvement upon the old. Capt. Pierce will require daily drills, in conformity with army regulations.

This change is in line with Gen. Leonard Wood's recommendation of a recruit drill of the army, having in view the gradual removal of the Americans, except the officers.

THE INDEPENDENCE OF CUBA.

Press Comments on the Report of Secretary Root.

HAVANA, Dec. 3.—The Patria, discussing the reference to Cuba in Secretary Root's report, pronounces these "very satisfactory," and says that "independence is safe."

The Nuevo Pais says: "We can see nothing in the declarations of Secretary Root that can be called new. The Americans evidently still believe that the Cubans are not fit to govern themselves, owing to their lack of education and they still intend to educate us until we are fit for self-government. Mr. Root does not discuss the question of independence, leaving it where it was on Jan. 1."

LOOK FOR TROUBLE IN CUBA.

Havana Commercial Company Will Ask for Military Protection.

HAVANA, Dec. 3.—The Havana Commercial Company is placing armed guards on its plantations in the Province of Pinar del Rio, and will apply to Governor General Brooke for an infantry contingent. Mr. Merrylees, the manager, says:

"The company would not go to the expense of arming a number of men unless this was the right necessary for the protection of its interests. We do not believe there is any immediate cause for alarm, but we do consider that the spirit of disaffection is spreading, and is liable, sooner or later, to burst into flame, whenever the United States Government does or refrains from doing something which the Cuban leaders oppose or desire."

REVOLT IN COLOMBIA CRUSHED,

Legation Official Denies Statements of a Continued Rebellion.

According to the statement of Señor Luis Cuervo Marquez, Chargé d'Affaires of the Colombian Legation in Washington, who is at present in this city looking after the interests of his country's commerce, the recent dispatches from Jamaica affirming the continuation of the rebellion in Colombia are false. Marquez is a brother of the Minister of Foreign Affairs of Colombia, and from him a few days ago he received a dispatch saying that the rebellion was completely crushed.

"Such reports are calculated to injure business between this country and Colombia," said Señor Marquez yesterday. "At no time did the rebellion threaten seriously the Government, a faction only of the Liberal Party being engaged in it. The dissatisfaction was due to the low price of coffee in the markets of the world. Small exportation and too much importation have ruined the finances of the country. The Government is strong, and an overwhelming sentiment favors peace."

Richard Mansfield Better.

Richard Mansfield, who was unable to finish his performance of "Cyrano de Bergerac" at the Garden Theatre Saturday night on account of an attack of nervousness, was much better yesterday. He went for a horseback ride early in the afternoon, announcing upon his return that he had almost entirely recovered from the effects of Saturday night's annoyance, and that the performance of "Cyrano de Bergerac" would be continued to-night and during the remainder of the week. The trouble Saturday night, he said, was caused by an incessant pounding noise in the steampipes of the building.

KENTUCKY MOUNTAINEERS

"BAD" TOWNS MUCH OF A MYTH

Special Correspondence THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Ky., Dec. 1.—The wicked, turbulent, disorderly part of Kentucky is as difficult to catch up with as the will o' the wisp. When you are at Frankfort it is at some other place beyond. Seek for it along the line of the Louisville and Nashville Railroad that traverses the State at the edges of some of the counties without railroads, and it is "allowed" to be inland, out in Clay, Leslie, Perry, Owsley, Knott, or Floyd Counties, in which feuds have prevailed and expired. Even the railroad towns have the reputation among Kentuckians of being "hard." You reach them only to find that they are deadly dull, quite as safe as the big cities, and yet not uninteresting to the stranger. Indeed, their "hardness," outside of some hundred persons or less engaged in the Clay County vendetta, seems to be no deeper than their clothes.

"Go to London or Pineville," said Gov. Bradley. "You'll find them good towns, in a section of this State filled with good people, who only need schools and railroads to develop their best qualities." So I came to London, in order to penetrate "turbulent" Clay County, invaded the dreaded region, met with nothing but welcome and hospitality, and was advised to go on to Corbin if I desired to find a really "bad" town. London is not "bad." It is old enough to be better finished. No one could tell where it got its name, but it was incorporated in 1826, nearly fifty years before the railroad reached it. Yet with the coming of the railroad it did not begin to rival its great namesake. It is now a town of perhaps 1,200 inhabitants, whose houses are scattered loosely over its many hills alongside roads with or without sidewalks, as the case may be.

The best "block" in London is a group of one and two story buildings, with a brick sidewalk that is continuous for about 200 feet on the level. It is the only one of the kind in town. The best hotel is in that block. Opposite to the hotel is the County Court House and the jail, the Court House being the largest building in town, a two-story and mansard-roof structure of a style quite out of fashion. In its cupola is the town clock, and the hours are struck as they are reached by its sonorous bell. There are no saloons. The local sentiment is against them. "Hit's dry," I was informed by an obscure Londoner, "'count of the nigger. They're so lazy now they'll hardly drive turkeys. If they could get whisky they'd be drunk all the time." But it was only this morning that I saw two negro boys going down the street, driving a flock of two hundred or more turkeys toward fate and holiday dinners, just as hogs or sheep are driven. The fowls strutted along nimbly in the direction of the station, to await shipment to market. They sometimes arrive in droves of 1,500.

Whatever may be the indifference to sacrifice of life in feuds and affrays, I had an opportunity to observe one manifestation of general grief in the presence of sudden death that showed a deep sensibility on the part of the Londoners. A young man, about seventeen or eighteen, the son of the leading physician, accidentally shot and killed himself just outside the town about dusk of the evening I arrived. The people were appalled, and when the body was brought home, soon after dark in an open wagon, with a white cloth stretched over it, the people gathered along the street to watch in silent sympathy the extemporized hearse and the line of horsemen that followed in single file as an escort. For a day everybody stopped talking about the Goebel-Taylor contest. At the funeral next day the entire population appeared to be present and in sympathy with the bereaved and grief-stricken parents. It is rarely that anybody meets a violent death here. There has not been a murder in London in twenty years.

Still, there are concealed weapons in town, and if talk means anything, a constant readiness to use them. A young man in the office of the Catching Hotel told of his recent scare at the hands of a United States Deputy Marshal, his friend, who happened to be drunk and quarrelsome and put a 45-calibre revolver under the Glasgow man's nose with the intention to use it, only being prevented by the interference of a revenue gauger who stood near. The Marshal is a bold daredevil who leads "charges" against the mountain "moonshiners" and who has a reputation for desperating. I have "Dan" Gregory's word for it, corroborated by trustworthy evidence, that there has been shooting here, and almost under the shadow of the Court House.

"Dan" Gregory is a character. He is not well educated nor well dressed. His habit of shaving, it might be assumed, was about fortnightly. He wears clothes that are badly worn and discolored, and his battered, dusty, and broken felt hat falls about his dark and dirty face. In a hollow below the main street he keeps a restaurant, where he sells such edibles as chicken, fat meat and cabbage, and oysters—the latter a greater luxury than the others. "I hit was this a-way," "Dan" said, after drawing his hands from his breeches pocket, to put them together as he went on in a mumbling fashion. "Dis nigger come to my place and says he done want oysters. I waited on 'm. When he got de oysters I give 'm pepper sauce. He tell me to give 'm black pepper. He fussed 'cause I don't got it, and say he 'make me' get it. When he clutch me an' pull a knife, I arm him off and pull my gun. He tole the co't that he run 150 feet 'fore I fire three times. That nigger cost me thirteen dollars, an' I have to pay 'm three dollars to get 'm back to 'splain."

London appears to be a place of shipment of barrel staves, and of distribution for goods needed in the back country and not to be found in the little roadside stores. The prosperity enjoyed in other sections, and which has enlivened many towns not so far southeast as London, has gently stimulated business here, and has even made itself known out in the hills, where purchases of tinned goods and clothing material are admitted to be more frequent than they were a year ago. "Fat hogs are worth $5," said a business man, "and you can sell them. That means a good deal; for this was a good mast year, the hogs have filled out in the woods, and there is plenty of corn to finish them off with." There is some road mending in progress, new buildings were to be seen in a look about the town, and there was more work to be done than negroes willing to devote themselves continuously to it. The negro population is not large. Excepting a few Swiss, who live in a little settlement by themselves not far away from London, foreigners are rare.

Commercial travelers wander into London by rail or road. Some of them go into the back country from which the others arrive, and most of them remark the care of the dealers and people in buying. One "drummer," who was selling optical goods, had made his way by wagon through the interior counties of Maryland, West Virginia, and Kentucky to London. His experience in Kentucky was a demonstration, satisfactory to him, that the country folk hereabout do not need spectacles. "Most of them," he declared, "cannot read or write. They can see well enough to get about the farms, and do not care to go to the useless expense of spectacles which are recomemnded chiefly for the comfort with which they can be used in reading." All traveling salesmen who have been in the interior agree in describing the people there as hospitable, kind, and willing to give much food and shelter for very little money. My own experience at Manchester supported this testimony. The hotel table there was provided with greater variety and abundance than those of more pretentious houses in Frankfort and elsewhere. Without any real necessity for it, a blazing coal fire was made in my room on my arrival and in the morning before the tinder in the top of the house was rung. Three doors to this room, two of which opened upon the yard, were without locks or latch fasteners. Those who have locks out yonder seldom use them, and robbery is rare.

All this hill country, you will be assured, is underlaid with coal, in drift mines easily operated when needed. London does not have a mine, but rings are worked at Altamont, Pittsburg, East Bernstadt, Mount Robinson, Lucille, and other points not far away. These mines are getting out from 100 to 125 tons a day, and their operation and the shipment of their product keep the coal cars constantly on the go. London's shipment of staves was about 3,000,000 in the year. About $15,000 was spent in a year for material alone. It is the contributions like this to the sum of traffic over the Louisville and Nashville Road that is keeping all side tracks free from idle "empties," and the rails in constant use by heavy freight trains.

Labor receives low pay. It would be a mistake to say it is cheap. Those who hire male help in the country get it for 50 cents a day. Female help may get as much as $5 a month, paid to the sort of colored servants who expect to get $16 a month when they reach New Jersey. It is not at all skilful. Neither is it insolent. If a colored person has that accomplishment in Kentucky, it is never employed. On the other hand, there is greater freedom of action by the blacks. They are not "held off" as they are further North, and they act as if they felt absolute confidence in their employers. Many things are cheap to those accustomed to city prices. The cord of sound hickory or oak hauled, sawed, and piled, can be had for $2, and coal of the best local bituminous quality is delivered at the rate of 5 cents the bushel. Those who buy poultry get it for from 3 to 6 cents a pound.

News gets about the back country largely by word of mouth. The few daily newspapers taken reach the educated persons who try to keep up with events as they happen. The illiterate get the news as they pick it up. As everywhere else, so in Clay County, there is intense interest in the contest between Goebel and Taylor. The Republicans are largely in the majority, but Goebel has some Republican friends, and they and the few Democrats are determined that Goebel shall be seated, and vehemently protest against any talk of seating Taylor by military force. Two men at work in some timber stopped the writer a day or two ago with a cheerful salutation, and then smilingly suggested, "Reckon you can tell the very latest news about Goebel?" I handed him the paper of the day before. He shook his head and declined it. "I can't just make that out," he pleaded, "but you can tell me how it stands up to Frankfort and Louisville."

The mountain people are hopeful after a rather serious manner of their own. They like their hills and farm patches in the bottoms, and would rather wait to see their wealth of lumber, coal, and iron developed by the introduction of railroads than to go away to new and finer places. I found this feeling to be strong and outspoken in the case of a young man born in Manchester, taught first in the little town school, and afterward in Texas and Virginia. With a grace of speech and manner to assure him acceptance anywhere, he chose to return to his native town and the simple cordial folk he knew in boyhood and loved as a man.

The taste of the newspaper reader along the line of the Louisville and Nashville is for high-spiced information of a rather distressing sort. The train news dealer is awaited by a crowd of men, who flock about the end of the smoking car to seize this morning's Louisville or Cincinnati paper with avidity at 4 in the afternoon. The man who sold papers was known to everybody, and called his customers by name. His stock, piled high on leaving Louisville and renewed by Cincinnati papers along the road, was reduced before he reached the end of the route, but not exhausted. "The biggest day's sale I ever had," he said, "was that just after the hanging of a man for killing a girl up at Covington. Men drove down from the country to get the paper, and asked if the man was dead enough hung before buying. I sold 1,700 papers that day, and it was the best day since the opening of the road. Beat the Manila for record? Oh, yes! But it's been pretty lively since the beginning of the last fight for Governor." E. G. D.

GERMANS FAVOR CHAMBERLAIN.

Comment on His Speech, on the Whole, Not Unfavorable.

BERLIN, Dec. 3.—The German press continues to discuss the recent speech at Leicester, England, of the British Secretary of State for the Colonies. The comments, on the whole, are not unfavorable. The semi-official Hamburgischer Correspondent says:

"Mr. Chamberlain used the word 'alliance' as the most apt word to portray the general good relationship between Germany and Great Britain, but no secret compact exists."

The Berliner Post says: "England and Germany should act frankly, like business men, in seeking to come to an understanding with the United States, and, if possible, into copartnership."

ATTACKS ON CHAMBERLAIN.

London Paper Says His Speech Has Increased Dislike of Him Here.

LONDON, Dec. 4.—Mr. Chamberlain's Leicester speech continues to form the subject of extended comment here and abroad. The New York correspondent of The Daily News declares that the speech has "greatly increased the popular dislike of the Colonial Secretary in the United States," and that, instead of being an aid, Mr. Chamberlain is "an almost insuperable obstacle to an Anglo-American alliance."

The Times, in an editorial which endeavors to temper the feeling created by Mr. Chamberlain's admitted "indiscreet enthusiasm," says:

"Lord Rosebery's criticisms are perfectly justified; but it would be ungrateful to lose sight of the fact that it is due very largely to Mr. Chamberlain's personal influence that the improved state of feeling, improperly described as 'alliance,' and perhaps not altogether properly even as 'understanding,' has been brought about between Great Britain and the United States, and between Great Britain and Germany.

"Until it is to be regretted that Mr. Chamberlain's language lent itself to misconstructions, provoking acrid remarks in German and American newspapers; but in the case of America the tendency to union and cooperation is not likely to be seriously obstructed by an excess of sensitive apprehension at a possible meaning attachable to Mr. Chamberlain's words."

GREATER POWER IN ENGINES.

Berlin Professor Has a Method of Increasing It 50 Per Cent.

BERLIN, Dec. 3.—Prof. Josse of Berlin University has invented a method of increasing the power of steam engines, which promises to revolutionize steam engineering. He conducts steam generated in an ordinary boiler into a cooling tank, and then treats it with sulphuric acid, increasing its power from one-third to one-half. A factory at Charlottenburg has been using the invention for three months, and has obtained 56 per cent. above the indicated horse power of its engines.

REBELS CAPTURE MARACAIBO.

CARACAS, Venezuela, Dec. 3.—After a fight lasting sixteen hours the city of Maracaibo, capital of the State of Zulia, is in the power of the Hernandist revolutionary forces.

Empress Frederick Buys a Villa.

BERLIN, Dec. 3.—Empress Frederick has just purchased the Villa Brenzoni, on the promontory of San Vigilio, Lago di Garda, the Lacus Benacus of the Romans, and the largest of the North Italian lakes. The villa stands in a very secluded spot, but commands a beautiful view.

WESTCHESTER TROLLEY PLANS.

A Great System Designed to Rival the New York and Harlem.

Special to The New York Times.

NORFOLK, Conn., Dec. 3.—Local capitalists are well pleased with the outlook for a trolley scheme in Westchester County, N. Y., in which they are financially interested. The new syndicate on Saturday secured a franchise for the Bedford and Eastern Railway Company to build a line from Bedford Station to Bedford Centre, which is said to be only the beginning of a system which is intended to connect the Hudson River and Connecticut and parallel the New York and Harlem Railroad from White Plains north to the Putnam County line.

It is also claimed that the company will try to obtain permission to gridiron the northern part of the county, as the "Huckleberry" monopoly has succeeded in doing in the lower part, and then probably sell out to the Union syndicate.

The erection of a cross-country line from Peekskill via Lake Mahopac Summer resort to Danbury is also contemplated.

Answer to a Correspondent.

JOHN O. FRYER: The legend on the United States gold certificates, "This certifies that there have been deposited in the Treasury of the United States," &c., is perfectly grammatical. There are no one-dollar gold certificates. It means that dollars in gold coin to the number indicated on the certificate have been deposited. In speaking of large round sums of money when the words "sum" or "amount" are expressed or more frequently understood, it is customary to employ a singular verb.

New Serum to Detect Tuberculosis.

CHICAGO, Dec. 3.—A new serum which, it is claimed, will show the presence of tuberculosis long before it would be possible by the microscope, the X-ray, or other methods now in use, has been invented by Dr. A. R. Jenkins of this city. He claimed that the use of the serum enabled physicians to detect the presence of a disease in its earliest stages and in time to effect a cure by good sanitation and plenty of outdoor exercise. It shows whether or not a case is true consumption, no matter how early or light the attack.

IN FOREIGN LANDS.

AUSTRIA-HUNGARY AND EMPEROR FRANCIS JOSEPH.—The Vienna correspondent of THE NEW YORK TIMES informs us that "the Austrian Parliament is again working" as a result of the intervention of the Emperor Francis Joseph. This means that the quotas agreed upon by the Austrian and Hungarian Ministries were found to be insufficient to form a working policy for either Government, and consequently the Crown, in order to avoid a deadlock, was obliged to use its prerogative and fix the quota between the two parts of the Dual Monarchy for another twelve months unless agreement be sooner arrived at. The indeterminable question of the Ausgleich will therefore agitate the legislators of the Empire during 1900 just as it has every year since 1896. It seems that the repeated negotiations to settle this vexing question have only tended to afford numerous opportunities to extremist agitators both in Austria and in Hungary for embittering their mutual relations.

Ever since 1896 European diplomacy has keenly felt the handicap which has hampered the working of the Imperial Foreign Office, and prevented Austria-Hungary from playing the legitimate part in foreign affairs. It is also recognized in Budapest as well as in Vienna that nothing but the high personal esteem in which the Emperor Francis Joseph is regarded by the several antagonistic nationalities that go to make up his subjects has prevented the breach from becoming permanent. And now that the discord must inevitably be renewed excited persons in the Courts of Europe are blaming the Emperor for permitting the agitation at the very beginning.

A writer in the current number of La Revue des Deux Mondes presents this side of the question in an article entitled "Europe sans Austriche," in which is revealed the impression produced on European diplomacy by the chaotic condition of the internal situation in Austria-Hungary. It is pointed out that without Prince Bismarck's iron hand particularism might have wrought the same evils in Germany, that, unfortunately, for many years the conflicts among the various nationalities in Austria were countenanced rather than discouraged, and that, indeed, this lasted until they became permanently acute and began seriously to affect the status of the Dual Monarchy abroad.

It is believed in Vienna that the influence of his royal colleagues induced the Emperor to adopt the language that he has toward the leaders of the political groups. He has given them clearly to understand that these urgent measures, indispensable for the existence of the State, not only ought to be but must be carried through the Reichsrath. He is said to have impressed upon them in the strongest way possible that he does not contemplate a change of Ministers, and that the Clary Cabinet has his entire confidence. He leaves no doubt as to his opinion that the business of State had been blocked already too long by the party and nationality feuds. And he emphasizes his desire that this condition of affairs must be brought to an end by some means or other.

THE VATICAN PRESS AND THE VATICAN.—It was recently shown in these columns that while the popular press of Italy had become Anglophile the Clerical press represented by such organs as the Osservatore Romano, the actual mouthpiece of the Vatican; La Voce della Verita, and the Jesuit organ La Civilita Cattolica, were more Anglophobic than ever, seeing in the Transvaal war the loss of British prestige and a consequent fall of the House of Savoy in Italy. Suddenly and simultaneously a change has come over the Italian Clerical press. It does not repudiate any of its former utterances against Great Britain, but these utterances are not repeated except in the form of signed communications to the various editors. Explanations are made. The Osservatore states that, except in regard to Vatican news per se, it possesses no official or even semi-official character. Particularly, it adds, has the attitude of the Vatican toward the relations between the British Government and the Italian Government been misunderstood and misrepresented.

"It remains to be seen," concludes the Osservatore, "whether the falsifications perpetrated were wrought by an obstinate system of bad faith or by excessive journalistic levity. In any case, it is certain that public opinion has once more been the victim of deception."

La Voce della Verita draws a similar distinction between the "Vatican press" and "Vatican news," and emphasizes the fact that none of the Anglophobic articles that have appeared in the "Vatican press" ever pretended to bear the character of "Vatican news." Another Clerical organ, La Unita Cattolica, insists upon the same distinction, and warns its readers to bear this difference in mind when perusing Clerical journals.

These and similar statements, La Tribuna di Roma and other Italian papers declare make it abundantly evident that somebody very high in authority has counseled prudence to the Vatican press. It is believed in Rome that certain representations that Cardinal Vaughan, Archbishop of Westminster, recently made to the Vatican are now bearing fruit.

THE PRESENT STATE OF CRETE.—It will be recalled that when the three powers, Great Britain, France, and Russia, and Italy acting for Crete, came to a final settlement with the Sultan of Turkey as to how the affairs of the island were to be administered, it was agreed that Prince George of Greece should be appointed High Commissioner of the Cretan administration until affairs should assume such a stable character that the troops of the powers might be withdrawn. Prince George was then to become Governor General, and the autonomy of Crete was to be insured by the powers concerned and a yearly tribute to the Sultan guaranteed. Since Prince George assumed the office of High Commissioner the affairs of the island have gradually assumed a tranquil state. The local gendarmerie has been entirely reorganized under the supervision of a staff of officers drawn from the Italian Carabiniers, and it was recently reported in a Paris paper that at the beginning of 1900 the foreign troops would be withdrawn from the island, and the principality would be formally proclaimed. A recent statement made by Admiral Skrydloff to a St. Petersburg newspaper, while it gives an encouraging view of the affairs of the island, would seem to indicate that the period of the withdrawal of the troops is still left to the indefinite future. Said the Admiral:

"Our soldiers, as also the English and Italian detachments, are still in Crete. I fancy that they will remain at least two years more, until the session of the Cretan Parliament is closed. The organization of the militia and its instruction by Italians will by that time be complete, and it will be possible to intrust it with the maintenance of public order. Prince George is very popular with the Greek and Mohammedan population. He is fully occupied with business of State. There are already different parties and political groups, but the principal difference rests between the partisans of union with Greece and its opponents."

PRINCE HENRI D'ORLEANS ON THE FOREIGN POLICY OF FRANCE.—The cousin of the Bourbon-Orleanist pretender to the throne of France recently published some of his reflections on the French Republic, which appear in L'Eclair under the title of "Foreign Policy and National Conscience." Prince Henri d'Orléans first attacks the cosmopolitan element in French life, which he says has been introduced through the connivance of a Parliamentary Government, and then declares that the present feebleness of the foreign policy of the Republican Government is particularly due to the interference in the State and the growing power of financiers and international strangers. This and other causes, the Prince bases on the divisions existing among Frenchmen.

He points out that to ameliorate the situation and to make the foreign policy of the country bear good fruit, there should be either a strong authoritative Government or in the nation itself a public opinion sufficiently compact, intelligent, strong, and conscious of itself to be able to show the way to those in power. Finally, the Prince, in order to bring about the national and political reformation, which he deems needful, prescribes reconciliation among all parties in the State and a general understanding for the promotion of the interests of the country. If this be done, he says, the existing situation in France, in face of complications abroad, will be less serious than it is at the end of the nineteenth century.

Miss Burrough's Marriage Postponed.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., Dec. 3.—The marriage of Miss Marie Burroughs, the actress, to Dr. Albert E. Sterne of this city, which was to take place Dec. 6 in New York, has been indefinitely postponed on account of the serious illness of Miss Burroughs. Typhoid fever is feared, and Dr. Sterne was telegraphed for Friday. He is in New York now. The engagement was announced Oct. 25.

THE KENTUCKY SITUATION

Both Sides Confident of Winning Before the State Board To-day.

POWERS OF BOARD ILL-DEFINED

If Returns Are "Examined" Goebel Will Be Declared Governor—Otherwise Taylor Will Win.

FRANKFORT, Ky., Dec. 3.—At noon tomorrow the State Board of Election Commissioners of Kentucky will meet to canvass the returns from the last State election and to decide whether Goebel or Taylor is entitled to the certificate of election as Governor. There is not much probability that the matter will be settled to-morrow, and it may be Wednesday or later before a certificate is issued.

Both sides express themselves as confident, but no one can predict with accuracy the decision which will be reached by the board. The certified returns from the county boards, now on file with the Secretary of State, give Taylor a plurality of 2,435, but the Democrats declare that enough of these votes will be thrown out, and that Goebel will be awarded the certificate. The Kentucky election law is capable of divers constructions, and the definite conclusion of the board will rest very largely upon how its members decide to construe certain portions of the statute. That portion of the law upon which the Republicans rely is as follows:

Section 9—After an election for Governor, Lieutenant Governor, or other officer elective by the votes of the whole State or more than one county, it shall be the duty of the Board of Canvassers of the returns for each county immediately after the examination of such returns to make two or more certificates in writing, over their signatures, of the number of votes given in the county for each of the candidates for any of said offices and the number of votes for or against such questions of Constitutional amendments. One of the certificates shall be retained in the Clerk's office; another the Clerk shall send by the next mail under cover to the Secretary of State at the seat of government.

Sec. 10—Said State Board of Election Commissioner shall consist of three members. And in the absence of either, the other two shall be a board for examining and canvassing the returns of election for any of the officers named in the last section of this act.

First—It shall be the duty of said board when the returns are all in, or on the fourth Monday after election whether they are in or not, to make out in the office of the Secretary of State from the returns two duplicate certificates in writing, over their signatures, of the election of those having the highest number of votes, one certificate to be retained in the office, the other sent by mail to the person elected. If all the returns are not made, the right to contest an election shall not be impaired.

The Republicans assert that inasmuch as, according to the law, a certificate of election is due to the person having the largest number of votes according to the certificates of the county boards, it will be impossible for the board to do otherwise than return a certificate in favor of Taylor, he having a majority of 2,435, according to the certificates now on file with the Secretary of State. There is a loophole in the very sections upon which the Republicans rely which may work against them. It is this:

"The State Board shall be a board for examining and canvassing the returns."

How the board will construe the word "examining" is a matter of doubt. The same words exactly are used in defining the powers of the various county boards, and under this wording they have claimed and used the power of rejecting votes which they believed were illegally cast. If the county boards have this power over precinct returns, why, the Democrats ask, has not the State Board exactly similar powers over county returns in a passage of the law defining its powers in identical language. With the certificates of the Commissioners of Jefferson County giving Taylor a plurality of 8,442 votes was filed a mass of evidence that many of these votes were illegal, and it is not among the impossibilities that the State Board may so construe its powers under the word "examining" as to declare that it has the power to reject these votes. If it does Mr. Goebel gets the certificate.

The Democrats are contesting the Louisville vote chiefly because of Gov. Bradley's action in ordering the militia under arms and the alleged presence at the polls of Deputy United States Marshals. They also base their contest on the fact that Inspectors for the Brown party forced their way into the polling booth and usurped the function of officers of election. The Republicans will claim before the Election Commissioners that the allegations of intimidation by the militia and of interference by the United States Marshals are wholly inadmissible for the reason that the militia was held in the armory until fully three hours after the close of the polls, and that they were at no time within long range of the booth had closed present at or near a polling booth. As to the marshals, it is asserted by the Republicans that not only were they too few in number—there being but fourteen in Kentucky all told—to be capable of any interference, but that they actually did not in any manner interfere with the casting of any vote, either in the City of Louisville or elsewhere throughout the State. They visited the polls as private citizens only.

To offset the allegation of intrusion by Inspectors for the Brown party, the Republicans assert that if the claims of the Democrats are correct, and no positive denial is offered by the Republicans, the fault lies with the Democratic officials who admitted them. If they did not want them in they should have kept them out. They claim that the Democrats cannot allege their own negligence of duty as a reason for throwing out Republican votes.

It is admitted by both sides that the Democrats have a stronger case in Jefferson County than anywhere else throughout the State. If they win there, the other contests may be dropped, and if they lose, success in all the other contests will not make Goebel Governor of Kentucky. Next to the Jefferson County contest in importance comes that in Knox County, which returned a plurality for Taylor of 1,385. The contest there is based upon the allegation that the Republicans used tissue paper ballots by which the secrecy of the ballot was destroyed. In Johnson County, which returned a plurality for Taylor of 386, a similar claim is made, also in Lewis County, which gave 850 more votes for Taylor than for Goebel. The Republicans assert that similar ballots were used by the Democrats in the Counties of Graves, Ballard, and Bath, in which the aggregate plurality for Goebel was far in excess of the total Taylor plurality in the Counties of Knox, Johnson, and Lewis.

Neither Democrats nor Republicans know what the board will do, and all of them decline to discuss the matter in advance of the meeting of the board. Mr. Goebel refused to say anything at all, and Mr. Taylor contented himself with the assertion "I am confident the board will do its duty." Gov. Bradley would express no opinion regarding the probable outcome of the work of the board. "I don't think there will be any trouble," he said, "there is no need looking ahead for trouble; we will cross bridges when we come to them."

A number of Republicans from Clay and Laurel Counties arrived to-day and reported that there would be others in town in the morning. Men of both parties are very quiet, and there has been practically no bluster or trouble of any kind. It is expected that there will be a large crowd in Frankfort to-morrow in any event, as it is County Court day, which means an accession of about 1,500 to the usual population.

The legal advisers of the Republican candidates say there can be nothing in the point which it is said the Democrats may claim—that a construction of the word "examine" may give the board the right to consider anything else than the certification of the returns made by the different county boards. Attorney Bruce said on this point:

"The question of the power of the State Canvassing Board to hear evidence and decide contests over county votes has been practically settled by the Court of Appeals. The language of the statute as to the duties of this State Board is substantially the same as to the County Canvassing Board, which in turn is the same as under the law preceding the Goebel law. Under that law it has been distinctly held more than once by the Court of Appeals that the Canvassing Board has no power to hear evidence and decide contests. It can only certify the result as shown on the face of the returns showing the number of votes cast.

"It must be remembered that after this State Canvassing Board adjourns, the law provides that the same men shall constitute a Contest Board for State officers other than Governor and Lieutenant Governor. Now, if the Canvassing Board could hear evidence and decide contests there would be nothing for the Board to do when it convenes as a Contest Board. No, the Canvassing Board has nothing to do with contests. That belongs to the Legislature in the case of the Governor and Lieutenant Governor and to the State Board when hereafter convened as a Contest Board for other State officers. There can be no contest under the law until a certificate of election has been issued by the Canvassing Board, upon which the law provides how contests may be made after due notice concerning them has been given."

Mayor C. Roney of Frankfort has decided to swear in sixty extra policemen to-morrow. This is not especially on account of the gubernatorial contest, but chiefly because of the crowd that will be brought here by the monthly court day and by the opening of the Congressional campaign in this district to-morrow.

CONSTABULARY BILL QUESTION.

Governor and Chairman Odell Trying to Ascertain Public Sentiment.

Gov. Roosevelt will come down from Albany on Thursday afternoon and on Saturday morning he will meet Senator Platt and Chairman Odell at breakfast at the home of Douglas Robinson, 500 Madison Avenue. Mr. Robinson is the Governor's brother-in-law.

It is understood here that the Governor has made strenuous efforts during the last few days to ascertain public sentiment throughout the State regarding a law which would put the Police Departments of the various cities under the administration of State officials. Chairman Odell has also been engaged in collecting facts bearing upon the police question, and in all probability he will be ready to present the results of his labors to the Governor at the coming conference.

Well-informed politicians freely express the opinion that a State Constabulary bill will not be introduced into the Legislature unless the Republican leaders are assured of a sufficient number of votes to make it a law. They add that the State Senators will make sure of the views of their constituencies regarding such a law before they make up their minds what to do, as next year there is to be an election of Senators, and most of the members of the present Senate want to succeed themselves. Those who advocate the passage of such a bill say that this is the most opportune time to try such an experiment. They point to the fact that next year there will be a Presidential election and argue that State issues will be subordinate to those which will demand the attention of the Nation.

Philadelphia Wants the Convention.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 3.—Within a week every effort will be made by the Citizens' Republican National Association to organize the city to raise the campaign fund of $100,000 required to induce the Republican National Committee to select Philadelphia for the Republican Convention next year.

MARRIAGE OF MISS TOMLINSON.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, Dec. 3.—The announcement of the marriage of Miss Estelle Tomlinson, daughter of Mrs. Margaret Tomlinson of New York, to Thomas Savin of this city, was a great surprise to their many friends. Miss Tomlinson, now Mrs. Savin, is connected with prominent families in New York and Maryland. She has been the guest of friends in this city. She met Mr. Savin, who is a wealthy widower, at a theatre party and other social functions, but no one thought they were more than acquaintances.

Miss Ella Walmsley was to have given a theatre party in honor of her New York friend last evenin. She had invited a number of girl friends to dinner. Soon after the party had assembled, the guest of honor arrived and surprised her friends with the announcement that she had just been married to Mr. Savin.

The bride had been spending a few days with Mrs. Theodore Marburg of Mount Vernon Place. There Mr. Savin called for her yesterday afternoon, and they were driven to the parsonage of the Mount Vernon Methodist Episcopal Church, where they were married by the Rev. Dr. Joseph Smith.

SUNDAY NIGHT CONCERTS.

Mr. Damrosch Conducts at the Metropolitan Opera House.

At the Metropolitan Opera House last night Mr. Walter Damrosch made his reappearance before a New York audience as a conductor. The orchestra was largely made up of men who have long been associated with Mr. Damrosch, and the results were better than might have been expected by those acquainted with the fact that the conductor has been in retirement much of the time of late. The numbers played by the orchestra were Brahms's "Academic Festival" overture, two Slavic dances by Dvorak, Siegfried's Rhine Journey, the theme and variations from Goldmark's "Ländliche Hochzeit" symphony, the canzonetta from Godard's violin concerto, arranged for strings, a polka mazurka by Strauss, and a galop by Glazounow.

The soloists were Vladimir de Pachmann, pianist, and Clara Butt, contralto. M. de Pachmann played, as he can play it, the F minor concerto of Chopin. He aroused great enthusiasm among the hearers. Miss Butt, who was in good voice, sang as her principal number "Divinities du Styx," from Gluck's "Alcesti," and also some songs. She was warmly applauded by the hearers.

At Carnegie Hall there was an audience of moderate size, and some soloists of very moderate capacity. Mr. Emmanuel Wad, pianist, of Baltimore, was heard in the first movement of the Tschaikowsky concerto in B minor, which he played in a hard style, and with a continuous use of the "loud" pedal, which blurred most of his passage work. Mme. Evta Kileski sang "Ocean, thou mighty monster," with considerable abandon, but with a hard, metallic voice and an uncertain attack. Elsa Ruegger was heard in Rubinstein's 'cello concerto, and Signor Carbone sang the prologue from "Pagliacci." The orchestra, under Mr. Kaltenborn, played the overture to "William Tell," Bendel's "Snowflake," Liszt's second Hungarian Rhapsody, and the overture to "The Flying Dutchman."

POLICE CALL HIM A BURGLAR.

A man alleged to be a burglar, in whose possession were found over $800 in cash and a bank book representing $100 more, was locked up last night in the Elizabeth Street Police Station by Detective Finley and Policeman John W. Finn.

The prisoner gave his name as Henry Ursprung, thirty-six years old, of 140 Bowery, which is a cheap lodging house. He said he was employed by R. Hoe & Co. As he could not account in a satisfactory way for the possession of so much money his story was not believed by the police.

He was found in the hall of 76 Duane Street, and the door had been broken open. In his pockets were also found a gold watch and chain wrapped in an oily piece of newspaper. The money was in a tin box, which was also wrapped in an oil-soaked newspaper.

It was said that the prisoner confessed to Police Captain Titus that he had been confined in the Kings County Penitentiary and was an ex-convict.

GIRL MISSING FOR TWO YEARS.

Police Now Asked to Find Her, as She May Become an Heiress.

Back of a long-delayed report to the police Saturday of the disappearance more than two years ago of Eulalie Dohnart lies the romance of an old man's love for the missing girl. Four years ago Eulalie Dohnart came to New York from St. Thomas, West Indies, with her parents. The girl was then twenty years old.

At St. Thomas a wealthy Customs House officer had been greatly attached to her since she was a little girl. During the last year of the family's residence in St. Thomas the old man had repeatedly asked the girl to marry him, but on account of the great difference in their ages—he was over sixty-five—her parents had each time refused to give their consent. After the Dohnarts came to America the old suitor sent many letters and presents to the girl, but he was discouraged from doing so.

After leaving St. Thomas, the family went to live in Brooklyn, Miss Dohnart's father having secured a place as chef in a New York hotel. The girl herself was engaged as governess by a Madison Avenue family, but after some time was forced to give up her position on account of ill-health. At home, however, her health did not improved. She was afflicted with hysteria, and was finally told by her doctor that she must go to a hospital. The girl was strongly opposed to this, but after some persuasion on the part of her parents, consented to go to the New York Hospital. She left home two years ago ostensibly for that purpose and has not been heard from since.

About one month ago a letter came, addressed to Miss Dohnart at the residence of her parents, 19 Granite Street, Brooklyn. It was from her old admirer in St. Thomas, begging that she write to him, as he had something of importance to tell her if she replied. This led Mrs. Dohnart to the conclusion that the old man, who is now past seventy, wanted to make her daughter his heir, and she determined to ask the police to take up the search for the girl, which had hitherto been carried on by the girl's parents unaided.

PROGRAMME OF CONGRESS

Roberts Case to Come Up in the House To-day.

THE MESSAGE ON TUESDAY

Both Houses Will Adjourn To-day Out of Respect to Vice President Hobart—The Financial Bills.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 3.—The Fifty-sixth Congress opens to-morrow, with every prospect of a busy session. The opening week in the House promises to be crowded with stirring events. There is always some glamour in connection with the assembling of a new Congress which is a social as well as a political event. The galleries are crowded, and there is intense interest in the election of the Speaker, the swearing in of members at the bar of the House, the reading of the President's message, the biennial seat-drawing, the introduction of bills and resolutions into the legislative hopper, and the general clearing of decks for action later on. But as the committees are not appointed until just before the holiday recess, no actual business is transacted usually until after the recess.

This year it will be different. At the very threshold of the session will come the contest over the admission of Representative-elect Roberts of Utah, and later in the week the House will plunge into an important and possibly a protracted debate upon the financial bill which was prepared by the Republican leaders last Spring at Atlantic City. The Roberts case has attracted the attention of the whole country. The Republican leaders have adopted a plan of procedure which is designed to prevent Mr. Roberts from taking the oath of office until after the charges in connection with his alleged polygamous practices have been investigated by a special committee. Mr. Taylor of Ohio will make the objection to the administration of the oath to Mr. Roberts, and will offer a resolution to refer his case to a special committee.

There is considerable scattered opposition to this method of procedure on the ground that the refusal of the House to permit a Representative-elect bearing proper credentials to be sworn in upon unproved charges would create a bad precedent, and might result in chaos at some future time when political feeling ran high. But there are several precedents for this course in the case of members charged with disloyalty after the war, and these will be used in support of the procedure. Every member of the House has been bombarded with petitions in the Roberts case, and there will undoubtedly be a large majority without regard to party lines, in support of the plan outlined by the Republican leaders. Owing to the time which will be consumed in the disposition of the Roberts case to-morrow, the drawing of seats, which usually requires several hours, will probably be postponed until Tuesday.

The announcement of Vice President Hobart's death will probably be made immediately after the Roberts case is disposed of, and the House will adjourn out of respect to his memory. The drawing of seats and the reading of the President's message will occupy Tuesday. Tuesday night the Republicans will caucus on the financial bill. It is the intention of the Republican leaders to make this a caucus measure and proceed and pass it before the holiday recess. The caucus will decide, if the present intention is followed, not to wait for the appointment of the Committee on Banking and Currency, but to bring the bill into the House forthwith, probably under a special order from the Committee on Rules. The debate may begin on Wednesday. The length of time to be given to debate has not yet been determined. By some it is thought that three or four days may suffice.

While the session promises to be upon the whole a busy one in the Senate, the first week will be marked probably by considerable lethargy. Indeed, it would be exceptional if any actual work should be done. On Monday the new Senators will be sworn in, but beyond this nothing will be done. Ordinarily the President's message is received on the first day of the session, but its receipt will be postponed for a day this session out of respect to the memory of Vice President Hobart, whose death Senator Sewell will announce Tuesday little will be done beyond the receipt of the ann

To the holders of the Bonds and Stocks of the Kansas City, Pittsburg & Gulf R. R. Co.
Kansas City, Suburban Belt R. R. Co.
Consolidated Terminal R. R. Co.
Union Terminal R. R. Co.
Kansas City & Independence Air Line R. R. Co. and the Port Arthur Channel and Dock Co.

Notice is hereby given that pursuant to the request of the holders of a large amount of the above-named securities and with a view to secure the concurrence of those holders of securities who were represented by the committee of which Mr. Ernst Thalmann was Chairman, known as the New York Committee, the undersigned have modified and amended the plan of reorganization heretofore published and declared operative by it under date of August 17, 1899, under which a majority of the bonds thereby affected had been deposited, and now publish this modified plan of reorganization of the Kansas City, Pittsburg & Gulf R. R. Company, and for the acquisition by said reorganized company of the stocks and bonds of the Terminal Companies above mentioned, copies of which with full particulars and details can be obtained at the offices of the depositaries of the committee hereinafter mentioned.

Briefly stated, the plan provides for the formation of a new company, which will acquire the property of the existing Kansas City, Pittsburg & Gulf R. R. Company, and the bonds and stock of the Kansas City Suburban Belt R. R. Company and its constituent companies and of the Port Arthur Channel & Dock Company, thus bringing the system under one ownership and management; it being the intention, however, to acquire as soon as possible the title in fee to the properties of the said Belt R. R. Company and Channel & Dock Company in place of the stocks and bonds now representing said properties, which in the first instance will be included in the security of the new first mortgage proposed to be issued.

While the Committee entertains no doubt that all holders of securities included in this plan will deposit hereunder, yet to insure the independence and completeness of the system and to provide against any unexpected neglect or refusal of the holders of the securities of the Kansas City Terminal Companies to so deposit, the Committee has definitely arranged for ample terminals reaching the same industries and railroads at Kansas City as are now reached by said Suburban Belt Line, and at a cost nearly one-half less than heretofore.

In respect to the Port Arthur Channel and Dock Company, the Committee has such assurances as satisfy it that the holders of the stock and bonds thereof will accept this amended Plan of Reorganization and promptly deposit hereunder.

Upon the whole system, including main line and both terminals (subject, however, to be reduced in the event that the Kansas City Terminal is not retained) the new Company will issue the following securities:—

$30,000,000 first mortgage fifty-year 3 per cent. gold bonds, to be secured upon all the property of the Kansas City, Pittsburg & Gulf R. R. Company and temporarily upon the securities now representing the properties of the Kansas City Suburban Belt R. R. Company and the Port Arthur Channel & Dock Company, but as soon as possible, upon the fee of said properties.
$21,000,000 pref. stock, 4 per cent. non-accum.

These securities will be appropriated approximately as follows:—

It is intended to list upon the Stock Exchange the certificates issued by the New York and Philadelphia depositaries as soon as practicable. The proposed plan has been prepared by the Committee with the approval and co-operation of holders of large amounts of the securities affected thereby, and has received the assent and indorsement of the New York Committee, as will be seen by their announcement published herewith.

THE FINANCIAL MARKETS

If under current conditions the security market does not improve, they who have hopes on the bull side can be excused for discouragement. All the bugaboos are out of the way. And nine out of ten factors touching business affairs warrant enthusiasm.

To some extent recently Wall Street sentiment has been affected by representations that serious setbacks threaten the iron trade; and on the theory that as iron goes so stock market values should go, there has been some Stock Exchange "conservatism." But it was amply shown (on the very highest practical authorities) in THE NEW YORK TIMES yesterday that instead of disturbance, or even slackening tendencies in the iron trade, there is actual increase in activity, prospect of still better prices—virtual certainty that present good times are to be continued a long time.

It is, indeed, probable that the facts as they are will become assertive stock marketwise, and it may even be that the iron and steel stocks will become leaders in market value improvement. Surely better basis for betterment could hardly be asked than was contained in the official statement quoted yesterday in THE TIMES's news columns that representative properties like the National Steel, American Tin Plate, and Steel Hoop Companies are earning from 15 to 25 per cent. on their common stocks, after making the full allowances required for preferred shares. Such records are simply phenomenal.

During this week it is probable—practically certain—that details of an inspiriting character will be made plain in the New York Central-Pennsylvania-Baltimore and Ohio deal; and one result will appear in new activity in the whole group of involved properties. Foreign buying of New York Central and Pennsylvania may not only continue, but grow larger. Baltimore and Ohio issues are being sold by similar interests.

***

The fact that Northern Pacific common's dividend is to be increased will probably be confirmed officially this week.

WILL DIRECTORS RESIGN?

As a result of the recent extraordinary stock market gyrations of Leather Trust shares there are likely to be official developments not altogether agreeable. Quiet reports current have it that prominent Directors are to resign.

It is explained that this action is due wholly to the free and easy way that the credit of the company has been trifled with by Stock Exchange manipulators.

Another result may be official announcement that the much mooted "readjustment plan" for satisfying preferred stockholders as to overdue and unpaid dividends is to be abandoned. Some strong interests are evidently very irritated, feeling that they have suffered discreditable treatment.

If the "readjustment plan" is put aside there is likely, upon the other hand, to be aggressive litigation at the instance of preferred stockholders over unpaid dividends.

BUSINESS NEVER BETTER.

Mr. Warner Miller is another optimist in respect to present business conditions and the outlook for the future. He says:

"In all my business career times were never better than they are now. Of course prices are not so high now as they were after the war, but then there has been such a great improvement in machinery and the like that we are able to turn out goods much more quickly and more cheaply, and probably the ratio of our profits is as great as when prices were higher.

"There is a wonderful activity in business the world over, and so far as home conditions are concerned, I can see no chance of any let-up in activity—unless, indeed, it be through some untoward circumstance, such as the election of Bryan, which is inconceivable.

"As for the paper manufacturing business, it is very active, because of the great demand, and prices are firm and advancing."

NEW EQUIPMENT.

Much more new equipment was ordered by various railroad companies last week. Among the orders reported were:

Pennsylvania, 500 cars; Laurel Hill Car and Coal Company, Chicago, 100 cars; Delaware, Lackawanna and Western, 50 ballast cars; Duluth and Iron Range, 100 flat cars; Lehigh Valley, 25 poultry cars, 30 caboose cars; Minneapolis, St. Paul and Sault Ste. Marie, 600 box cars; Wheeling and Lake Erie, 1,500 freight cars; Chicago and Alton, 500 box cars; Kansas City, Pittsburg and Gulf, 500 box cars, 200 flat cars, and 200 furniture cars; Illinois Central, 1,000 flat cars; Southern Pacific, 28 passenger cars; Ann Arbor, 200 coal cars; Buffalo, Rochester and Pittsburg, 10 freight locomotives.

SUCCESS TAKES TIME.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

They who complain of the way in which the Brooklyn Rapid Transit system is managed and run at the present time, should reflect that this great combination of roads running over so much territory in a city of immense distances has not existed quite a year yet, and that it requires time and patience to perfect such a great organization. Mr. John D. Crimmins and Mr. W. C. Whitney, with all their constructive and executive ability, were several years in getting the Metropolitan into its present running shape by which it grinds out tons of nickels day and night.

Brooklyn Rapid Transit, too, has a constant shower of nickels, and is increasing in earnings all the time, for over five miles of new dwellings will be built in Brooklyn next year. With the great increase in street traction traffic, I expect that Brooklyn Rapid Transit will sell in two years at 200, with the present capital stock doubled. As to the immediate future, those who buy the stock and do not mind raids on it will get par for it this year—if not this month. The Standard Oil people a month ago bought 50,000 shares and gave a check for $4,000,000 for it. B.

FINANCIAL ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Staten Island Reports Say He Will Build Houses at Clifton.

Mr. George W. Vanderbilt, it is reported on Staten Island, is about to build several fine houses at Vanderbilt Avenue and Centre Street, Clifton, and that later on he will build several houses in the neighborhood of the Fox Hills Golf House, the Staten Island Cricket Club and Baseball Club.

Mr. Vanderbilt, it is said, has placed the plans for his houses in the hands of four Staten Island contractors and builders for estimates, and that they are expected to be filed with Commissioner of Buildings Daniel Campbell very soon.

NEW CLUE IN MURDER CASE

MIDWIFE WHO DISAPPEARED

Policeman's Wife Hears Some Stories About Mrs. Alma Landgraf, Who Suddenly Went West.

Capt. McClusky and his detectives are investigating another clue in the mysterious case of the unknown young woman whose parts of whose dismembered body were found in this city in October. The investigation was started as a result of a report made to Police Headquarters by Patrolman William D. Mott of the East Thirty-fifth Street Station. Mott lives at 349 East Forty-first Street. His wife is acquainted with Mrs. Elizabeth Noll, a dressmaker, who lives next door. Mrs. Noll told Mrs. Mott that she had made a dress for Mrs. Alma Landgraf, a midwife, who lived at 64 Prospect Place, and that Mrs. Landgraf suddenly left town a few days after the finding of the first fragment of the body on West Seventeenth Street.

Patrolman Mott, when informed of this, visited 64 Prospect Place. He found that Mrs. Landgraf, her four children, a "Dr." Klinger, and her servant girl, Barbara Hough, had all moved away on Oct. 20, after Mrs. Landgraf had sold the good-will of her business and part of the furniture to Mrs. Anna Bucholz. When Mrs. Bucholz moved in she found that the walls, carpets, and furniture were saturated with kerosene oil. In the cellar her husband discovered hundreds of blood-stained rags and papers. Quicklime had been strewn over the top of this rubbish and had eaten part of it away. There was also a wooden box containing plaster of paris.

Continuing his inquiries, Mott learned that on Sept. 1, 1899, Mrs. Landgraf had taken a two years' lease of the premises, but left the house six weeks later. She said she was going to San Francisco, but, instead, went to Denver, where, as late as Nov. 28, she was advertising her trade in the papers of that city. Her husband, John Landgraf, had a silversmith's shop in Pearl Street until a few days ago, when he suddenly went away. He occupied a furnished room near his wife's former home, and on Nov. 22, his birthday, called upon Mrs. Bucholz and showed a letter from Denver, written by Mrs. Landgraf, in which she said: "I may get some good business, but whatever happens I'll never do what I did in New York again." When he read this, Landgraf, as alleged, jumped to his feet and exclaimed excitedly, "No, by God; if she does it again she can get in any kind of trouble for all I care."

Mrs. Landgraf, Mott further learned, had an unusually large number of patients, who came to her house after dark in carriages. Mrs. Steger, who lives across the way from 64 Prospect Place, said that a few days before the first part of the dismembered body of the young woman was found, she saw a carriage draw up in front of Mrs. Landgraf's place at midnight. A man who got out of the vehicle was assisted by "Dr." Klinger in carrying a young woman from it into the house. Mrs. Bucholz said that when Mrs. Landgraf moved away she looked very pale and cried out several times, "Oh, why must I leave my nice home!" she said to Mrs. Bucholz: "I shouldn't wonder if some people say I'm going away because I had something to do with cutting up the woman every one is talking about." Mrs. Bucholz suggested that Mrs. Landgraf would probably soon return, but the latter exclaimed: "No, indeed, I'll never come back. If any one asks for me, tell him I've gone to Europe for my health."

The neighbors said that during the height of the excitement over the finding of the parts of the young woman's body, Mrs. Landgraf told her friends that a crime of that kind would give a death blow to the midwife business in New York. When Capt. McClusky on Oct. 10 announced that he intended to search the houses of all midwives Mrs. Landgraf said she dreaded such an ordeal. It was then she called upon Mrs. Bucholz and announced that she was going away at once. She seemed to be very nervous.

Mrs. Noll, the dressmaker, tells fortunes by cards, and she told Mrs. Landgraf her fortune. It was to the effect that a young woman would die in Mrs. Landgraf's house, and the death would get Mrs. Landgraf into trouble. When she heard this Mrs. Landgraf, it is said, turned pale. Then Mrs. Noll said the cards read that "Dr." Klinger would meet a sudden death. Thereupon "Dr." Klinger, who was present, ordered her from the house. Mrs. Noll said further that a young woman was brought to Mrs. Landgraf's about Oct. 1 by a San Francisco midwife, and that Babbie Hough, the servant girl, declared the woman was the sickest she had ever seen, but Babbie didn't know what had become of her.

Still another story Patrolman Mott learned was that on one occasion the Landgrafs quarrelled, and that Mrs. Landgraf threatened to reveal something about her husband, whereupon he replied that if she did so he would tell all he knew about her.

When Mott had got thus far in his investigation he reported the matter to his Captain, and then repeated the story at Police Headquarters to Capt. McClusky, who detailed a number of detectives to follow up the case. They first tried to locate the servant girl Babbie in order to get from her all she knew about the young woman who was brought to Mrs. Landgraf's by the San Francisco midwife. They traced her to the home of her cousin in East Twelfth Street, and thence to a bakery, where she remained only one night. When she left here she said she expected to get work with a family in One Hundred and Twenty-first Street. She did not return, and her cousin still has her trunk.

Mrs. Fehs, a dressmaker in East Thirteenth Street, says that Babbie ordered a dress, and was to have tried it on last Monday, but did not do so. An uncle of the girl keeps a saloon on Second Avenue. He says that he has not seen her in over a week. The detectives so far have been unable to find Babbie.

"Dr." Klinger, it is said, represented that he was studying medicine at Bellevue Hospital, but no one there ever heard of him. It is believed that he is now with Mrs. Landgraf in Denver. On Saturday the detectives questioned and cross-questioned Mrs. Bucholz. They also made a thorough examination of the premises.

Mrs. Landgraf is a native of Germany. She came to this country eighteen years ago. She did a large business while in New York City. Two weeks before she left town she was arrested for keeping a lying-in hospital, but gave bail, and her case has not been called for trial. Some of the detectives atttach very little importance to the stories told about her. They say that it is not likely that a woman implicated in a murder case would re-establish herself in the same business and under the same name in another city, and advertise for patients in the newspapers. They add that this clue, like all the others in this mystery, will probably amount to nothing.

RARE MONKEY IN THE PARK.

Director Smith Entertaining a Gibbon, One of the Greatest Curiosities Ever Under His Care.

In the monkey house in Central Park may now be seen a gibbon, or species of long-armed ape, which John W. Smith, Director of the menagerie, pronounces one of the greatest curiosities ever committed to his care. The monkey arrived Saturday afternoon in a hansom cab, and was introduced to Head Keeper Peter Shannon in Mr. Smith's office. He walked upright hand in hand with his new guardian to the house, where he was put into a cage all by himself.

Thousands looked at him yesterday without knowing what a distinguished visitor he is, for he did not feel at home in his new quarters, and for the greater part of the time huddled disconsolately against the side of his cage. So rare are these creatures that modern books contain no adequate description of them, and Mr. Smith was compelled to go back in his library to a compiled work on natural history published in 1834 before he could learn much about him. There he read the following:

"Always keeps in an erect position even when it walks upon all fours, its arms being as long as its body and its legs put together. We have seen one of these animals alive. It had no appearance of any tail. It had a circle of bushy hair all around the face which gave it a very remarkable appearance. Its eyes were large and sunk in its head, its face resembling that of a man tanned, and its ears well proportioned. This ape appeared to us to be of a gentle and tractable disposition. Its motions were neither rash nor precipitate. It was fed on bread, fruit, almonds, &c., and calmly received the fruit that was presented to it. It was very averse to cold and wet weather, and did not live long after being brought from its native country. It is a native of the East Indies, and particularly found along the coasts of Coromandel, Malacca, and the Moluicca Islands."

This gibbon is placed on exhibition by its owner, but Mr. Smith says that he will keep it at least six months, the department setting that limit in order to prevent citizens from using the menagerie as a free boarding place for strange pets. This specimen is two feet four inches tall.

Mr. Smith said yesterday that the work of transferring the hippopotamus Iris to the steamship Bulgaria, on which she is to sail to-morrow from Hoboken, to take her place in Hagenback's "zoo" at Hamburg, would be undertaken the first thing this morning. She will be moved on a truck, and it lies largely with herself whether the task be an easy or hard one. She is the third of the progeny of Murphy and Caliph. One has already preceded her to Hamburg, and another is in Lincoln Park, Chicago.

MEMORIAL CUBAN ASYLUM.

A Movement Started in Madison Avenue Presbyterian Church—In Memory of Mrs. Thurston.

A movement for the raising of funds for a proposed memorial orphan asylum for Cuban children, which shall bear the name of Mrs. Thurston, wife of Senator John M. Thurston, who died shortly after a visit she made to Cuba, was started last night in the Madison Avenue Presbyterian Church under the auspices of the Thurston Memorial Association.

The name of the proposed home is to be the Thurston Home for Orphans and Homeless Children in Cuba, and Gen. Van Der Voort of Nebraska, one of the managers of the Cuban Mail Steamship Company, has offered a tract of ground for the institution. It is proposed to raise a fund before the opening of Congress and to get the work practically started on it in a few months.

Gen. Van Der Voort and Mrs. G. E. Andrews of Echo Lake, N. J., were the speakers last night at the evening service in the Madison Avenue Church. Mrs. Andrews, who is the wife of a clergyman, conceived the plan of caring for the homeless children of Cuba, and thought a practical way of making it a possibility would be to make it a memorial of Mrs. Thurston. She interested Gen. Van Der Voort in the project, he having been a friend of Mrs. Thurston. The nucleus of a fund has already been subscribed in Nebraska. It is proposed to carry on the work all over the country.

Gen. Van Der Voort in his speech told of the large number of orphans in Cuba and of the need of some institution to care for them. The home was to be an industrial school, he said, as well as a mission. It was especially fitting, he thought, that the work should be started as a memorial to Mrs. Thurston, whose death, he said, her friends all believed was caused by a broken heart, the result of her visit to Cuba and seeing with her own eyes the conditions there.

Mrs. Andrews dwelt on the religious reasons for the home, saying that a Protestant institution of some kind was needed, and that if American money was not sent down to help the Cuban orphans, and American missionaries to train them to habits of thrift, more lives of Americans would be sacrificed in quelling disturbances.

The Rev. Dr. T. A. Howland, Treasurer of the association, also spoke. Col. Ray, one of the officers, also said a few words.

Dr. John E. Bushnell of the church presided. He recommended the work to his congregation. Mr. and Mrs. Andrews, he said, will be sent to Cuba to start work as soon as possible.

The collection was devoted to the fund, and contribution slips were handed around upon which many of the members of the church pledged themselves to give larger amounts. It was announced that any contributions to the fund might be sent to Dr. Howland, at 64 Bible House, this city.

OUR LONDON CABLE.

THE SIX PER CENT. BANK RATE

Advance Was to Some Extent a Surprise—Necessity for the Bank of England's Action—Rate May Go Up Still Higher—Britain Has Now Only Bullion on Which to Depend.

Cable Correspondence.

Copyright, 1899, THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Dec. 3.—We have got our 6 per cent. bank rate, and the question now is, What is it going to do for us? To some extent the advance was a surprise, for no further adverse movement in foreign exchanges had taken place and the market was to all appearance suffering merely from end of the month Stock Exchange settlement and bankers' balance sheet squeezes. At the same time feverishness prevailed and the action of the Bank of England itself tended to aggravate the unrest. One day it refused to discount bills for brokers and the next offered to take them up to sixty days at 6 per cent. The market took fright, and on Wednesday became so terrified that it refused to buy bills under 5⅞ per cent., occasionally, indeed, asking 6 per cent.

When the bank rate went to 6 per cent. on Thursday, the first feeling, therefore, was a sense of relief, and the open market discount began to fall away. Venturesome credit handlers talked of 5⅝ per cent., but prudent houses demanded from 5⅞ to 5¾ per cent., lowering these quotations, however, yesterday for bills for three months and under. Money, too, was easier yesterday at 5 per cent. Early in the week Stock Exchange settlement rates were severe, at about 6 per cent. on all good securities, including consols, and that also helped to frighten people.

With regard to consols, money on which has not been so dear for about ten years, it seems that Government departments and the Bank of England itself have been selling, and as nobody buys in these times, the market found itself loaded with considerable amounts of stock on which it had to arrange loans into January, consol bargains being only settled once a month. To make sure of advances into the new year high rates were offered, because the pressure at the end of December is expected to be greater than now.

The last time the bank rate was 6 per cent. was nine years ago, when the Baring crisis overtook the market, and then it remained at that figure for just a month. Now there is no prospect of such a swift return to comparative ease, but rather one of higher rates still by and by. In 1890 the Bank of France was able to lend the Bank of England £3,000,000 in gold. Now not only this is impossible, but all the foreign markets want metal as much as, if not more than, we do.

But why this urgency with us for more gold? The Bank of England possesses £10,600,000 more metal now than in November, 1890, and seems richer all round; therefore, it may be said, there is surely no cause for nervousness. Unfortunately, the position has changed for the worse in other respects. Not only are the bank's liabilities £15,000,000 larger now than in 1890, but it is now surrounded by a small group of other joint stock banks, each carrying liabilities to the public of from £15,000,000 to almost £50,000,000. These great banks have mostly been formed by the amalgamation of a number of small ones, some of which were far from strong. Their necessities in the shape of cash, were anything to go wrong, would, it is certain, be such that the note and gold reserve of the Bank of England might be swept away in a few days.

It is imperative, therefore, that the metallic reserve of the institution round which all the credit of the empire revolves should be far greater than was formerly deemed sufficient. Add to this permanent argument in favor of a strong reserve of gold the present necessities arising from the war, the hunger of all the markets for more metal, the stoppage of the usual supplies of gold, the artificially stimulated requirements of India, and the increase in normal demands for bullion for export due to the larger trade transacted, and grounds enough for vigilance are apparent. It was reported on Thursday that a million in gold was to be taken before the end of the week for South America. This report was not according to fact, for no gold has gone, but the market says it was because last week's boat was slow, and that the bullion is sure to go next Friday. Suppose this also to be false, none the less it is true that heavy demands on our small stock are sure to be experienced soon.

The worst of it is that we do not now own securities in masses which could be sold abroad, and therefore have only bullion to fall back upon at a pinch. I estimate that we have parted with £150,000,000 of your railroad securities since the beginning of 1898, and long before that we had sold our Continental and Egyptian Government stocks. Neither you nor the Continent take many of our Indian and colonial securities, if any, nor is there any free market abroad for our domestic stocks.

Consequently we depend on our exports of manufactures and the interest on our colonial, Indian, South American, and the remainder of our North American investments to adjust trade balances at ordinary times. But the times are not now ordinary, and are not likely to be so for many months to come. Money may ease a little now, but dearness is certain to come on again before the end of the year, and the Bank of England says it has got the market well enough in hand to be able to prevent weakness spreading. Soon, probably, we shall see the Continental State banks moving their rates up further for self-protection, and the only thing we are thankful for is your apparent ability to do without drawing gold from us. If you did so, that, added to our other troubles, would stagger our market completely.

When, however, with so little superficial cause the rate goes to 6 per cent., nervous borrowers ask if anything is wrong with credit in the home market. Apparently there is nothing, although we have had the longest season of the most unbridled speculation without accident I ever remember. Probably the thought was suggested by the coincidence of the previous 6 per cent. bank rate heralding disasters. The only places where I fear that credit is worn rather thin are two or three of the newer big banks; one or two private banks mixed up with our book publishing trade, which is in a somewhat rotten condition, and the Scotch banks, two at least of which are in danger of drowning in whisky. But acute symptoms are nowhere apparent, even where most to be dreaded.

DEC

Outside Securities.

Dullness prevailed in the market for outside securities all last week. In some few stocks there was considerable activity, but these transactions were scarcely large enough to change the general appearance of the market. One of the stocks that came on the curb recently supplied the most active issue, while many of the formerly active stocks were very little traded in, being neglected by traders as well as by the public. Indeed, very little disposition was shown to enter the market on any large scale, and it appeared that the holiday coming in the middle of the week served to keep attention from curb market business. It was particularly dull on the two days following the midweek holiday, and transactions on those days were smaller, probably, than those on any day for some time past.

Some net changes of importance showed in the closing quotations, but most of the week's variations were of little moment. Of the larger net changes, more were on the side of advances than on the side of declines, for, although the market was dull, it was not really weak, except in a few quarters, and brokers found it as hard to buy as to sell stock. Prices responded rather easily to favorable news, and several issues which were the subject of favorable announcements indicated the fact by substantial betterments in price.

Storage Power was prominent by reason both of its activity and its strength. On transactions amounting to a number of thousands of shares it went up to 87/8, and closed at 8⅝ bid, an advance of 3½ points. Buying seemed to be chiefly for the account of insiders, who are predicting much success for the company's undertaking. No news of a special kind was had, and thus far little in regard to the affairs of the company outside of the general character of its business has been given to the public.

News of dividends resulted in substantial improvement in several of the industrial stocks, notably in Cramps' Shipyard, which made a net gain of 11 points. It closed at 84 bid, against 73 on the previous Saturday. Rubber Goods preferred was another issue to make an advance on dividend announcements. The dividend of 1¾ per cent. declared on this issue is the third regular quarterly dividend. When the next dividend is paid it is generally believed among those well informed in regard to the company's affairs that a dividend, probably of 1 per cent., will be at the same time given to the common stock. Such information as is received in regard to the company's earnings indicates that a large dividend is being earned on the common stock, and friends of the company say that there is no doubt that by the end of the next quarter the common stock will be among the regular dividend-paying stocks.

New Amsterdam Gas was fairly active early in the week, but later became as dull as the rest of the market, and on the last few days there were practically no transactions in either issue of the stock and only very few in the bonds. Closing prices showed a net loss of over 2 points in common stock and a decline of 2 points in the bonds, while the preferred stock was offered about a point below the figure at which it was held the previous week. Nothing new in the local gas situation developed, and so far as public information went, gas war settlement was no nearer at hand than it had been during recent weeks.

Owing to the prominence which it held during the previous week, Electric Axle was watched with considerable interest. It was at first weak and suffered a sharp decline, but later, on intimations of important developments, the stock became much firmer, and closed substantially better than the lowest. What these developments are has not yet been made public, but it was stated on good authority that the company's business was in very satisfactory condition and that announcements indicating this might be made in the course of a few days. Electric Axle was the only one of the electric stocks that showed much activity, although on one day Electric Boat was the subject of considerable attention. It advanced over 5 points in the common and 2 or 3 points in the preferred stock. Part of these gains was subsequently lost, but both issues closed substantially better than they had the previous week.

Distilling of America common lost nearly 2 points. Late in the week considerable disposition was manifested to sell the stock, and as no large demand appeared, the sales, although relatively light, brought about the decline noted. The preferred stock suffered a larger loss, ending the week at 33 bid, against 36 bid the previous Saturday. Insiders did not appear to be taking an active part in the market, and no effort was made to keep the price of the stock up.

General Carriage headed the list of advances with a net gain of very nearly 30 points. What the grounds for this very large advance were did not appear, as no news in regard to the company's affairs was had. No large amount of stock changed hands on the advance, for the market appears to be bare of the issue. It is said that it is practically all held by insiders.

None of the copper stocks was prominent. Trading in Amalgamated Copper was restricted to a few hundred shares, and on these the price went off over a point. It closed at 86 bid.

THE MANCHESTER MARKET.

MANCHESTER, Dec. 3.—The market is now more active than at any previous time for nearly a month. Yarns, which are freely bought by users, are now ⅛ higher. The cloth advance is more laborious, but business is fair, particularly in low-priced shirtings for Calcutta, light goods for Bombay, and wide cloths for Madras, for delivery reaching up to March and April. Last week's transactions showed moderate sales to China, in her specialties, and Java and other Eastern outlets were fair buyers. Elsewhere trade was slow, owing to the high prices. Lancashire margins are dwindling.

The French market was very active throughout the week, prices following cotton easily. Germany raised yarns another 2 pfennigs, with fair business.

CONGRESS.—The Fifty-sixth Congress met at noon yesterday. Gen. Henderson of Iowa was elected Speaker and the Reed rules were adopted. Objection to the swearing in of Representative-elect Roberts of Utah was made by Taylor of Ohio, and the former was asked by the Speaker to step aside. This he did, after being assured that he would forfeit none of his rights by doing so. He was not allowed to take the oath, and the matter will be brought up to-day. Not a voice was raised on the floor of the House in his behalf. Both houses, out of respect to the memory of the late Vice President, adjourned early. The Secretary of the Treasury submitted the estimate for the appropriations for 1901. The Republican House Currency bill was introduced. Congressman Payne of New York introduced the Shipping bill. The Senate Finance Committee Currency bill was yesterday made public.—Pages 1 and 5.

FOREIGN.—It is rumored in London that Gen. Methuen's force has reached Kimberley. The bombardment of Kimberley continues with great fierceness. Fuller details from the battle of Modder River show that both sides fought with great tenacity. The most effective work was done by the artillery. In the discussion of the Government Currency bill in the German Reichstag yesterday several speakers asserted that all hope for the restoration of the silver standard was gone. The Paris police yesterday seized copies of a paper containing insulting references to Queen Victoria. The discussion of the German Meat Inspection bill has been postponed. Ambassador Choate denies that he had any intention of confirming the remarks of Secretary Chamberlain in his Leicester speech.—Pages 3 and 6.

GEORGE H. HUBER ROBBED

HIS WATCH AND $250 TAKEN

Gave Four Assailants a Hard Tussle and Was Injured in the Leg—Arrests on Suspicion.

One of the boldest highway robberies of recent years in the vicinity of this city was perpetrated in Yonkers shortly after 11 o'clock yesterday morning. The victim is George H. Huber, the museum owner and roadhouse keeper, who is now lamenting the loss of a gold watch and nearly $250 in cash, and who is nursing a severely injured leg as a result of his mishap. Four men are under arrest in connection with the robbery.

Mr. Huber is a man of somewhat more than middle age and carries about 240 pounds of avoirdupois. A good deal of his weight is of course superfluous, but he is active enough to put up an interesting tussle and his assailants did not rob him without considerable work.

Their deed was all the bolder from the fact that it was committed only 500 or 600 feet from the Empire City Trotting Track, which is not far from the city line, and a number of men were at work just inside the high board fence which surrounds the track. Plenty of houses are a short distance off. Furthermore, on the water tower used in connection with the track, one man was standing who witnessed the whole fracas, though it was over too soon for him to do any good.

Mr. Huber, who takes a good deal of interest in trotting, is making additions to some stables he owns just opposite the entrance to the track. He drove up to these stables yesterday, and a few minutes later started off for his roadhouse at Jerome Avenue and East One Hundred and Sixty-second Street. He turned out of Yonkers Avenue into Central Park Avenue, and as he was descending the slope of the latter thoroughfare he noticed two men, a short and a tall one, dressed in dark clothes, sauntering in ahead of him.

"Hey, there," he called good-humoredly, "what are you doing there?"

Then they turned their faces toward him, and he saw that they were fairly well dressed young men, who looked like Italians. Suddenly they yanked the mare to the right, cramping the wagon close on that side, and as they did so began to back it over toward the ditch. Simultaneously they each drew a revolver.

"When I saw that," said Mr. Huber afterward, "I knew I couldn't get away. So I sat there a minute, studying what to do."

Mr. Huber was sitting at the right of the wagon, and the fellow who had approached him leaned over and grabbed him by the lapel of his coat. A struggle ensued, and Mr. Huber, happening to turn his head, caught sight of another man some thirty yards back on the road.

"Hey, help!" he shouted. "Come ahead, there."

The man addressed came ahead at a smart run, but the result was somewhat unexpected. He was at the left side of the wagon in a minute, and as Mr. Huber rose to get out there, threw his arms around the latter's ample waist. Mr. Huber put his left arm about his new assailant's neck and began to pound him, when the tall man ran around from the other side and joined in the scuffle.

A moment later they were all three rolling and fighting in the ditch together, while the man at the head of the horse stuck manfully to his post and repressed his desire to take a hand in the contest.

"I kept punching at them every time I got a chance," said Mr. Huber last night. "I soon found my right leg was badly injured. I don't know whether I got the hurt in the fall or not. But one of those fellows sat on my shoulders while the tall man that threatened me first went through my pockets. Both had guns. I didn't dare shout because when I hollered the first time telling that rascal to come ahead, the tall man said, 'If you holler, I shoot.'

"The tall man put his hand down in my right hand breeches pocket and pulled out a wad of about $250, with some checks inside it. There was another roll of $185 and $20 in gold that he missed in the same pocket, and another wad of $70 in a vest pocket, which also contained a gold cigar cutter. He went right through that vest pocket without getting those things.

"When he got the big wad, I said, 'Well, you've done it now. You broke my leg and you got my money. Now get away.' Presently the robber reached into my inside coat pockets and took out some papers, which he concluded to replace.

"Then he grabbed my gold watch, and tore it off, breaking the chain in two. But he completely missed my big diamond shirt stud. When they got the watch, two of the men backed off, covering me with their pistols. Then the tall fellow, who had the watch and money, ran off into the woods, and the other two, another having come up, swung the mare's head around and led her off down a by-road that went into the woods in the direction of Mount Vernon."

Mr. Huber was rescued by a contractor whom he had passed on the road, and who presently came up with a horse and runabout. In fact he had been "sparring for time," as he expressed it, hoping for the arrival of this man. The contractor displayed some reluctance to help him, Mr. Huber said, but finally allowed him to climb into his wagon and took him back to the stables. There he borrowed a wagon, had the horse he had driven to the stables put in it, and drove off to his roadhouse.

At the roadhouse he improvised some crutches out of planking, and was then driven in a phaeton down to the apartment house where he lives, 1,919 Seventh Avenue. His physician says the ligaments about his right knee are badly torn, and that he cannot go out for three months.

He told a reporter last night that he was going to be out to-day. "Why, I broke a leg in Ohio twelve years ago," said he, "and came all the way on to this city before I got it set."

The Yonkers police were promptly notified of the robbery. The mare was found with the wagon in a patch of woods just off the by-road down which she was led. Later the Yonkers police found four Italians walking toward Mount Vernon, and arrested them on suspicion.

They will be taken to this city to-day to see if Mr. Huber can identify them. They said they were Giuseppe Manzitta, Michael Rose, Michael George, and Nicholas Adisicho.

National Bank for a Chicago Suburb.

CHICAGO, Dec. 4.—Evanston will start the new year with a First National Bank, the capital stock of $100,000 having been subscribed by representative men of the northern suburb. Prominent in the list of probable Directors are M. M. Kirkham, Vice President of the Chicago and Northwestern Railway; Thomas Bates, Mayor; R. P. Johnson, an Iowa capitalist; James A. Patten, member of the Chicago Board of Trade; and Hugh R. Wilson and A. N. Young, Chicago commission merchants.

Dr. Wise Eulogizes Baron Hirsch.

CINCINNATI, Dec. 4.—Dr. Isaac M. Wise, President of the Hebrew Union College, in referring to a movement to erect a monument to Baron Hirsch in New York, said to-day: "Baron Hirsch ranks among the greatest philanthropists of the century, equalled only by his wife, Baroness Hirsch. He did all the good one millionaire could possibly do, or ever did do, for the poor, neglected, and persecuted."

WILLIAM F. MILLER ARRESTED.

The Brooklyn Franklin Syndicate Manager Said to Have Been Captured at Montreal.

CHICAGO, Dec. 4.—In a telegram received here to-night at the local offices of the Mooney & Boland Detective Agency, the capture of William F. Miller, accused of having been connected with the Franklin Syndicate swindle in New York, was announced as having been effected at Montreal by the agency's operatives, who have been in pursuit of the fugitive since his disappearance ten days ago.

CULLEN FOR HIGHER BENCH.

Governor to Appoint Him to Court of Appeals—Justice Not Informed Yet.

It was announced yesterday that Gov. Roosevelt will designate Supreme Court Justice Edgar M. Cullen of the Second Judicial District as one of the Justices to form part of the Court of Appeals.

Under the amendment to Article VI. of the Constitution, adopted at the recent election, the Court of Appeals will early in January certify to the Governor that the court is unable by reason of the accumulation of cases pending therein to hear and dispose of the same with reasonable speed, and suggest the number of Justices of the Supreme Court necessary to carry on the work of the Court of Appeals. The Governor may designate not to exceed four Supreme Court Justices to form part of the Court of Appeals until the pressure of business is relieved.

Justice Cullen was seen last night at his home, 144 Willow Street, Brooklyn, by a reporter for THE NEW YORK TIMES and asked if he had heard anything from the Governor concerning his reported intention.

"I have no information about the matter," was his reply. "I know absolutely nothing about it. I cannot make it any stronger than that."

It is understood to be the Governor's intention to designate one or two Democratic Justices to this work

Senator Platt is said to favor the designation of Justice Walter Lloyd Smith of Elmira, while Frank Platt is understood to have urged that Justice Frank H. Hiscock of Syracuse be named as one of the Justices for the work of the higher court.

It is understood that the Justices of the Court of Appeals, who have been consulted by the Governor, have expressed their disapproval of the designation of any Justice who is not familiar with the work of the Appellate Division.

MAY NAME THREE JUSTICES.

Governor and Court of Appeals Members Discuss the Question.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, Dec. 4.—The question as to how many Supreme Court Justices are necessary is now being debated by the members of the Court of Appeals and the Governor. The Court of Appeals Justices do not want to take any more of the Supreme Court Justices than is absolutely necessary, and do not desire any more than can be worked advantageously. Several of the Judges have talked with the Governor, and from the views advanced thus far it is believed that the number which the Governor will be asked to designate will be three. The Governor said to-night that the subject of designating but three Justices had been broached, and that he was now looking into the advisability of the matter.

One of the Judges of the Court of Appeals said that it was believed that the court would work more smoothly with three Supreme Court Justices than four. The plan was in operation in the Appellate Division in the First Department, and worked most advantageously. The Chief Judge will have to sit at all times, preside over the consultations as well as the court, and look after the motions, calendars, &c., so that he will have but little time to write opinions. On either side of him will sit three Judges, six in all, leaving three to prepare opinions at all times. With four extra Justices there would be an extra man, and this would interfere with the smooth working of the court.

To-day ex-Attorney General Rosendale, Hamilton Harris, Marcus T. Hun, J. Newton Fiero, Arthur L. Andrews, and James F. Tracey of this city went before the Governor and asked that he designate Justice Judson S. Landon of Schenectady to sit on the Court of Appeals bench. Justice D. Cady Herrick also waited on the Governor this afternoon, and asked that Justice S. Alonzo Kellogg of Plattsburg, who has been sitting as an Appellate Justice in the place of the late Justice John R. Putnam, who died recently in Hongkong, be named to succeed Justice Putnam.

CASHIER'S $20,000 SHORTAGE.

L. E. Goldsmith of the National Bank of Port Jervis Will, It Is Said, Make the Amount Good.

PORT JERVIS, N. Y., Dec. 4.—Errors have been discovered in the accounts of Louis E. Goldsmith, assistant cashier of the National Bank of Port Jervis, and it is said the shortage may reach $20,000 or possibly $25,000. The accounts have been thoroughly investigated by Bank Examiner W. H. Bryan, who has been at work upon the books since Nov. 14.

Mr. Goldsmith is at his home in this place, and it is stated that he will rectify the errors and make good any deficiency which may exist without loss of time. The assistant cashier is one of the most prominent men in Port Jervis, and is connected with the wealthiest families here. He married a daughter of the late Charles St. John, who was a former President of the bank and a member of Congress from this district. Goldsmith is also Treasurer of the Union School, the Deer Park Club, and the Co-operative Fire Insurance Company.

Just how the errors in the accounts occurred cannot now be stated, as it has as yet been impossible to obtain an intelligent explanation from Goldsmith. His accounts with the other organizations with which he has been connected have been investigated, and have been found to balance to the last cent. There has been no run on the bank, and none is anticipated. Local business interests, it is said, are ready to furnish large amounts of money in the event of a demand for their funds being made by any of the depositors.

METAL TRADE MEN CONFER.

About 100 leading representatives of the metal trade were in secret session all day yesterday and long into the night in the small ballroom at the Waldorf-Astoria. They came from all parts of the country and represented dealers in and producers of all the baser metals. A. J. Caldwell was Secretary of the meeting.

A reporter for THE TIMES learned that the object of the meeting was the forming of an organization which could arrange some plan so that contracts could be made on a more satisfactory basis than at present. One of the interested men said that prices had steadily advanced in all kinds of metals, and it was impossible to make a contract for delivery in ninety days at the prices ruling at the time the contract was suggested. This was stated to be injurious in many respects, and how best to remedy it is the problem those concerned are trying to solve.

Octogenarian Seeks a Divorce.

Special to The New York Times.

CHARLOTTE, Mich., Dec. 4.—Mrs. Matilda Burchfield, eighty-one years of age, has brought suit for divorce against her husband, William, who is a few years her senior, a veteran of the civil war and a pensioner. The aged couple have lived together for many years—so many, in fact, that they are not just clear on the point. In her bill Mrs. Burchfield says her husband has utterly failed for eighteen months to provide her with the commonest necessities of life; that she has been compelled to drudge in the fields, planting and putting by crops, which her husband promptly gave away to his son-in-law.

BROOKLYN WATER SUPPLY LOW

Condition of Main Storage Reservoir at Rockville Centre Makes Officials Anxious.

Anxiety is felt by officials in charge of Brooklyn's water supply because of the unusually low level of water in the main storage reservoir of the system at Rockville Centre, L. I. Ordinarily at this season there have been from twenty to twenty-three feet of water in this reservoir. The depth of water in the big basin at present is only four feet, eleven inches. The reason for this is that the rainfall for the month of November this year has been one of the lightest registered since the reservoir was built. The total rainfall in the month was 2.69 inches, about one-half that in 1898.

The supply in the reservoir was reduced five feet in July, August, and September, and the condition of affairs was not improved in October. The light rainfall in November resulted in further decreasing the supply, instead of making up for the greater consumption of water during the Summer months.

Ordinarily from 10,000,000 to 12,000,000 gallons are drawn from this storage reservoir daily for consumption, but under existing conditions only about 5,000,000 gallons can be drawn each day.

THE WATER SUPPLY INQUIRY.

Working Committees Appointed by the Merchants' Association.

The Committee on Water Supply of the Merchants' Association met yesterday, in the rooms of the association, and organized.

A Sub-Committee on Plan, Scope, and Organization was formed and reported upon a plan of work.

The plan adopted embraces six working committees, which were appointed. The members will begin at once a thorough inquiry into the conditions and needs relating to a pure and abundant water supply for New York.

CITY HAD TWO SNOWFALLS.

Both Were Feeble and Confined to a Limited Up-Town Section.

There were two feeble attempts at a snowstorm uptown last night. The first snowfall took place about 6:30 o'clock. The flakes were large, but quickly melted. The snowstorm seemed to be limited to the section of the city lying between One Hundred and Twenty-fifth and Ninety-third Streets.

Enough snow fell to keep wet the sidewalks, especially on the side streets, until after 9 o'clock. At 10:30 snow began to fall once more, but the flakes were smaller than the earlier in the evening, and the fall soon ceased.

THREE FEET OF SNOW IN OHIO.

First Storm of the Season Occurred Yesterday.

Special to The New York Times.

ASHTABULA, Ohio, Dec. 4.—A most remarkable snowstorm struck Northeastern Ohio to-day, the first of the season. At 5 o'clock A. M. the air was filled with large flakes, and by noon, by actual measurement, there was a nineteen-inch depth on a level. This evening it is a little less than three feet deep on a level, and in places four feet.

On the Jamestown and Franklin branch of the Lake Shore some three miles south of Ashtabula trains plowed their way through four feet of snow for some distance. Street cars have been running double-headers all day and section men on all roads have been assigned to the work of shoveling away the drifts.

One of the remarkable features of the storm is that it is not general. At Erie, forty miles east of Ashtabula, the ground is bare. Railroad men arriving from Oil City, eighty-nine miles south, report the ground bare there also, and but little snow even at points many miles north of there. It is however quite probable that the storm is travelling east.

The temperature throughout the day was moderate, but to-night as the snowfall ceases the temperature is falling and the wind blowing fiercely.

The open Fall weather in this section and all along the lakes has been the talk of the marine men, but navigation will now close quickly.

Snow in New York State.

MALONE, N. Y., Dec. 4.—A heavy northeast snowstorm set in Sunday night and still continues, insuring the first good sleighing of the season.

SARANAC LAKE, N. Y., Dec. 4.—Snow fell last night to the depth of six inches. Sleighs are running to-day for the first time this season.

SHOT BY HIGHWAYMEN.

Special to The New York Times.

NORWALK, Conn., Dec. 4.—Ernest Talmage of this city was shot twice and seriously injured by highwaymen last evening shortly after 8 o'clock in a clump of woods on the old Boston-New York Turnpike Road, as he was on his way home. One bullet penetrated the body near the heart, and the other lodged in the muscles of the left arm.

The road where the encounter took place is lined with a heavy growth of underbrush, where the robbers concealed themselves until Talmage was opposite them, when they jumped out upon him. They demanded his money, and attempted to reach his pockets. Talmage is plucky and well built, and gave the highwaymen a tussle that they little expected. He had one of them down and would have come out a victor in the encounter had the other fellow not produced a revolver and fired. Talmage summoned assistance, but the men had disappeared, and a search of the surrounding country failed to reveal their whereabouts.

The police are of opinion that the highwaymen are Ward Phillips and John Tanner, the two men who sawed their way to freedom from Police Headquarters while awaiting trial for numerous burglaries. When captured, both men were armed and laden with booty. Since their escape they have been looting farmhouses and hiding in the woods. The police had an exciting chase for them on Saturday, but they eluded their pursuers not far from the place where Talmage was shot.

THE BELL CONSOLIDATION.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Dec. 4.—Local financial circles are still discussing with much interest the pending Bell Long Distance Telephone consolidation, and opinions regarding the proposition differ widely.

The announcement that the exchange of stock will be made on the basis of two for one has naturally caused some disappointment, as it had been generally expected that the Bell stockholders would get three shares of Long Distance stock for every share of Bell. But people who are close to the Bell management assert that Saturday's announcement was somewhat premature; that it has not, by any means, told the whole story, and that stockholders who have parted with their stock have certainly made a serious mistake. The fact that all the stock now offering is quickly absorbed would seem to indicate that there is good basis for these claims. Only when the official circular announcing the plan is issued—and it is expected soon—can a fair judgment be passed upon the project. But whatever else this may make clear, it is manifestly certain already that by the change, even though the new stock may be placed upon an 8 per cent. basis, the Bell stock, now commonly counted a "gilt-edged" conservative investment security, will be replaced by a stock that will be ranked for a time at least as speculative.

Beyond this it is also to be taken into account, so good authorities assert, that the present move, though of a most important character, is really only preliminary to a plan for the ultimate absorption of all the parent company's sub-corporations. This project will, of course, require much time for its accomplishment, but is bound to be very beneficial to the big corporation's stock, as well as to the securities of the smaller companies. It is likely to be demonstrated in due time that it will place Bell stockholders in a better position than at present both in the matter of the value of their investment and the actual returns thereon.

And Section 5,193 of the Revised Statutes of the United States is hereby repealed. [The section sought to be repealed provides that certificates of deposit issued to National banks for deposits of United States notes shall be counted as part of the lawful money reserve of such banks.]

"That from and after the passage of this act no United States notes or Treasury notes shall be issued or reissued of denominations less than $10, and all such outstanding notes of a lower denomination shall, whenever received at the Treasury or redeemed, be canceled and notes of denominations of $10 or upward shall be substituted therefor. "Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to modify or repeal the provisions of Sections 5,167 and 5,170 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, authorizing the Controller of the Currency to require additional deposits of bonds or of lawful money in case the market value of the bonds held to secure the circulating notes shall fall below the par value of the circulating notes outstanding for which such bonds may be deposited as security.

"And provided further, That the circulating notes furnished to National banking associations under the provisions of this act shall be of the denominations prescribed by existing law, except that no National banking association shall, after the passage of this act, be entitled to receive or to issue or reissue or place in circulation any circulating notes of a less denomination than $10.

HOUSE BILL IS INTRODUCED.

Plans for Advancing It to be Considered in Caucus To-night.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 4.—The financial bill drafted by a special committee of the Republican members was to-day introduced in the House by Representative Overstreet, of Indiana, and accorded the distinction of being bill No. 1 on the records of the House.

The text is as given out last week, and members say this will be preserved as far as possible.

Mr. Overstreet stated that definite plans for advancing and passing the measure would be determined at the Republican caucus to be held to-morrow night.

SEVEN KILLED IN COLLISION.

DENVER, Dec. 4.—A rear-end collision occurred between two passenger trains on the Denver and Rio Grande Railroad this morning, in which seven persons were killed outright and several others were severely injured. The accident happened at English Switch, about six miles east of Salida, at 6 A. M.

The killed are C. E. Osgood, Denver; H. R. Matthews, Denver; Peter Barnes, Denver; George W. Pierce, Denver; Mrs. George R. Porter, Grand Junction; A. H. Johnston, Oberlin, Ohio, and an unknown man.

Among the seriously injured are Thomas M. Gorman, Denver, and A. M. Johnston, Oberlin, Ohio.

A. H. Johnston, who was killed, was President of the Arkansas Midland Railway, had large business interests in Cleveland, and was one of the Trustees of Oberlin College. His son, A. M. Johnston, who was traveling with him, had his back broken, and will probably die.

George W. Pierce, who was killed, was a well-known mining man, and was Secretary of the Golden Fleece Mining Company, which owns valuable mines at Lake City, Col.

Train No. 5, the narrow-gauge train for Grand Junction, Durango, and New Mexico points, which left Denver last night, had been flagged at English Switch and had stopped owing to an obstruction at a bridge. Standard Gauge Train No. 15, for Glenwood Springs, was following, and, failing to get a signal to slow up, plunged into the rear of the narrow-gauge sleeper for Durango, which was filled with passengers. The Pullman was thoroughly splintered up, and the coach ahead was also wrecked. The killed and injured were in those cars.

BALDWIN SELLS HOTEL SITE.

The San Francisco Property Bought by James L. Flood.

Special to The New York Times.

SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 4.—E. J. Baldwin, better known by his sobriquet of "Lucky," this evening signed a contract to sell the Baldwin Hotel site, at Powell and Market Streets, which has remained covered with unsightly ruins for thirteen months.

The purchaser is James L. Flood, son of the bonanza millionaire, who pays $1,425,000 for the lot. The ground he secures is that which was covered by the hotel and theatre 141 feet on Market Street, 275 on Powell Street, and 137½ feet on Ellis Street. This leaves the property known as the Baldwin Annex, which has a frontage of 108 feet on Market Street, and runs back to Ellis Street, where there is a frontage of only 25 feet.

Baldwin had hoped ever since the burning of his hotel that he could get capital enough to rebuild it, but the Hibernia Bank, which has a blanket mortgage of $1,600,000 on all Baldwin's property, threatened to foreclose, and he was forced to accept Mr. Flood's terms. It is understood that Mr. Flood proposes to put up an eight-story hotel, built in the best modern style, on the site.

Samples of Corn Product at Paris.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Dec. 4.—Commissioner General Peck has decided to set aside a fund of $10,000 for a corn kitchen at the Paris Exposition. Visitors to the French show will get sweet corn from the American fields. It will be brought to Paris in refrigerators and served temptingly with pure butter, hot and appetizing. Corn cakes made of the best grade of meal will be parceled out by a typical "mammy" from the South, and corn fritters which will satisfy the palates of the most fastidious will be fried.

Child Accidentally Shot by Brother.

Special to The New York Times.

NORWALK, Conn., Dec. 4.—Thomas Flaherty, aged six years, son of Thomas Flaherty, was accidentally shot by his brother George this afternoon, and will probably die. The two boys were playing with a rifle for which an elder brother sent them, as he wanted to clean it. George stumbled and fell, discharging the weapon into his brother's breast at close range. The ball passed clear through the body, perforating the left lung and narrowly escaping the heart.

ROBERTS FORCED TO STAND ASIDE

Utah Representative-Elect Not Allowed to Take the Oath.

SPEAKER UPHOLDS A PRO

thereupon quickly subsided, and many of the spectators left the galleries.

The formal memorial and protest against the admission of Brigham H. Roberts to a seat in Congress was circulated in printed form and placed on the desks of members during the day. The main points are that Roberts is not a citizen, since "at all times after 1883 he was and now is a bigamist and polygamist," contrary to law; that he has been prosecuted and punished for "unlawful cohabitation with more than one woman," and that he was "born of British parents within the British realm and has never renounced his allegiance to Queen Victoria."

After reciting the legal and moral objections to Roberts the petition asks that he be not allowed to take the oath of office or to have a seat in the House; that a special committee investigate the subject, and that Roberts's seat be declared vacant. The document is signed by Josiah Strong, New York, President of the League of Social Service, and many others.

All during the call of names Mr. Roberts of Utah stood in the rear of the railing eagerly listening for his name, but when the balls were exhausted his name had not been called. No ball had been placed in the box for him, but by an accident he secured a seat. The names of two Republican members had not been called when the balls were exhausted, and when it was asked if any members had not been provided with seats the two Republicans and Mr. Roberts came forward.

"If there is no objection," said the Speaker, "those gentlemen whose names have not been drawn will now select seats."

There was no objection, and Mr. Roberts managed to find a vacant seat in the extreme rear of the extreme right of the hall. There he established himself.

Mr. Roberts was the observed of all observers throughout the day. His daughter sat in the gallery and watched the proceedings from beginning to end.

Roberts is a strong, vigorous, self-possessed man. He bore himself with dignity. His manner was alert. His abundant auburn hair, with a pronounced tinge of red in it, and his ample brown mustache made him a distinct mark for thousands of eyes and many glasses. He did not appear disconcerted under inspection.

Very early in the day a monster petition, said to consist of 7,000,000 names, protesting against the seating of Mr. Roberts, was brought into the hall. It had been collected by a New York newspaper. It consisted of twenty-eight rolls of names, each about two feet in diameter, incased in the American flag. These rolls were stacked up in the area in front of the Clerk's desk, and were viewed with great curiosity. Later Major McDowell, Clerk of the House, ordered all except two of the rolls taken into the lobby.

ERNE AND O'BRIEN DRAW.

In the arena of the Coney Island Athletic Club last night, Frank Erne of Buffalo, who not long ago won the lightweight championship from "Kid" Lavigne of Saginaw, Mich., fought a twenty-five-round draw with "Jack" O'Brien of New York. The lightweight championship and a percentage of the gate receipts were involved, and the crowd that witnessed the fight was almost as large as that which attended the Jeffries-Sharkey fight.

O'Brien was the aggressor from the start, but Erne was his master at boxing, and the fight resolved itself into a contest of brute strength on one side against skill on the other. Only Erne's cleverness in standing off rushes and in blocking swings saved him from a knockout several times. Toward the end of the battle all the latent brutality of the professional fighter cropped out in both men. It had been a clean fight up to the twentieth round, but after that the pair went at each other like savages. O'Brien's left eye was tightly closed and his mouth puffed badly, and Erne's left eye was also badly damaged. Referee George Siler decided the contest a draw at the end of the twenty-fifth round, and the decision was well received.

Erne was the favorite in the betting, especially in that corner of the House where the Buffalo contingent had grouped itself. These Western New York men had come to New York on a special train and with plenty of money to bet on their townsman. Their strong faith in him forced his price from 10 to 8 at the start down to 10 to 7 by the time the men entered the ring. Thomas J. Wynn, the bookmaker, was one of O'Brien's stanch supporters. He made one bet of $800 against $1,000 with "Sam" Ryan, the comedian, and had other bets at that price on the New York boy aggregating $2,500.

The fight was one of the liveliest betting affairs that was ever held in the clubhouse, and probably $100,000 was bet on the result at the ring side. Thomas Reilly, the President of the Queens County Jockey Club, one of O'Brien's supporters, bet $500 against $1,000 with Robert Smith, Erne's backer, that O'Brien would knock Erne out.

Erne towered a full head over O'Brien, but the New York boy was the more stockily built. The opening rounds of the fight were comparatively tame. About the sixteenth round it became apparent to O'Brien's managers that their man must either knock Erne out or else punish him very badly during the remainder of the fight in order to get the decision, so they ordered him to box for a knockout. He started to do so in the seventeenth round and came near being put out for his pains, for Erne dazed him with a left swing on the jaw, and had him a trifle weak at the end of the round.

O'Brien's left eye was badly puffed and his mouth swollen by the punching he received in the eighteenth round, but he was still the aggressor and forced the fighting, as he had done from the start. From this point on to the twenty-third round there were fierce onslaughts by O'Brien, which terminated usually in the aggressor being badly punished. Erne's left eye was now closed and both men were fighting with practically one eye each.

When they came to the centre for the last round Erne, for the first time, started to force matters. O'Brien came back at him, but the best he could do was to wrestle and pound Erne on the ribs in clinches. Erne stood off and sent a hard left and then a hard right, both to the jaw, and then clinched. Both men were fighting hard when the gong sounded.

The preliminary bout at catch weights between "Tom" Carter of California and "Joe" Burke of Brooklyn did not go to the limit, for in the seventh round Carter's seconds concluded that he had had enough of it and threw up the sponge.

COST OF HARVARD ATHLETICS.

$13,000 of the Expenses Went for Permanent Improvements.

Special to The New York Times.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., Dec. 4.—Athletics at Harvard for the fourteen months ending Sept. 1, 1899, necessitated the expenditure of nearly $64,000. Of this sum the management was enabled to devote more than $13,000 to betterments and permanent improvements.

These figures are contained in the annual report of S. L. Fuller, graduate manager of athletics at Harvard University, which has just been published. The fiscal year has been changed, so that it now ends on Sept. 1 instead of July 1.

"The expenses of the boat club," the report says, "have been much larger this year than in former years, owing to the change in system by which a larger number of crews are kept on the river and a larger number of men in training throughout the Spring." A summary of the finances of the various organizations follows:

Football, expenses, $10,239.74; receipts, $37,865.70; balance, $27,745.96.

The total receipts were $64,409.18; expenditures, $63,941.17.

Road Horse Association Meeting.

The question of a clubhouse will be among the subjects to be discussed at the Executive Committee meeting of the Road Horse Association of the State of New York to be held at the Hotel Cadillac to-night. The committee will report on a number of places situated near the Speedway. A report will also be heard from the committee appointed to investigate the possibility of Winter riding on the Speedway.

Messrs. Tiffany & Company beg to offer their annual holiday suggestion to intending purchasers, that an early visit will afford better opportunities for deliberation and the advantages of a complete stock to select from.

UNION SQUARE
NEW YORK.

DISASTROUS FIRE AT CLINTON.

Causes a $150,000 Loss in the Massachusetts Town.

CLINTON, Mass., Dec. 4.—A fire started in the cellar of the Clinton Theatre building this afternoon, and before the apparatus could be put into use the whole lower portion of the structure was in flames. From it the flames spread to adjoining property on every side, so that within two hours the theatre building was leveled and one and a half acres of property left a mass of smoking embers. A dozen business firms lose everything, and a score of families are rendered homeless. The entire loss will probably exceed $150,000, but a portion of the loss is covered by insurance.

The buildings other than the theatre destroyed were: Wheeler Block, A. Hawkins, Lancaster, owner; loss $8,000, partially insured; house owned by A. C. Hawkins, loss $3,400; house owned by A. C. Hawkins, loss $1,200; tenement building owned by Eben S. Buller; loss $2,300, partially insured; house owned by Eben S. Buller loss $1,500, partially insured; Lawthe Building, owned by Representative Frederick H. Bates of Sterling Junction; valued at $11,000, insurance $5,000; O'Toole Block, owned by O'Toole Brothers; loss $8,000, partially insured; house owned by the John McNad heirs, loss $1,800, partially insured.

KNIGHTS AND LADIES OF HONOR.

Open Revolt Against the Supreme Body Started in Brooklyn.

An open revolt against the supreme body of the Knights and Ladies of Honor has been begun by more than 1,000 German-American members in Brooklyn, who are now forming the nucleus of a new order. This announcement was started on Sunday at an indignation meeting, held in Military Hall, Scholes and Leonard Streets, where the grievances of the members were discussed.

A lengthy address was made by Bernard Schirmer, a prominent member of the order, during which he charged that the Knights and Ladies of Honor had neglected the timely creation of a reserve fund, despite the fact that the amounts of the insurance policies aggregate nearly $70,000,000, which failure, he said, in case of an epidemic, would inevitably lead to the bankruptcy of the organization. This, and the charge that the establishment of a new schedule of rates was contrary to the statutes, and that the officers had handled the affairs in a loose manner, constitute the principal causes of complaint.

Mr. Schirmer, in speaking of the principles of the new organization, said that all secret ceremonies are to be abolished and that to insure the prompt payment of policies a reserve fund is to be established immediately, individual insurances to be limited to $1,000 each. It was stated that six of the Brooklyn lodges have already seceded.

GERMAN HOSPITAL OPENED.

The new German hospital, situated at St. Nicholas Avenue and Stanhope Street, Brooklyn, was formally opened yesterday to the public in the presence of a large assemblage. The hospital was the creation of the Plattdeutsche Volksfest Verein of old Williamsburg. The institution covers an area of half a block.

A meeting of the Board of Trustees followed the opening of the hospital, at which there were present the Women's Auxiliary attached to the institution, the various staffs, and invited guests. Carl Evartz presided.

It was announced that the capital of the German Hospital Society, which includes the expenses of building operations, is $344,871.42. The house physicians selected are Drs. L. Jacobowisch, C. P. Freschbeier, Ernest Thun, and Edward Randall. It was announced that the hospital was on a sound financial basis, and that there was a surplus on hand of $64,000, sufficient to meet expenses for two years. A check was received from an unknown contributor for $1,000.

DEAF-MUTES IN A FARCE.

Lyric Hall Crowded to See "Thrillby" in the Manual Language.

An address in which not a word was spoken, a cleverly worded farce in which the players did not utter a sound, and dancing to music that the dancers could not hear, formed part of a paradoxical entertainment given last night at Lyric Hall.

Nearly 400 persons witnessed the address and farce in silent but voluble enjoyment. Those in the audience chatted freely among themselves throughout both the lecture and farce, though not a sound disturbed either lecturer or players.

The entertainment was given under the auspices of the League of Elect Surds, a society of deaf-mutes of this city. Prof. Enoch Henry Currier, Principal of the New York Institution for the Instruction of the Deaf and Dumb, spoke on his fingers of the life and work of the late Dr. Isaac Lewis Peet, a former Principal of the New York Institution, many of whose old pupils were in the audience. He was followed by "Thrillby," a burlesque on the dramatization of Du Maurier's novel.

The author of the farce, Thomas F. Fox, and the actors were all deaf-mutes, the story being told in manual language, supplemented by voluble gesture.

Five-Year-Old Boy Kills His Brother.

MOBILE, Ala., Dec. 4.—At State Line, Miss., Edmund, the five-year-old son of Dr. W. H. Bokyn, shot and instantly killed his brother Roderick, aged eleven, and severely wounded in the right arm his brother Tom, aged thirteen. The older boys were playing with an air gun, which Edmund wanted, and when they refused to give it to him he declared he would shoot them. He went into the house, got a small shotgun, and put his threat into execution. Tom saved his life by getting behind a tree.

Fire in Johns Hopkins University.

BALTIMORE, Dec. 4.—A fire, which at one time threatened to be serious, occurred this morning in Dalton Hall, the chemical laboratory of Johns Hopkins University, damaging the building and contents to the extent of about $12,000, which is fully covered by insurance. The origin of the fire is a mystery, and the presence of a quantity of sodium, which chemical generates large quantities of gas when reached by water, made it difficult to control, but it was finally confined to the building in which it originated.

Train Strikes Chicago Street Car.

Although the seating capacity of Madison Square Garden was at no time heavily taxed by the spectators who witnessed the six-day international bicycle race in progress there under the auspices of the American Cycle Racing Association yesterday, enough interest was shown to make it a safe prediction that before the week is out the event will have proved to be one of the most popular sporting events of the Winter season.

It is likely that the provisions of the Collins law, prohibiting contestants from riding more than twelve hours out of the twenty-four will tend to increase public interest in the match, for the continuous accession of fresh riders to the track naturally means frequent bursts of phenomenal speed, and the public already seems to prefer this to the spectacle of a score or so of tortured, toiling men, whose steadily failing vitality shows itself in the ever-depressing lines of their countenances and the feebleness of their movements. The new law, too, will manifest itself in making a new record for six-day bicycle races, from present appearances.

At noon yesterday the leaders had covered 266 miles and one lap, at a rate of something more than twenty-two miles an hour for the twelve hours, but at midnight their average had fallen to just about twenty-one and one-sixteenth miles an hour. Could they keep this up for the whole 144 hours Champion Miller's six-day record of 2,190 miles would be far eclipsed, but calculations cannot well be based upon the data yet at hand.

Miller and Waller tried to steal a lap or so yesterday afternoon, with the aid of the law, but the attempt was a failure. The men ride in two-hour shifts, a practice, by the way, that nearly all the racers have now adopted, and about ten minutes before retiring Miller put on a tremendous burst of speed, with the idea that when Partner Waller came on fresh from his rest he would be able to maintain whatever advantage he had gained. It didn't work that way, however, for Waller seemed stiff at first, and lost considerably, until a few laps warmed him up to his work.

Most of the interest yesterday centred about the tactics of the leading teams—Gimm and Pierce, Miller and Waller, and Eaton and Walthour. Both Miller and Waller have won renown as individuals in six-day races, while Eaton and his partner have shown that they have wonderful speed by their racing for comparatively short distances. The policy of the veterans of the six-day track seemed to be to tire out and discourage the new comers, and there were lively spurts whenever they came side by side.

Several falls occurred during the early morning hours, and though no one was seriously injured, several teams retired from the contest. Stone caught a heavy fall at the Madison Avenue turn at 5 o'clock and lay unconscious for several minutes. A long gash in his head had to be sewed up.

He resumed riding four hours later, but the ride had been too much for him, and he and his partner, R. Miller, announced their retirement shortly before noon. Peltier and Ruel also had heavy falls.

Following are the teams that have withdrawn from the race, with their times of stopping and total mileage:

Peabody and Peltier, 2:15 A. M.; 47 miles 1 lap.

Rivierre and Brown, 3 A. M.; 63 miles 5 laps.

Ireland and Ruel, 5:15 A. M.; 119 miles 2 laps.

Johnston and Comeau, 8 A. M.; 159 miles 1 lap.

R. Miller and Stone, 11:30 A. M.; 240 miles 3 laps.

Michel and Fallon, 6:38 P. M.; 365 miles 7 laps.

Julius and Lawson, 6:58 P. M.; 404 miles 1 lap.

Peabody continued on the track after he and Peltier had withdrawn as a team, in order to make an individual score, but he soon gave up the attempt and retired.

At least one tack was found on the track during the day, and the whole course was immediately swept. The matter was reported to the police, but the tack is believed to have come there by accident. It caused no damage. There was great excitement twenty minutes before midnight, when Eaton made a great showing of speed and pulled away from all the racers, keeping up the pace until he had gained a full lap, putting himself and Walthour foremost in the race by that distance.

Boake's wheel broke down at 1 o'clock this morning as he was making the turn at the Madison Avenue end of the track. A new wheel was provided, and he continued.

THE WEATHER.

Since Sunday night the storm has moved from the District of Columbia to the upper St. Lawrence Valley, with considerably increased energy, while the crest of the high area has moved almost southward to the lower Missouri Valley. The high pressure now extends throughout the South and well into the Ohio Valley and upper lake region, the consequent decided fall in temperature reaching to the Atlantic Coast. Comparatively cold weather is now general east of the Rocky Mountains, the line of zero temperature yesterday morning extending into northwestern Iowa, and the freezing line almost to the Gulf of Mexico.

Heavy and killing frosts appeared in the Gulf States, warnings for which were issued Sunday morning, and further warnings were issued yesterday morning for heavy frosts last night over the same districts.

During the past twenty-four hours there have been general but mostly light snows from the middle and upper Mississippi Valley eastward, while fair weather prevailed elsewhere. In the Pacific Coast and plateau regions there has been but little change in either weather or temperature, except that rain has fallen on the north coast.

The eastward movement of the high area will cause a continuation of the cold weather east of the Mississippi River, with still lower temperature in the Middle Atlantic States and New England. A well defined area of low pressure, which has appeared in the British Northwest, will cause a rise in the temperature west of the Mississippi River during to-day, and the rise will probably extend to-morrow throughout the East, except in New England and on the immediate Atlantic Coast.

Generally fair weather will prevail to-day and to-morrow, except that rain or snow and colder weather are probable to-morrow in Montana and Western North Dakota.

On the New England coast fresh to brisk west to north winds will prevail. On the Middle Atlantic Coast they will become fresh southerly to-morrow, and on the south coast they will remain mostly fresh northerly.

3 A. M.	38	48	50
6 A. M.	39	43	48
9 A. M.	40	39	48

4 P. M.	30	41	45
6 P. M.	40	37	43
9 P. M.	44	36	42
12 P. M.	46	35	40

Average temperatures yesterday were as follows:

Printing House Square	45%
Weather Bureau	42
Corresponding date 1898	44
Corresponding date for last twenty years	37

The maximum temperature yesterday was 48 degrees at 3 A. M. and the minimum 35 degrees at 10 P. M. The humidity at 8 A. M. was 90 per cent. and at 8 P. M. 78 per cent. The barometer read at 8 A. M. 29.46 and at 8 P. M. 29.74.

"FATHER BILL" DALY ACCUSED.

Release from Apprenticeship for the Jockey Who Complained.

"Father Bill" Daly, the turfman, appeared in the Adams Street Police Court, Brooklyn, yesterday to answer to a complaint of ill-treatment made by James Hathersall, one of his jockeys. The boy, who is sixteen years old, was apprenticed to Daly in 1898 by his father, Matthew Hathersall, of 452 West Twenty-ninth Street, Manhattan, for five years. According to the lad's story, he was beaten by Daly at the Gravesend race track on Sept. 14 last. Mr. Daly, he said, beat him with a strap and kicked him after he returned to the stable from exercising a horse.

Mr. Daly denied that he kicked the boy. He admitted using a strap on him, but said that he was angry because the boy, on dismounting from the horse, had beaten the filly over the head with a heavy iron bit.

It was brought out in court that the Stewards of The Jockey Club had written to the boy's father releasing the lad from Daly's service. Magistrate Brenner ended the case by declaring the boy's apprenticeship to Daly at an end.

In telling his story young Hathersall said that Daly used to give him about 10 cents a month for spending money, and cautioned him against extravagance.

WERE MARRIED ON AN OUTING.

NEWARK, N. J., Dec. 4.—It leaked out here to-day that Dr. Joseph Kussy and Miss Josephine Hertz, daughter of Mrs. Isaac Hertz, of 1,098 Broad Street, were quietly married at Trenton on Thanksgiving Day. The couple had started on that day for Philadelphia to see a football game. On the way Dr Kussy's suggestion that they leave the train at Trenton and get married was adopted. The ceremony over, they boarded another train and arrived at their destination in time for the game.

By telegraph that night they notified their respective families of their marriage, and then went on a honeymoon which lasted until Saturday. Dr. Kussy is a graduate of the University of Pennsylvania.

POINT TO MURDER OR SUICIDE.

ELIZABETH, N. J., Dec. 4.—Prosecutor English and County Detective Keron were informed of a peculiar story late this afternoon, too late to take any steps toward investigation before morning.

Francis Francisco of Millburn and John Adams of Springfield, according to this story, were in the woods looking for game yesterday afternoon. While near Hartshorn's stone crusher, and about half a mile from the road leading to Summit, they saw white objects in a clump of underbrush. They made an investigation, and found several articles, which they carried to Millburn.

This is given as a list of what they have in their possession: One pair gold rimmed glasses, one pair of black kid gloves, one small black veil, three hatpins, black topped; one handkerchief, a woman's; two sponges, both new; two vials, three cornucopias, made of newspaper; three pieces of cloth, apparently torn from a handkerchief; one newspaper, dated Dec. 1.

The vials were from the drug store of Petty, in the Prudential Building, in Newark. They had contained chloroform. The handkerchief is said to have been still wet with the poison when found, and the condition of the rags was the same.

The authorities believe that the owner of the articles named was either murdered and the body removed or that, attempting to commit suicide, was disturbed and abandoned such purpose.

THE NEW TELEGRAPH SYSTEM.

CHICAGO, Dec. 4.—The Tribune to-morrow will say:

"Uncle Sam's Post Office will be the first to feel the effect of competition with the Pollak-Virag automatic telegraph system, according to the plans under way for the introduction of the machines in the United States. It is intended to establish a service with this device which will enable merchants and other business men to send long letters at such low rates as to make the plan acceptable.

"At the beginning of the business it is planned that the new system will be confined largely to night service. When the wires are idle in the night a great quantity of messages could be sent and delivered at their destinations at the other side of the continent the next morning. The rate is to be made so low that a merchant could afford to send messages 1,000 words in length.

"Inventors Pollak and Virag will leave for Budapest on Dec. 13. They will busy themselves immediately with the manufacture of machines for use in the United States. It will be three months, they say, before machines will be ready for shipment."

WANTS MR. HANNA TO REMAIN.

Henry C. Payne, National Republican Committeeman from Wisconsin is at the Waldorf-Astoria. Talking with a reporter yesterday he said:

"I have seen the published statements quoting me as authority for a rumor that United States Senator M. A. Hanna was to retire from the Chairmanship of the Republican National Committee. I never made it, and the report must be the result of a misunderstanding. In 1896 I was one of those who urged Mr. Hanna to take the Chairmanship. He was very reluctant to do so, but finally consented. I hope he will continue in the position.

"With regard to the proposed plan to make the Republican vote in Congressional districts the basis of representation in the National Convention, I am convinced that the National Committee will recommend such a change to the National Convention. It is on the same principle that delegates are chosen to the Republican State Conventions in New York, and is eminently more fair than the system now in vogue. Under the latter a Congressional district which is almost unanimously Democratic has equal voice in a Republican National Convention with a Congressional district that is overwhelmingly Republican."

Referring to the probable nominee for Vice President next year, Mr. Payne said:

"It is generally admitted that the nomination will be conceded to the East, and the names most prominently mentioned are Elihu Root of New York, Secretary of War; Gov. Theodore Roosevelt of New York, and John W. Griggs of New Jersey, Attorney General of the United States."

MILWAUKEE'S FIRST WHITE SON.

From The Milwaukee Wisconsin.

Sixty-three years, six months, and twenty-four days ago, or, as the records have it, on May 4, 1836, Henry Sivyer, then a sturdy young pioneer of the partially known Northwest, hurriedly issued from a modest cottage which stood on the river bank just back of where J. C. Iversen's East Water Street store now is, and in breathless haste rushed to the office of Dr. Chase, announcing that his sister-in-law, Mrs. William Sivyer, had given birth to a fine baby boy. There was a big jollification among the neighbors that night, for this was the first whieb oy born in Milwaukee. The parents decided they would call him Charles, but at the request of Solomon Juneau they gave him the middle name of Milwaukee, to honor the historic event.

To-day Charles Milwaukee Sivyer, wearing very comfortably his sixty-three and a half years, and his uncle, Henry Sivyer, stood near the spot which the little cottage occupied in 1836, and participated in the unveiling of a memorial tablet which the Old Settlers' Club has placed on the south side of the entrance to the Iversen store to mark the birthplace of the city's first white boy.

The tablet is the first of a series which from time to time will be placed at different places in the city under the auspices of the Old Settlers' Club. It was formally presented to the city by Col. A. G. Weisgert, President of the club, was accepted by Mayor Rose, and when the transfer was over Charles Milwaukee Sivyer made a brief address, recalling the period which it commemorates.

The tablet, which is of bronze, is 20 by 36 inches, and bears the following inscription:

"Birthplace of Milwaukee's first white boy, Charles Milwaukee Sivyer, May 4, 1836. Erected by Brodhead estate under the auspices of Old Settlers' Club, Milwaukee County, November, 1899."

Young Hunter's Tragic Death.

From The Philadelphia Record.

Carelessness on a hunting expedition cost eighteen-year-old Horace Baker his life at Baumstown, Penn., Tuesday. He, with several companions, had been after rabbits, and to rest he sat on a fence at Morris Deturk's farm, holding his cocked gun loosely in his hands. The weapon slipped from his grasp, and, striking the ground, sent the shot from both barrels at his head, blowing it almost completely off. He was the son of John Baker of Pottstown. His elder brother David was married the same day, and the family's day of gladness was turned into one of deepest sorrow.

Non-Union Miners Working at Diamondville, Wyo., Forced to Flee.

CHEYENNE, Wyoming, Dec. 4.—A week ago 600 miners employed in the mines of the Diamondville Coal and Coke Company, at Diamondville, Wyoming, struck for an increase in wages. Their demands were refused by the company, and after a short shut-down operations were resumed with a small force of non-union men. Yesterday a mob of 300 women and girls, armed with guns, knives, clubs, and stones, marched on the mines and compelled the operators to flee.

The miners at work were dragged and driven away. Several were injured by being struck with clubs, and one man was shot at. The small force of deputies guarding the property of the company was powerless.

The miners, it is said, have been importing arms and ammunition.

MAFEKING'S SIEGE RAISED

Asserted that the Boer Forces Have Been Withdrawn.

RUMOR OF KIMBERLEY'S RELIEF

British Officer Sends Telegram Which Is Construed to Mean Methuen Has Reached His Destination.

LONDON, Dec. 5.—Mafeking is safe. A dispatch from Cape Town says:

"The Cape Times has the following dispatch from Mafeking under date of Nov. 30:

"'Gen. Cronje with 100 wagons and a large body of Boers has left his laager, practically raising the siege, although desultory firing can be heard.'"

Further advices received here say that the British have captured twenty-five burghers of Commandant Dutait's force.

The Evening News says it learns that a cable dispatch was received to-day from an officer of the Guards saying, simply: "In Kimberley," which, it is added, may mean that Gen. Methuen's vanguard has entered Kimberley. The fact that the De Beers Mines Foundry is casting shells, while the garrison seldom replies to the Boers' artillery is said to point to a scarcity of ammunition at Kimberley, partially accounting for Gen. Methuen's haste.

The special correspondent of the Daily News with Gen. Methuen, telegraphing from Modder River on the day after the battle, says: "I hear that the Boers are in full retreat to Bloemfontein."

The Times has the following from Frere Camp, dated Nov. 28:

A dispatch from Durban says that persons arriving from Pretoria assert that the Boers are full of confidence and are well prepared for a six months' siege of Pretoria.

All the news from Natal emphasizes the difficulties before Gen. Clery. There is a growing belief that some delicate flanking operation has been intrusted to some tactician, while Gen. Hildyard carries out the direct front demonstration.

The latest advices from Ladysmith, dated Nov. 25, say the shelling of that place was continued. It also appears that Gen. Schalk, commanding the Boers, sent a message suggesting that all the wounded be sent to a neutral camp, and that Gen. White peremptorily refused, when, it is added, the Boers deliberately shelled the hospital.

All accounts agree that the Boer shells were much more damaging than previously. A number of civilians and police were killed or wounded, while the Liverpool and Gloucester battalions lost eleven men Nov. 24. The siege of Ladysmith was then growing stronger. The Boers were estimated to number from ten to fifteen thousand men. The health of the British garrison was good.

The Boer force at Colenso is estimated to be 15,000 men, with fifteen guns. A farmer arrested by the Boers and released Nov. 29 has arrived at Estcourt. He says Gen. Joubert personally commands the Colenso force.

A letter from an officer at Ladysmith reveals a novel feature of a modern battle. The writer says that at the battle of Reitfontein "several ladies arrived on bicycles. Of course, they kept at a distance, but a shell pitched close to them, caused them to pedal off to a safer position."

A Dublin correspondent declares that "owing to startling information as to the existence of a dynamite conspiracy in order to quicken the flow of Boer subscriptions, the executive has decided to double the guards at all the military barracks in the district."

The afternoon newspapers welcome the appointment of Mr. Adelbert F. Hay as United States Consul at Pretoria. The St. James's Gazette says:

"It is by numerous small indications rather than by striking outbursts that the real depth of international sentiment can be gauged, as between the two great countries, who prefer making their sympathy plain to one another to parading it before the world. The appointment of Mr. Hay is one of those small but significantly important signs by which the impartial observer can test the sincerely good feeling between ourselves and the United States."

The Westminster Gazette says:

"If Mr. Chamberlain is speaking to-day he will undoubtedly turn to Mr. Hay's appointment as convincing proof that an alliance exists. We do not make such a sweeping deduction. It suffices to say it is pleasant to think that our interests are represented by one whose representations can hardly fail to be received with consideration by the Transvaal."

Patriotic demonstrations in the theatres and music halls of London continue unabated. There was a remarkable scene at the Empire last evening when Mrs. Brown-Potter recited a poem called "Ordered to the Front," with soldiers and sailors grouped around her on the stage.

On each side of Mrs. Potter stood a sailor, one carrying the American and the other the British flag. When the curtain fell and rose again to an encore she held the two flags together amid loud cheering, the entire audience rising and singing "God Save the Queen." Lord Rothschild and a number of other prominent men were in the house.

The Cape Town Correspondent of The Standard says:

"The Cape Government intends, at an early date, to send one of the Ministers to England to urge upon the Imperial authorities the acceptance of the Cape Cabinet's view regarding the final settlement after the war."

MODDER RIVER'S HARD FIGHT.

LONDON, Dec. 5.—Julian Ralph, describing in The Daily Mail this morning the battle at Modder River, says:

"I can testify that the British never once saw the enemy; yet they were not able to raise hand or foot without being riddled.

"Despite all this, however, the day belonged to the artillery. The infantry never advanced two paces during this day of hell. The shells of our guns were accurately planted in the enemy's trenches and broke the heart of the Boers; for after dark they all retreated."

Another correspondent with Gen. Lord Methuen's column, telegraphing from Modder River last Thursday, says:

"The Waterloo of the campaign has been fought and won. The battle was conducted with unprecedented stubbornness on both sides. There was one continuous roar, like the explosion of countless firecrackers. There was no flinching on either side, and not a moment's pause.

"For five hours the British batteries poured tons of shrapnel and shells into the Boer positions. Lord Methuen had twenty-two guns, and each fired an average of 200 rounds. The Boers had an almost equal number of guns, which, it is reported, were mostly served by French and German artillerists.

"It is believed that the Boers had occupied the position seven weeks before, and had spent the interval in fortifying and rendering it, as they considered, impregnable. They did not seem to fear to expend their ammunition, and their guns were well and smartly handled.

"Owing to the bend in the river on the right, the Boers had an opportunity of cross-firing on the British attack. A Boer Hotchkiss was directed with marvelous accuracy against a British Maxim, killing the Sergeant in charge, wounding an officer, and disabling the gun. This occurred quite at the beginning of the engagement. Whenever the Boer fire was silenced in one direction it was immediately reopened in another.

"Owing to the terrific fire, nobody on the plain was out of range. Stretcher bearers found it impossible to go forward in the few cases they were called upon to attend, and the wounded were compelled, if possible, to crawl out of the lines.

"No quarter seems to have been given on either side. The British assert that, amid the bullets, the ambulance wagons displayed their flags prominently to advantage. These were repeatedly driven back and compelled to take refuge out of sight.

"It is alleged that the Boers used dumdums and made special targets of the horses on the plain, in the hope of hitting the riders. While the Argyll Highlanders were pushing across the river they were fired upon from a house and several fell. Thereupon the Highlanders stormed the house, and, although the Boers hoisted a white flag, no attention was paid to it, and all the Boers were shot.

"It is reported that Gen. Cronje, with his contingent, retreated toward Langeberg at 4 o'clock in the afternoon. Others followed in the direction of Jacobsdal, and the main body of the Boers retired with the guns about 8 o'clock in the evening.

"On the following morning at daybreak the British fired a few shells into the village. Getting no response, a patrol of cavalry crossed the river and found the enemy's camp deserted. Dead Boers, and many who were dying, were to be seen everywhere in the intrenchments, as well as numerous new graves. Several buildings were in smoking ruins.

"Some of the Boer prisoners say that Gen. Cronje was in supreme command. He had to whip his men to prevent them from deserting, and, despite this, many threw down their rifles and fled."

"The severest engagement our column has yet had, and probably the severest of the whole campaign, was fought yesterday on the banks of the Modder River. The battle was waged fiercely for nearly fourteen hours.

"The enemy occupied a strongly intrenched position, their front extending five miles along the bank of the stream. They were well supplied with artillery and fought desperately.

"Our force consisted of the Second Battalion of the Coldstream Guards, the First Battalion of the Scots Guards, the Third Battalion of the Grenadier Guards, the First Battalion of the Northumberland Fusiliers, the Second Battalion of the Yorkshire Light Infantry, (the King's Own,) a part of the First Battalion of the Loyal North Lancashire Regiment; the Ninth Lancers, the Mounted Infantry, three batteries of field artillery, and the First Battalion of the Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders, (Princess Louise's.)

"The latter reinforced us from Gen. Wauchope's brigade and arrived just in time for the fight. The battle started at daybreak, our guns shelling the Boers' left. The enemy replied with artillery, Hotchkiss and Maxims, and the artillery duel lasted some hours. Then there was a brief lull in the enemy's operations, of which the General immediately took advantage. Our infantry advanced across the plain toward the river in two brigades. The Guards, on the right, were met by an awful hail of bullets from the enemy's sharpshooters, posted close to the river on the opposite bank. Ours had no cover whatever, and were simply mowed down. It seemed impossible to live through the terrible fire, but the brave fellows did not retreat an inch. The Boer fire was horribly accurate, and they must have numbered at least 10,000.

"The Scots Guards advanced 600 yards before they were fired on. Then they had to lie down to escape the deadly fusillade, which lasted, without intermission, throughout the day.

"The Highlanders made several attempts to force a passage of the river, but they were exposed to such a murderous enfilading fire that they had to retire after they had suffered terribly. Subsequently a party of the Guards got over and held their own for hours against a vastly superior force.

"The general opinion of the staff is that there had never been such a sustained fire in the annals of the British Army as that which our troops had to face yesterday. Our men fell in dozens while trying to rush the bridge.

"Among the many heroic deeds, one of the most conspicuous was that of Lieut. Col. Codrington of the Coldstream Guards, Capt. Sellpein of the Queensland contingent, and a dozen members of the Coldstream Guards, who jumped into the river and swam nearly to the other side in the face of a steady fire, but who were forced to retire, and, joining hands, swam back, two of their number being nearly drowned in the retreat.

"The British guns kept up a heavy fire all day, and fearful havoc was wrought on the Boer position, the enemy being forced to fly from their intrenchments. Night put an end to the terrible bloodshed. The infantry brigade was dreadfully cut up.

"The Boers retreated at night, taking their guns with them, and we are now occupying their positions. The enemy's loss was tremendous."

Commenting on the descriptions of the battle, The Times says editorially:

"The battle affords splendid proof of the unsurpassed qualities of the British soldier; but, while victories won solely by the exercise of those qualities are indeed magnificent, they are not war. They fill us with pride, but with pride not unmingled with regret at the persistent perversity of circumstance which, apparently, prevents us obtaining equal or greater results by processes savoring a little of that military science of which we hear so much."

VAN ALEN WANTS TO TAKE PART.

LONDON, Dec. 4.—J. J. Van Alen, the American millionaire, has had an unsuccessful experience, it seems, in attempting to render aid to the British wounded in South Africa. He first offered the War Office an ambulance fully equipped, to the extent of £10,000, to be officered and manned by the English army, on condition that he be allowed to accompany it to the front. The War Office replied, asking in what capacity he could go, and this produced an offer from Mr. Van Alen to go in any capacity, however modest. The War Office was compelled to decline.

Mr. Van Alen then offered the ambulance to the Medical Hospital Ship Committee. The latter, finding the ambulance adapted to land uses only, consulted with the War Office, and eventually informed Mr. Van Alen that the committee would be glad to take him to South Africa as a guest, but that, on arriving at Cape Town, it would be necessary to turn him and the ambulance over to the army, in which event the two would become a hospital section, possibly having to remain in Cape Town.

His main object, it is believed, was to get to the front, and it is thought that he had no special desire to do hospital work except on that condition. An unconfirmed report is in circulation that he may make a similar offer to the Boers.

AMERICANS VISIT THE QUEEN.

LONDON, Dec. 4.—The American doctors and nurses who are going to South Africa on the American hospital ship Maine visited Windsor Castle this afternoon under the guidance of Major Cabell. A landau and an omnibus from the royal stables took the party from the station. They were received by Lord Pelham-Clinton, Master of the Queen's Household. The visitors were escorted through the State and private apartments. Later the party went to Cumberland Lodge for tea, at the invitation of Princess Christian of Schleswig-Holstein, daughter of Queen Victoria.

Each member of the party was presented separately, and her Majesty said:

"I am glad to see you. It is so good of you to come over to help my men."

The Society of American Women in London gave an at home this evening for the benefit of the Maine fund. All the principal members of the American colony attended, although Ambassador Choate was the only member of the Diplomatic Corps present. An interesting musical programme was carried through, and a substantial addition to the Maine fund was secured in the form of subscriptions.

Mrs. Joseph Chamberlain, wife of the Secretary of State for the Colonies, was conspicuous among the guests.

Lady Randolph Churchill has been summoned to Windsor Castle, where she will dine and spend the night, to-morrow. It is said that the object of the visit is that she may discuss privately with the Queen the plans in regard to the Maine and other matters connected with the movement.

TRANSPORT ISMORE BROKEN UP.

LONDON, Dec. 4.—An official dispatch from Cape Town announced that the stranded transport Ismore broke up yesterday evening. Her stern is out of water, but her bow is gone. All hands and 20 horses out of 350 were saved.

The loss of the Ismore's horses is quite serious at the present moment, when they were particularly needed. They consisted of selected, trained chargers and gun-teams.

It is not yet clear whether the six field guns on board the transport were saved. In any case, much war material and hospital equipment were lost.

YOUNG HAY'S APPOINTMENT MADE.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 4.—It will not be possible for Adelbert Hay to start for his post at Pretoria until next week. The State Department to-day gave out the formal announcement of the appointment of Mr. Hay as follows:

"The President has appointed Adelbert S. Hay of New Hampshire, Consul of the United States at Pretoria, South African Republic, Dec. 2, 1899."

This announcement dispels any doubt that may have existed at first as to Mr. Hay's status. He is beyond doubt a full-fledged Consul, and as there cannot be two men holding the same place, Mr. Macrum must have lost his place as Consul at Pretoria by this appointment. Technically he is on leave of absence, his request for such a leave having been granted by the State Department with permission for him to return to the United States.

Canadians Land in South Africa.

CAPE TOWN, Nov. 30.—The Canadian contingent of troops for service in South Africa landed to-day and were given an enthusiastic reception. They were greeted with continuous cheers and the heartiest welcome.

Transports Arrive at Cape Town.

CAPE TOWN, Cape Colony, Dec. 4.—The British transport Hurona, from New Orleans, Nov. 3, has arrived here. The transport Canning, from London, Nov. 12, has also arrived here, with the First Battery of Howitzers.

MANILA, Dec. 4.—A dispatch from Santa Cruz, Province of South Ilocos, forwarded by courier to San Fabian, says that Gen. Young, with three troops of the Third Cavalry and Major Peyton C. March's battalion of the Thirty-third Infantry, arrived at Santa Cruz to-day. The Americans left Namacpacan, Province of Union, this morning, expecting to have a hard fight at Tagudin, in South Ilocos Province, but they found, on arriving there, that 600 rebels, under Gen. Tino, had evacuated thirty-six hours before, deserting an almost impregnable position.

The insurgents had been intrenched at Tagudin, on the north side of the river, where a hundred well-disciplined troops could have slaughtered a whole brigade crossing the river, with the men up to the armpits in water.

The residents of Tagudin received the Americans outside the town with a brass band. They had been robbed of almost everything by the insurgents and were glad to welcome friendly and protecting troops.

A similar reception awaited Gen. Young at Santa Cruz. Prominent citizens, headed by a band, escorted the American officers to houses where rest and refreshment were offered.

Gen. Young's command was almost without food. The men had been living on the country, which affords but little, and the horses are completely worn out, most of them without shoes.

Gen. Young hopes to find Aguinaldo in Benguet Mountain Pass and to capture him there. Both entrances to Benguet are fortified. Two troops of the Third Cavalry will reinforce Gen. Young in the pass. There is no communication between his small command and any of the other American columns, except indirectly, perhaps, by sighting and signaling United States gunboats bound to or from Manila.

The inhabitants of Santa Cruz and of other towns through which the Americans passed say that Aguinaldo and his entire refugee army have gone into the mountains eastward since the Oregon, Samar, and Callao attacked Vigan and landed a force there.

In several towns Gen. Young was shown letters written by Lieut. Gillmore, showing that he had been kindly treated by the citizens and had been entertained by them when he passed through last May.

Reports indicate that all the American prisoners, some twenty-five or thirty, were at one time in Benguet Province, but it is supposed now that they have been removed into Lepanto Province.

Sword and Revolver Found on Rebel Captain Killed in Battle.

MANILA, Dec. 4.—Capt. Rumbold, with thirty-five men of Company G, Thirty-second Infantry, while escorting the Signal Corps laying the wire from Porac to Florida Blanca, charged and routed seventy insurgents, killing a Captain and several privates.

The Americans found on the Captain the sword and revolver that were taken from the body of Naval Cadet Welborn C. Wood, who was killed by the insurgents while in command of the gunboat Urdaneta, when that vessel was captured in the Orani River.

Germans Garrison the Carolines.

MANILA, Dec. 4.—The Spanish transport Alava and the gunboats Villalobos and Quiros, with the Spanish garrison and civilians of the Caroline Islands, arrived here to-day. They report that the German Governors of the islands, who arrived on the warship Jaguar, occupied Yap Nov. 3, Reipan Nov. 16, and Ponape Oct. 3. They garrisoned the islands with fifteen men each. The Spanish Governors of Yap and Ponape said they considered the small German garrisons in danger from the natives. The Spanish gunboats will probably be offered for sale to the United States Government.

HIGH FENCE HIS REVENGE.

Mr. Schwartz's Action Against Neighbor Who Charged Trespass.

Trouble has arisen between the families of Louis Schwartz of 31 Stevens Avenue, Jersey City, and Mrs. Josephine Miller, who lives next door. Mrs. Miller owns 29 and 27. In the latter lived a family named Bolte. They moved a short time ago. Mr. Bolte presented a number of plants growing in the yard to Mr. Schwartz. When he removed them Mrs. Miller notified him, so he alleges, that if he removed any of the soil clinging to the roots of the plants, she would prosecute him. He paid no attention to her. On the following day he was notified by Mrs. Miller's lawyer that if he trespassed further upon her property suit would be brought at once.

Mr. Schwartz considered the matter. He took note of the fact that his house was several feet from the edge of his lot, and that there was a large and pleasant window in the side of Mrs. Miller's house. He decided to build a fence on his spare space. This he did, making the fence twenty feet high. This greatly interfered with the view from Mrs. Miller's window. To make the fence more objectionable, as he admits, Mr. Schwartz covered the side facing Mrs. Miller's premises with black tar paper.

When Mrs. Miller was asked yesterday what action she intended to take she declined to make any statement, except to say that she had referred the matter to her lawyer.

House 140 Years Old Destroyed.

Fire was discovered about 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon in a one-story frame building at Huguenot, S. I., owned by Charles Neumiceu, proprietor of a duck farm at that place. The building was said to be 140 years old, and was a landmark. Before assistance could be summoned the building was burned to the ground. The house was insured for $800 and the furniture for $1,000. The fire originated from an overheated stove.

RECEIVER FOR HARPERS.

State Trust Company Appointed—Application for Dissolution a Step Toward the Reorganization.

George L. Rives, acting on behalf of the Directors of Harper & Brothers, yesterday made application to Justice Gildersleeve for the dissolution of that corporation. Notice of his intended action had been served, as provided by statute, on the Attorney General, but Deputy Attorney General Francis, who represented the Attorney General, said there was no opposition to the application. The Court granted the application and appointed Francis C. Cantine as referee to take proofs of the claims of the company, and hear objectors to the dissolution of the corporation. Mr. Rives then applied for the appointment of a temporary receiver to take charge of the company's assets, and suggested that the State Trust Company be the receiver appointed. This appointment was made.

Mr. Rives, in the course of his remarks to the Court, referred to the fact that the ordinary petition asking for a voluntary dissolution of a domestic corporation had been filed with the schedules annexed. The assets are estimated at $6,282,716.55, while the liabilities amount to $3,163,212.19. The liabilities are distributed as follows:

Five per cent. mortgage bonds sold	$200,000.00
Mortgage on house 163 West Twenty-first Street	6,000.00
*Floating debt	2,813,421.26
Due to authors, wages, &c., (estimated,)	66,000.00
Due for unexpired subscriptions, advertisements paid for but not yet printed, &c.	77,790.93
Total	$3,163,212.19

*About $1,100,000 of the floating debt is secured by the pledges of mortgage bonds.

The last item, subscriptions, advertisements, &c., represents liabilities which will probably be wiped out in the course of issuing the various Harper periodicals.

These legal proceedings are stated to be steps in the general scheme of reorganizing the company which was started recently by the action of J. P. Morgan & Co. in calling upon the State Trust Company to take possession of the property of Harper & Brothers because the company could not pay the claim of $850,000 held by J. P. Morgan & Co. The State Trust Company was empowered to do this by the terms of the mortgage which Harper & Brothers gave it, and which is due in 1997. A receiver is now applied for in order to protect all the creditors of the company.

Harper & Brothers was incorporated in October, 1896, with a capital stock of $2,000,000, and it promptly gave to the State Trust Company a three-million-dollar mortgage to secure an issue of 5 per cent. bonds of that amount. It used $200,000 of those bonds to satisfy various claims of different members of the Harper family. It pledged the remaining $2,800,000 of the bonds with various parties as security for loans, $2,500,000 of the bonds going to J. P. Morgan & Co. alone, and on this security J. P. Morgan & Co. advanced to Harper & Brothers sums aggregating $850,000. The total amount Harper & Brothers got on all the $2,800,000 worth of bonds it pledged was about $1,100,000. Some $1,700,000 of totally unsecured liabilities, bills payable, &c., go with the $1,100,000 aforesaid, to make up the sum of $2,813,421.26 which has been put down in the schedule as "floating debt."

Mr. Rives, in speaking of the application for a temporary receiver, said last night: "The public should understand that this is another step on the part of Harper & Brothers to protect their creditors. Eventually the firm will be reorganized, just after the fashion of railroad reorganizations. The assets have been scheduled at over $6,000,000, on the assumption that the business of Harper & Brothers is to be continued."

Mr. Cantine will hold his first hearing as referee on March 28, at his offices, 31 Nassau Street.

FRUIT FOR PARIS EXPOSITION.

Commissioner Blakely of the New York State Commission to the Paris Exposition, who has charge of the fruit display from this State, yesterday said that the exhibit is now nearly all collected and is in cold storage.

The exhibit will be sent forward in refrigerator cars and vessels, and kept in cold storage in Paris, to be used at the exposition as needed. Additions will be made to the stock now on hand. It will consist of the long-keeping varieties of apples and pears, and also of grapes, especially Catawbas. It is expected in this way to keep the fruit exhibit up to June of 1900, and then to supplement it by next year's Summer and Fall fruits.

In each instance a tag on the fruit will bear the name of the grower, the locality where grown, and the name of the shipper.

Trolley Road May Defy Elizabeth.

ELIZABETH, N. J., Dec. 4.—It is now said the Westfield and Elizabeth Street Railway Company has secured by purchase and lease sufficient lands of the De Raismes estate and others to enable it to be independent and it will enter the city over its own right of way. The property owners affected admit being in negotiations with the company. The road, if it succeeds in entering the city over its own right of way, can ignore all conditions the city would like to impose, refuse to give transfers, and may charge what fares it pleases.

Point for the East Chester Trolley.

WHITE PLAINS, N. Y., Dec. 4.—Justice Wilmot M. Smith, Supreme Court, has issued an order in the case of the New York, Westchester and Connecticut Traction Company against the town of East Chester. The order provides that the town officials shall not further tear up the company's tracks, and the company is directed to give a bond to the town that it will take up its tracks if the last court of justice decides that they were unlawfully laid.

Peddlers Complain of Policemen.

A committee of the Peddlars' Benevolent Association yesterday morning presented several typewritten charges to Chief Devery against policemen of the Eldridge and Delancey Street Stations. The committee told the Chief that the members of the peddlers' association are being persecuted and blackmailed. The Chief told the committee to present the charges to Inspector Cross this morning for investigation.

Presbyterian Union Dinner.

The annual dinner of the Presbyterian Union of New York was held at the Hotel Savoy last night. About 250 guests were present. After the banquet there were a number of speeches, among the speakers being the Rev. Dr. Charles Cuthbert Hall, the Rev. Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman, and Robert E. Speer.

MANILA CONSUL RETURNS

Oscar F. Williams Describes the Situation in the Philippines.

FAVORS A GENEROUS POLICY

The Insurgents Are Beaten, He Says—Native Troops May Police the Islands Within a Year.

Ex-United States Consul Oscar F. Williams arrived yesterday afternoon from Manila, being the only passenger on the big steamer Ping Suey from Hongkong, which he boarded at Singapore. Mr. Williams has the distinction of being the last American Consul to the capital of the Philippines. He took a more prominent part than any other civilian in the operations of the United States in the islands from the time when Dewey's fleet set out from Hongkong in search of the Spanish fleet up to last October. His experience in the Philippines dates even further back, to January, 1898, when he relieved Acting Consul Isaac Elliott, and, in view of the possible hostilities, began collecting information for this Government.

On April 23, 1898, shortly before war was declared with Spain, he went to Hongkong, and when Dewey's fleet left that port on its memorable expedition he accompanied it on the Baltimore. In the battle of Manila he was on the Baltimore up to the time that famous breakfast was served. During that respite he went aboard the Olympia and was with Dewey in the remainder of the battle. He was relieved of his official duties as Consul June 30, of the present year, but such was his knowledge of Filipino affairs that Gen. Otis asked him to stay, and gave him a commission as Special Consul under the Military Government. He held this position until October 9, when he left for Hongkong. He journeyed thence to Singapore, where he boarded the Ping Suey for home.

The ex-Consul was met at Quarantine by his brother, L. T. Williams, and coming to the city in a tug, left last night for his home in Rochester. He will report later at Washington. Mr. Williams found time after being landed in the city to talk upon many features of the situation in the Philippines. The tenor of his remarks concerning the conditions there was decidedly optimistic.

"When I left the islands," he said, "everything was going along smoothly, both with the army and navy. Gen. Otis is doing splendidly, and I don't think he will be superseded. He is earnest and energetic and is doing as much as any man could do. He is at work from twelve to fifteen hours every day. I want everybody in the United States to understand that I am thoroughly in accord with the Administration's policy in the Philippines, and believe that the best is being done that could be done under the circumstances. Now that the Government has undertaken this grave responsibility, the people should uphold it, and I believe they will.

"Yes; I am well acquainted with Aguinaldo and know the members of his Cabinet and many of his people. He is a nice fellow personally, with plenty of ability, and enjoys the utmost confidence of his people. He has the elements and characteristics of a born leader. He is fairly well educated, but there are men in his Cabinet who have far more education than he. Some of these latter could get up in France, Germany, England, Spain, or the United States and deliver a speech well worth hearing. The assistance of such men is invaluable to Aguinaldo, but he dominates them all.

"Aguinaldo has not, in my opinion, anything like the munitions of war that some people believe he has. One reason for my opinion is that if he had sufficient guns and ammunition he would not make use of so many bolomen and men with bows and arrows on the field. The extraordinary vigilance of our Consuls at Japanese and Chinese ports has had its effect, and I don't believe Aguinaldo has ever been able to smuggle in more than a mere handful of arms, if any at all. I know of one lot of 5,700 Mauser rifles bought in Hongkong at a cost of $21,000, which are still lying in that city because they could not be got into the islands. As for Maxim guns, I don't believe they have a single one.

"I am pleased to learn since arriving here that Aguinaldo is now practically hemmed in. He may surrender, or he may get away. If he chose he might go into the mountains and keep up a sort of guerilla warfare for years. But he is a sensible man, and I do not believe he will do this. I think that when he succeeds in breaking up the opposition to American rule, he will do his best to effect a compromise with this Government. This opposition is fast breaking up. There are already many desertions to us. Many Filipinos, of the best element, socially and commercially, are finding that their interests are with the Americans, and are abandoning the insurgent cause. I believe that Aguinaldo now recognizes the futility of continuing the resistance, but is afraid to give up the struggle, fearing that his followers would kill him as a traitor."

"Has Aguinaldo ever received any promises as to independence?" was asked.

"There have been rumors to that effect," replied Mr. Williams, "but I never heard of any such promises officially. I have had many conversations with Aguinaldo, and he never said that such promises had been made to him. I am satisfied that the Filipinos would have obtained their independence from Spain if we had not taken Manila when we did. They took 100,000 rifles from the Spanish soldiery just before Spain surrendered to us. They were whipping the Spaniards everywhere. Aguinaldo, however, often told me that the greatest blessings would come from our supremacy. 'I am convinced of it,' he said, 'but how am I to convince my people.'

"The insurgents never had but one deal with Spain. This was when Aguinaldo and his leaders left the islands. Aguinaldo explained to me that on this occasion the Spanish Governor General promised all the reforms for which the insurgents were fighting. It was thought that if the leaders left the country for a while there would be more opportunity for the Governor General to carry out his plan of reform. I have heard that the priests raised $3,000,000 to induce the insurgent leaders to withdraw and that one-half of this sum found its way into the Governor General's pocket. I know that Aguinaldo had $400,000 in a Hongkong bank after this, but later still I executed a power of attorney by which he gave this entire sum to the insurgent army fund. When his Government voted him a salary of $50,000 he declined it, saying that the money was needed by the army.

"I want to see every reasonable favor extended to those people consistent with our dignity. I think they have been put up to all they have done in opposition to us by the priests and Spaniards. They are certainly not fitted for self-government, and will need the tutelage of a governing power for years. They have men with qualities that may be developed into self-governing power, but we must remember that out of a population of from 8,000,000 to 15,000,000, only about 100,000 have any education whatever. Aguinaldo might possibly maintain a sort of government over Luzon, but in the various other islands ambitious men would rise and oppose his rule. There would be constant revolution.

"Our Government has found the Mohammedan element the most submissive of all. I accompanied Gen. Bates to Sulu and heard the Sultana Dowager tell him that she recognized the greatness and power of the United States and wished to be always friendly with us. I predict that inside of a year nine-tenths of our troops now in the Philippines will be back at home and the islands will be policed with native troops."

Mr. Williams refused to speak of the effect produced among the troops and insurgents by the action of the anti-imperialists in this country. "Documents sent out by anti-imperialists," he said, "could easily find their way among the insurgents. These insurgents all look alike to foreign eyes. They wear no uniform to speak of. They circulate everywhere. If they are close pressed, they simply cover up their guns in a buffalo wallow and become at once amigos, or friends."

Asked about the various reports of American troops shooting women and children and committing other acts of cruelty, the ex-Consul grew very earnest. "Any soldier," he said, "who writes home or comes home and says that our men ever shot down women or children or defenseless men lies. We have a noble lot of fellows out there, and I don't believe one of them would do this if ordered to. I don't believe we have an officer who would order it. As to the alleged desecration of churches, our troops did use them for headquarters, but the Spaniards and Filipinos did the same thing."

PICTURE FOR WHITE HOUSE.

M. Chartran's Commission from Mr. Frick Executed — Represents Signing of the Spanish Peace Protocol.

The work ordered by Henry C. Frick of Pittsburg from M. Theobald Chartran, the French portrait painter, is on its way to this country on the Normannia, and will be exhibited at Knoedler's Gallery, Fifth Avenue, early next month. It is the artist's intention to send it afterward to the Paris Exposition. The picture represents the signing of the peace protocol between the United States and Spain in Washington. The price to be paid to M. Chartran is $20,000. It is said to be Mr. Frick's intention to present the picture to the Federal Government, so that it may hang in the White House.

M. Chartran arrived here on La Champagne last Sunday, and is staying at the Waldorf-Astoria until his home and studio in the city are ready. When seen at the hotel yesterday M. Chartran said that it had been his endeavor to make the picture of the signing perfectly accurate in every detail. He produced a photograph of the work which makes it evident that the grouping and chiaroscuro are highly successful. Parisian critics have also declared that the coloring is excellent.

The likeness figures, naturally, that of President McKinley, who stands at the end of the table in the Cabinet room of the White House watching M. Cambon, the French Ambassador, signing the treaty on behalf of Spain. Secretary of State Day is seated between M. Cambon and Mr. McKinley. M. Thiebaut, Secretary of the French Embassy, is behind the Ambassador, while the Assistant Secretaries, Moore, Adee, and Cridler, stand behind Mr. Day. A high light comes from the window in the rear. All the likenesses are excellent, and minutiae of costume and pose have also been carefully regarded.

BICYCLE MANUFACTURERS FAIL.

The Liberty Cycle Company of 4 Warren Street made an assignment yesterday for the benefit of its creditors to Franklin Leonard, Jr., of 45 William Street. Mr. Leonard said that he could not make a statement as to the condition of the company until he had made an examination of the books and consulted with John Holden, the President of the corporation. He said the assets included the company's plant at Bridgeport, Conn., which he thought was worth about $100,000.

The company is a New York corporation and was organized on Oct. 26, 1897, with a capital stock of $100,000. It is the third corporation of the same name, the other two, formed under New Jersey and Connecticut laws, having been unsuccessful. The present company purchased the plant of the old company at Bridgeport, and in November, 1898, claimed assets of $164,000, with liabilities of only $25,000.

The reasons given for the assignment are that the company could not collect bills, and also that it could not obtain material for certain parts of bicycles in time to fill orders for the season of 1900. The Liberty Cycle Company was not taken into the American Bicycle Company when that combination was organized. The manufacturers of the bicycle parts which the concern claims to have been unable to obtain are said to be members of the American Bicycle Company.

The company's Directors are John Holden, William F. Wilson, and Willard I. Allen. The company has offices in Chicago, Bridgeport, and Boston.

MASON'S LODGE A CENTURY OLD.

Brooklyn Organization Observes the Event at a Banquet.

Fortitude Lodge No. 19, F. and A. M., of Brooklyn, yesterday celebrated the one hundredth anniversary of its institution. In the afternoon a banquet was held at the Hotel St. George, at which about 400 members of the lodge and their friends were present. The celebration concluded in the evening with exercises at Plymouth Church.

George C. Gill was toastmaster at the dinner. Col. Alexander S. Bacon, in responding to the toast "Our Country," declared that the per capita wealth of the United States was not equaled by that of any other country in the world.

Silas B. Dutcher, who responded to the toast "Our Borough," predicted that in 1910 Brooklyn would control the politics of Greater New York, and that it would have more intelligent voters than all of the other boroughs. He praised Brooklyn's school system and its charitable institutions, and said that the borough had better promise of growth than any of its sisters. In closing he declared that in ten years London would give way to New York as a financial centre.

Jeweler Peabody Fined $450.

Adolph Peabody, a jeweler, was five weeks ago placed on parole by Collector Bidwell pending an inquiry as to the provenance of diamonds appraised at $15,000, which he placed in the possession of the Treasury officials. It was alleged he had smuggled the gems through Canada. Yesterday the diamonds were returned to him. The contention that he brought them from abroad, but that he purchased them here and took them to Europe, was sustained as to about $10,000 worth of them. As to the balance, there was doubt which, in the opinion of Collector Bidwell, justified the imposition of a fine of $450, which was paid.

Flag for Mrs. C. P. Huntington.

Mrs. Collis P. Huntington has received from the Pascal Institute one of the handsome American flags lately made by some of its pupils. It is made of gros-grain silk, the stitches which hold the stripes together being invisible on account of the fineness of the work. The stars are of solid embroidery, and were made by one of the graduates of the class of '99. This gift was offered to Mrs. Huntington as a token of the appreciation of her generosity in assuming the responsibility of the rent of the building, besides other gifts to the institute.

Women's Ulsters and Newmarkets

Ulsters don't follow the lines of the figure; Newmarkets do—maybe that is easiest classification of the full-length wraps that good dressers have so welcomed this winter. Both are dressy—hard to say which is finest; fact is, one has to be one's own judge as to that, for it depends somewhat on carriage and figure.

Finest is $130—prices starting at $16. For instance—

At $16—Newmarkets of cheviot (tan or blue mingled goods), double-breasted; lined to waist.

At $22.50—Newmarkets of kersey, castor—that indescribable lightish brown. Double-breasted; lined.

French Silks in Waist Lengths, Half Prices There's generally much giving of silks at Christmas time. They ought to be good, and it's desirable, too, that they be not too costly. Then here's good fortune for those who have been thinking of silks. Rich, fancy French silks and satins, in four-yard lengths—waist patterns—put up in boxes, at $2 to $15. The prices are just half original markings.

About forty kinds among the colors and black from which to choose.

Rotunda.

Silk Waists Six hundred waists of a good quality of taffeta, all in the newest shades—the latest styles—the most careful making—arrived yesterday. They are waists that should sell at $6 at least—that would be moderate. The price for this lot will be $4.75 each. Why not one of these, in a box, as a present?

Furs The fur exhibit of the past week has demonstrated our position as fur sellers—as factors in the gathering and handling of peltry, as students of fur fashions in St. Petersburg and Paris.

The collection is varied, dependable and interesting. Take the finer pieces for granted to-day—this word of some rather popular numbers:

Alaska Sable Neck Scarfs, with cluster of tails, $5, $6.50, $7.50 and $8.50.
Mink Scarfs, with tails, $10.
Collarettes of Alaska sable, dyed; storm collar; finished with tails, $15.
Skins, for milliners' and dressmakers' use as garniture—chinchilla, $1.75 and $2.50 each: broadtail, $6, $7.50 and $8.50 each.

Second Floor, Broadway.

Eiderdown Sacques Here's a lot of pretty sacques, light blue, violet, pink, red and brown. Well made, in newest style—35c each—a decided bargain. The material in these is of same quality as that used in $1 garments. Only one to a customer.

Second floor, Fourth avenue.

Women's Stockings These are genuine Irish goods—just here from Balbriggan, whence comes the finest hosiery made. Of fast black cotton in four grades. 38c, 50c, 75c and $1 a pair. All low prices for such excellent qualities.

New Hats from Paris

Paris is either a prophet or a woman—for the new hats our Paris office has just sent us are forecasts of next spring's developing styles. But they are for immediate wear—and are very beautiful.

One hat-maker over there doesn't finish hats—he simply sends suggestive beginnings. For instance, he has sent us felt hats with the back brim hanging down longer than a fireman's helmet. Not to be worn that way—come see how we've twisted and twirled them.

Both these groups ready this morning. No store or modiste shall keep so close to Paris as do we. It's a week and a day from our new home—44, Rue des Petites Ecuries—to the Broadway store, and as a rule we get start enough to give you the styles the day the Paris public gets them.

A Book Case That Grows

The Wernicke Book Cases are composed of units—boxes, each of which will hold about a dozen books. One is a complete case, or you can add end to end and in height to make a solid case to fill any room. Separate pieces for base and top can be bought as you need them. This isn't the first sectional book case, but it is so decidedly best that we agreed to become sole agents for it in New York.

The Imitation Mahogany Units are from $3 to $4.50.
The Walnut Units from $3.50 to $5.25.
The Mahogany Units from $3.75 to $5.75.
The Top and Base Units to fit any of these are from $1.50 to $4.

These prices don't mean much till you have seen the book case or read the book about them. We send the book free, of course.

Oriental Rugs

"Art is long and time is fleeting" might well have been written to describe Oriental Rugs, for they come into being by tediously-taken hand stitches or knots, while time has no tooth that gnaws their beauty.

They are the most artistic of merchandise, yet we sell them in the same straightforward way that we sell carpets or dress goods. And that marks this rug store as singular.

The present collection is by far the best we've ever had—chosen by our own buyer in Constantinople.

Prices run from a few dollars to thousands, and, as rug prices go, are low. We simply count them fair.

One line of Turkish Rugs, 11 feet 4 inches by 6 ft. 10 in., to 15 ft. 1 in. by 11 ft. 2 in., range in price from $38 to $84.

Third floor.

Men's Gloves Some months ago we sold some Walking Gloves for Men at 75c a pair, instead of the $1 and $1.25 they were worth. Maybe you'll recall them—out-seam gloves in tan and red tan.

More of them. Same price—75c.

Tenth street.

Japanese Gongs Tuneful and decorative—our Oriental traveler, with all his years of experience, was over-charmed and bought too many. So right in the height of the selling time we clip a quarter of the price off—$1 kind at 75c, and so on. The finest is $13.50—a set, properly speaking.

Eiderdown Robes You know of the warmth and coziness of an eiderdown gown. We want you to know how pretty these are and how moderately they're priced. A kind at $2.75—of striped eiderdown, bound with satin, closing with frogs. At $3, in solid colors, with frogs and girdle. At $4.75 of ripple eiderdown in solid colors. And in like advances up to $13.50.

Colored Petticoats Black moreen, silk finished, with satin stripes in pretty bright colorings. Deep umbrella ruffle, corded, and yoke band. These are the usual $4.75 kinds. We have a lot in neat boxes, priced $2.75.

Holiday Bazaar, Fifth floor.

Scarfs and Pillow Shams It really seems as though the Bureau Scarfs and Pillow Shams in spachtel work are prettier than ever this season. Designers develop just as other workers do, and we had enough faith in the goods to buy more largely than heretofore. Hence, we sell cheaper.

Really delicious Mixed Candies at 20c pound.

Why the long conjuring? Let any other candy man look at this mixture and he'll tell you—if he thinks it any of your business. Every ingredient is pure and of the higher grades. We had to select such shapes as the machine molds would form fastest—can't give handwork at the price, unless the quality suffers. You'll be delighted with these bonbons for yourself and the children—and for entertainments that you may be interested in.

MUSICAL AND DRAMATIC

Frank Daniels in "The Ameer" at Wallack's.

A NEW SCORE BY MR. HERBERT

Comic operas, as they are called in spite of the obvious fact that few of them are comic and fewer are operas, have to be made in these days to fit the peculiarities of comedians and companies. It can hardly be possible that either the librettist or the composer sits down with a free hand to write what he thinks will please the public. Each must set out with the capabilities of a certain actor and his supporting associates in mind and make the play to fit them. In some cases this is not hard to do with the hope of success. When Victor Herbert sat down to begin the score of "The Singing Girl," he must have gone to work with a blythe heart. He could have entertained some hopes that if he ventured to write music of pretentious merit it would be sung. But such could not have been his feeling when he began the score of "The Ameer," which was produced at Wallack's Theatre last night.

This operetta was intended as a vehicle for the display of the peculiar talents of Frank Daniels, a comedian who has long been associated with performances of a well-defined type. To fit Mr. Daniels with either an acting part or music that can be depended on to be successful is not so easy a task as it might seem. The librettists of the operetta produced last night evidently had a theory that anything would be good enough. The result was that they gave the audience one of the stupidest librettos that has been revealed to this patient public in a considerable period of time. There were one or two funny ideas in the material gathered for the plot, but the librettists did not know what to do with their ideas after they found them. Poor ideas may be made to seem good by smart treatment, and, vice versa, good ones may be made to seem weak by inept management. Last night vice versa prevailed.

The story of the operetta was absurd without real humor, and the dialogue was silly without wit. Mr. Herbert's music proved to be far below the level which he has of late shown ability to attain. There was an abundance of elementary rhythms and simple melodic progressions, all of which no doubt were employed to meet the limits of the vocal capacity of the company. For in it there was only one person who had the slightest claim to be called a singer, and that was George Devoll, who showed a pretty voice and some taste in its management. The others were not singers, and only one or two of them could without injustice to a much tried profession be called actors. Perhaps the nearest approach to the art of acting was made by Mr. Danforth as the brigand chief.

Mr. Daniels himself tried hard to conquer by the employment of his personal oddities, which are amusing, but not a fountain of inexhaustible delight. He is a man of real comic gifts, but one naturally desires to see him enjoying a fair chance for their display. To see him trying to win laughter and applause by means of his peculiarities without the support of a good part is not pleasant to his admirers or edifying to disinterested spectators. In short, it may fairly be said that "The Ameer" is dull, and that if it were not for the display of pretty stage pictures it would not be even tolerable. The dresses are sufficient for the purposes of the operetta, and the scenery is all that is required. Mr. Herbert, to return to the unfortunate composer of this piece, has tried to ease his musical conscience by putting some musicianly work into the scoring, and this is well done, but orchestral parts will not make a success of an operetta which does not contain a good part for the star.

CISSIE LOFTUS NOT ENJOINED.

The Application of Weber & Fields Denied by Justice Scott.

Justice Scott, in the Supreme Court, yesterday denied the application made by Weber & Fields for an injunction restraining Cissie Loftus from appearing at any performance of a public character except at their theatre. Miss Loftus claimed that, while a contract was made with her by the plaintiffs for the season 1899-1900, with an option for the succeeding season, under which she was not to appear elsewhere, the part assigned her was so mean and insignificant that it was bound to injure her standing in the theatrical profession. Her counsel, ex-Judge Dittenhoefer, also contended that the contract made with Miss Loftus was illegal, as it required her to play on Sundays.

Justice Scott, in denying the application, said it was not disputed that Miss Loftus had deliberately violated her contract. She could not complain as to the parts assigned her, the agreement being that she was to play such parts as the managers might designate, whether leading or minor parts. The only ground for granting an injunction to enforce the contract of the nature of the one involved in this action, Justice Scott said, was that unless its violation be inhibited the plaintiffs would suffer irreparable loss, which could not readily be estimated in an action for damages. The affidavits in this case did not show that such loss would result. As to past damages, which seemed to consist mainly of the cost of building a special dressing room and printing a number of lithographs, the amount could readily be ascertained, but could not be recovered in this form of action.

"The minor part assigned to the defendant would seem to indicate," Justice Scott said, "that, whatever may be her abilities as a specialist, she has not yet shown herself to be an actress of such universal ability that any considerable difficulty would be found in filling her place in a theatrical company."

THEATRICAL TROUPE DISBANDED.

Nellie McHenry Company's Plight—Due to Husband's Disappearance.

The Nellie McHenry "Green Room Fun" company was disbanded in this city yesterday owing to the continued absence of John Webster, Miss McHenry's husband, who disappeared mysteriously in Buffalo two weeks ago. The company was paid off at the Gilsey House by John Gourlay, one of the proprietors of the show.

The members said they had not been doing so well financially as expected. There were only six persons in the cast, and the piece was being given in first-class houses in big cities. Webster was worried, and showed it. He left the hotel in Buffalo ostensibly to learn about the departure of trains. He did not return. While almost on the verge of collapse, Miss McHenry, for the sake of the company, as she expressed it, insisted on appearing nightly during the period of the two weeks' notice given those in the cast.

It is said the company will be reorganized in a short time and make a tour of the smaller cities.

GRAND OPERA IN ENGLISH.

A spirited, picturesque, and effective representation of Mascagni's "Cavalleria Rusticana" was rapturously applauded by a very large audience at the American Theatre last night. The cast included Selma Kronold as Santuzza, Barron Berthald as Turridu, Harry Luckstone as Alfio, Bernice Holmes as Lola, and Della Niven as Lucia. The chorus was in excellent form, and the scenic setting was appropriate. The performance was better in a musical sense than it was dramatically, perhaps; but Miss Kronold's acting, at least, was sufficiently vigorous and convincing. The orchestra was about as usual, but, of course, the intermezzo was demanded a second time.

As long as the Castle Square company can give performances of fine works as satisfactorily as this is given, its good artistic influence upon the multitude is not to be questioned. But the performance of the first act of Beethoven's "Fidelio," which preceded Mascagni's lyric drama, was quite another matter. That was a dangerous undertaking, in the circumstances, and the result was not particularly encouraging. Mary Linck was Leonora, W. H. Clark Rocco, Clinton Elder Jacquino, Marie Mattfeld Marcellina, and William Mertens Pizarro. There was no lack of applause.

"Charity Ball" Revival a Success.

"Charity Ball" was revived by the members of the Donnelly Stock Company at the Murray Hill Theatre last evening. This play will be the bill for the entire week, and last night's audience, which was a large one, demonstrated the popularity of the selection by Manager Donnelly.

Miss Melville as Sis Hopkins.

Arrangements were reported yesterday to have been made whereby Miss Rose Melville in her new comedy, "Sis Hopkins," will be seen at the Herald Square Theatre, following the engagement of "The Greek Slave." Miss Melville became prominent last season through her impersonation of the country girl known as "Sis Hopkins," in Matthews and Bulger's comedy, "By the Sad Sea Waves," and severed her connections with this organization during the latter part of its engagement at the Herald Square Theatre to become a star.

Mr. Mansfield at Work Again.

Richard Mansfield, who brought his performance last Saturday night to a sudden close at the Garden Theatre, made his appearance as usual last night and was received with hearty applause on his first entry on the stage. The performance was given with its accustomed smoothness, all difficulties as to the steam pipes having been adjusted.

Theatres and Music Halls.

GRAND OPERA HOUSE.—James O'Neill appeared last evening before the usual large audience of regular patrons in his last season's play, "The Musketeers."

EDEN MUSEE.—The moving pictures from South Africa and the series of comic and mysterious pictures were the interesting feature at the Musee yesterday. During the week there will be afternoon and evening concerts. No changes have occurred in the wax groups.

HURTIG & SEAMON'S MUSIC HALL.—An overcrowded house and enthusiastic audience welcomed the Broadway Burlesquers who have, in addition to their company, a number of vaudeville celebrities. The performance terminated with the one-act musical farce, "On the Bench."

DEWEY THEATRE.—To the patrons of this house were given a revival of "Hurly Burly" last night, with an olio containing many interesting vaudeville artists, such as Miss Sylvia Thorne, who sang several operatic selections in a most competent manner; Mlle. Alcide Capitaine, Cook and Sonora, and others.

HARLEM OPERA HOUSE.—Louis Mann and Clara Lipman, in their new comedy, "The Girl in the Barracks," made their Harlem bow last evening. There was evidence that the large audience present heartily enjoyed the performance. The cast seen recently at the Garrick Theatre also came in for considerable applause.

PROCTOR'S PALACE.—Ezra Kendall and his monologue specialty, consisting of witty songs and sayings, was the leading attraction at this house. The other features were Waterbury brothers and Tenny, musical trio; Harry Howard's trained animals, Hall and Staley, Clarice Vance and the Kalatechnoscope, with a number of new moving views.

KOSTER & BIAL'S MUSIC HALL.—Manager W. A. Brady presented a novelty last night in his burlesque, during the change of scene from the French ball to the arena in the Coney Island Athletic Club, in the shape of living pictures by James J. Jeffries and Thomas Sharkey, who posed as modern gladiators, and also illustrated the knock-out blows which have ended the career of many championship prizefighters.

PROCTOR'S THEATRE.—In the lengthy programme offered this week the features are diversified, and range from operatic selections by Marie Tavary, a contrast to the grotesque acrobatics on the bicycle by the St. Onge brothers. Some of the other features are Lizzie Evans and Harry Mills in the comedietta "Two Girls and One Man," Wilson family, Frank Latona, the De Forreests, Charles E. Grapewin and Anna Chance, Musical Ravens, and a number of others.

KEITH'S UNION SQUARE THEATRE.—"The Girl with the Auburn Hair" began the second week of her engagement yesterday, which has proved one of the most successful attractions Mr. Keith has offered for some little time. Felix Morris and his company also continued another week, with a new skit, entitled "Kerry." The other vaudeville acts were performed by the Cragg family, "Joe" Welch, "Barney" Fagan and Henrietta Byron, Blocksom and Burns, and Eckert and Berg.

MIGHT HAVE WRECKED TRAINS.

Long Island City Boy in Court for Damaging Railroad Switches.

William Shields, thirteen years old, of Long Island City, was arraigned for trial before Judge Harrison S. Moore in the Queens County Court yesterday. The indictment against him is for attempted train wrecking, and accuses him of breaking and destroying switch locks, removing the brass locks, and throwing switches in the wrong position, thus endangering the lives of many passengers on the Long Island Railroad. Young Shields is small for his age, and wears knee breeches. His mother sat beside him in court. Edward T. Allen of Jamaica represented the boy as counsel, while Assistant District Attorney B. Frank Wood conducted the prosecution.

After a jury had been drawn, Mr. Allen held a consultation with the Assistant District Attorney. The latter then announced that Mr. Allen would plead guilty for his client if the Judge would suspend sentence. Judge Moore refused to accept the plea. He said the crime was such a serious one that he did not think it would be fair at present to allow the boy to plead guilty and be simply reprimanded. If convicted, he said, the boy could be sent to prison for twenty years. Judge Moore said he would postpone the trial until the first Saturday in January. In the meantime he would parole the youthful culprit, and if he conducted himself as a good boy should between now and the new date of the trial, he would then dispose of the case.

Young Shields was arrested on Oct. 20 in the Long Island Railroad yards, at Sixth Street and East Avenue, Long Island City, where he was caught by Detective James Sarvis in the act of hammering off the brass locks from the switches. The company had been annoyed for several days previous to the arrest by reports from trackwalkers that switches were out of order. Shields disposed of the brass locks at junk shops.

BOUGHT HIS OWN HENS TWICE.

Michael Demato, a saloon keeper at 409 Third Street, Jersey City, has a hennery in the rear of his premises. On Sunday night Joseph Carroll and John Hayslip offered to sell him three hens for 15 cents each. He bought them and placed them in the coop. An hour later the same men brought in three more hens, which they offered at the same price. He bought these also, and put them in the coop.

After the men had gone away Demato told his wife that he thought he had been the victim of a trick. He went to the hennery to look at the fowls, and found there the same number he had on Saturday. He also discovered that Hayslip and Carroll had made two visits to the coop, and each time taken out three hens, which they sold to him. He went to the First Criminal Court yesterday to make a complaint, and was greatly surprised to find that Hayslip and Carroll had just been convicted of an assault on Harris Ruskin of 254 Newark Avenue, and sentenced to six months in the penitentiary. Police Justice Potts called Hayslip and Carroll to the bar again, and upon their admission that Demato's statement was true he sentenced each man to an additional month in the penitentiary.

Shooting Accident Proves Fatal.

TUXEDO PARK, N. Y., Dec. 4.—Elmer Cooper, nineteen years old, a son of Elsworth Cooper, who was shot accidentally in his left arm after returning from a hunting trip along the Ramapo River on Saturday afternoon, died last night in St. Joseph's Hospital at Paterson, N. J. His arm was amputated, but blood poisoning set in.

HAIGHT WARNED HIS FATHER.

Son and Daughter of the Deaf-Mute Sued for Divorce on the Stand.

The Haight divorce case, in which Mary L. Haight is seeking a divorce from Henry J. Haight, was continued yesterday before Justice Giegerich. The sun shone into the court windows in the afternoon and bothered the deaf-mute witnesses and the expert interpreter in the sign language. The shades had to be pulled down and the gas lit.

Eleanor Church Haight, daughter of the principal parties in the suit, took the stand. She is a sister of Mrs. Hunt, who testified last week in the case and expressed the opinion that a woman who paints her face is not a lady. During Miss Haight's cross-examination yesterday by ex-Justice Van Wyck she proved quite as quick at repartee as her elder sister, Mrs. Hunt.

The witness said in her direct testimony that her father and mother were never an hour together after 1897 that they did not argue about Miss Essie Stanton. Miss Stanton, it is alleged by Mrs. Haight, caused trouble in her home.

Ex-Justice Van Wyck took the witness on cross-examination. The witness repeated that she often overheard her mother and father talking together about Miss Stanton.

"You mean to say that you overheard conversations in the sign language?" asked Mr. Van Wyck.

"Yes. I could tell from the way they clapped their hands and stamped their feet what they were talking about."

"Tell us how many times your father and mother were alone when you were present."

"I don't suppose they could ever be alone when I was present."

David H. Haight, a son of the parties to the suit, twenty-five years old, was put on the stand. He testified that his grandmother, Mary L. Haight, died in December, 1895, insane. His father and uncle had entire control over her property. He then testified as to his father's alleged attentions to Stanton.

"Did you object to her living in the house?" asked counsel.

"Yes. In the Spring of 1895 I objected to her being in the house 284 Madison Avenue. I also told my father that he was acting improperly, both as regarded my mother and ourselves, and that he was gaining a great deal of unenviable notoriety. I told him that his family should be respected by him. I wrote to the proprietor of the hotel at Delaware Water Gap when they went there and wrote a threatening letter to Essie Stanton, saying I objected to her remaining there with my father and reminded her that she was in debt to many persons who were looking after her."

Mr. Van Wyck cross-examined the witness, who denied that he ever threatened to put his father in the penitentiary.

Justice Giegerich then announced that he would take a recess at 6 o'clock, and hold a night session.

The court resumed after 7 o'clock, when Mr. Van Wyck continued his cross-examination. Witness said he was a party with his mother and sisters to remove the trustees of his grandmother's estate. Haight admitted that in the complaint of the suit to remove the trustees he had charged his father and uncle with robbing the estate of his grandmother He said they had taken away a large quantity of lace, of which a small quantity was produced in court.

"Did you bear any ill-will toward your father?" asked Mr Van Wyck.

"Certainly not; I never had any ill-feeling toward him, but have always tried to do the best I could for him."

The cross-examination of the witness was not concluded when the court adjourned at 9 o'clock until this morning.

FIGHT OVER MILLER'S MAIL.

Franklin Syndicate Depositors Want All to Share Alike.

While William F. Miller is a fugitive from justice, some of his creditors are trying to see to it that those who sent money to the Franklin Syndicate after he had fled shall not have it all sent back to them by the Post Office authorities, but shall have to take their places with other creditors. Belfer & Flash, Brooklyn lawyers who represent creditors holding $50,000 worth of claims against Miller, filed last Saturday notice of an intention to apply next Saturday for an injunction restraining "the United States Post Office Department, its agents, servants, or employes," from returning to these belated depositors the mail they sent to the absent Miller.

The moving papers are based on an affidavit signed by Charles J. Belfer and Jesse Silberman, which gives the substance of an interview with Postmaster Wilson, in which he is said to have set the value of the money-bearing letters to Miller now in the hands of the Post Office Department at from $75,000 to $100,000, which an average of $20,000 coming in each day. Mr. Wilson got a fraud order from Washington, permitting him to send back these letters to depositors, or to the Dead Letter office where the depositors' names do not appear on the letters. Belfer & Flash say the statute under which this fraud order is issued is unconstitutional, because it permits the branding of the man to whom the letters are sent as a fraud without giving him a trial.

BRIDE OF FEW DAYS DEAD.

Miss Margaret Kelly and Frank Howard were married in Hoboken on Wednesday last. Yesterday the bride lay dead in the front room of their little home at 137 Park Avenue. They had been engaged for eight years, but their marriage was deferred because Miss Kelly had a widowed mother to support, and she and Howard thought it best to wait until he could provide for Mrs. Kelly as well as for his wife.

The marriage was finally set for Nov. 15. A week before that Miss Kelly was prostrated by a severe cold. The marriage was postponed. Miss Kelly was able to be about the house on Nov. 20, and it was then arranged that the wedding should take place on Thanksgiving eve. On Saturday the bride suffered a relapse. Pneumonia set in and her death followed Sunday morning. The funeral will take place from the Church of Our Lady of Grace, Roman Catholic, tomorrow morning.

Sold for Unpaid Assessments.

Edward Glion, Collector of Assessments and Arrears, yesterday began the sale of land and tenements against which there lie unpaid assessments for sewer, street, and other public improvements. In the list of properties, as originally advertised, there were 19,400 parcels, but since the first advertisement on about one-half of these assessments have been paid. The total amount involved was about $3,000,000, but of this nearly $2,000,000 has been paid in. Many of the assessments have been declared void by the courts. There were few bidders for the lands offered yesterday. All the property to be sold lies in the Boroughs of Manhattan and the Bronx.

THE FIFTY-SIXTH CONGRESS MEETS

SENATOR DEPEW IS SWORN IN

Desks of the Members Laden With Many Floral Tributes.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 4.—Eager throngs crowded to the Capitol to-day to witness the opening of the Fifty-sixth Congress. Aside from the usual interest which attaches to the assembling of the Nation's lawmakers, there seemed to be a general desire to see the new Speaker sworn in, while many were drawn to the scene by the promise of a unique spectacle in the Roberts case.

The House wing claimed the attention of the greater number of those who swarmed to the Capitol, and long before the Clerk rapped for order the galleries presented an animated scene. The Senate, however, maintained its sombre and unruffled dignity. There the death of Vice President Hobart cast a pall over the preliminary proceedings. By many Senators he was beloved; by all he was admired and respected. That he should have received his final summons in the very midst of an active, useful, and distinguished career was a distinct blow to the Senate, by which he was best known and in which he was most thoroughly appreciated.

Since the close of the Fifty-fifth Congress the Senate Chamber has been entirely refitted. The walls have been retouched in delicate and beautiful colors; a beautiful old-gold carpet has taken the place of the green of the last Congress, and many new desks and chairs have replaced the old.

As usual, on the opening days of a session of Congress, the Chamber was a veritable conservatory. The odor of the rarest and loveliest of blooming plants was heavy on the air. Scarcely a single Senator was forgotten in the lavish floral display. Particularly notable were the offerings of flowers to the new members of the body. The desks to which they had been assigned were loaded with the choicest selections from the public and private conservatories of the city.

ANIMATED SCENE PRESENTED.

Attention was called to the fact that no emblem of mourning appeared on the Vice President's desk. This apparent omission was explained by the statement that the Senate had not been informed officially of Mr. Hobart's death. Probably the desk will not be draped in mourning, even after the official announcement of the death, as such action has no precedent. When Vice President Hendricks died his desk in the Senate bore no mark of mourning. Pending the actual convention of the Senate, the Chamber presented a most animated and picturesque scene. The galleries were filled with a brilliant and distinguished audience.

The formal morning attire of the men formed a fitting set-off for the exquisite and brilliantly colored toilets of the women. In the diplomatic gallery were several prominent members of the Diplomatic Corps, among whom was Lord Pauncefote, the British Ambassador, and Lady Pauncefote.

The stars of the Senate were two new Senators. They were A. J. Beveridge and Chauncey M. Depew. The Senator from New York knew it, and was conscious of being the point of interest for all the eyes in the gallery and for the flattened noses against the glass doors. He was as nervous and happy as a school girl. He sat at the end of the semi-circle of seats, demurely facing his colleagues. He looked at his desk with a pleased expression, continually shifting his hands, and drumming with his fingers on the arm of his chair.

PLATT SEEMED BORED.

Senator Platt, facing him, could hardly see him behind an immense burst of roses with which his admirers had ornamented his desk. The flowers were tied together with a great red sash rather than a ribbon. Mr. Depew occasionally studied them with an air of intense interest. Senator Platt, on the contrary, seemed bored, and occasionally took up his flowers and looked at them with a cynical air. Senator Depew's bashfulness vanished when a boyish-looking young fellow, who looked as if he might possibly be a freshman, but by no stretch of the imagination could be thought a sophomore, rushed up and shook hands with him. This was Senator Beveridge of Indiana. After this the two new Senators held a little levee together. The most imposing desk in the chamber was that of Senator Cullom, which was all roses, and every few minutes a page would come up and add another bunch to the Illinois man's collection. A few seats away was Chandler's desk, with a few scattered roses lying upon it.

While the blind Chaplain offered the invocation the Senators were in their regular places—all but Hanna, who stood conspicuously in the centre aisle, with his hands uncomfortably folded behind him. After the prayer he fled precipitately to the rear of the chamber. There was considerable interest in Clark, the new Senator from Montana, and much craning of necks when he came up to be sworn in. A group of pages who were sitting just below the Clerk looked him over cynically and made remarks while he was taking the oath.

Senator Platt, grim and solemn faced as ever, walked over to Depew's desk when the latter's turn came and escorted him to the President. Mr. Depew was abundantly happy. After he had been sworn in he smiled joyously and thumped his colleague on the back. Senator Platt looked dispirited. Depew was sworn in with Clark of Wyoming, Davis, and Daniel. Then there was a pause, which a page filled in by adding a bunch of flowers to Senator Stewart's collection. The Nevada man was not interested and pushed them away.

HANNA AND FORAKER.

Most of the Senators who were sworn in got away from their escorts as soon as they could after the ceremony, but Senator Hanna was an exception: he went up to Senator Foraker and thrust his arm in the latter's, and the two friends who have not always been friends promenaded down the aisle together. One of them looked happy. This one was Hanna.

During the roll call, which followed, the new Senator from New York received a shock. He was smiling amiably to himself behind his roses when the Clerk called, "Mr. Depoo"; the smile vanished and the Senator looked surprised. The Clerk also looked surprised, and again profaned the name of New York's favorite son by calling, "Mr. Depoo."

This time the Senator became convinced that he could not be the person meant, and settled back comfortably in his seat. Again the name of "Mr Depoo" rang through the room, and Depew looked around in mild curiosity to see who the new Senator could be. The Clerk paused, made a mighty effort, and shouted, "Mr. Depew," and there came from Depew's seat a very prompt and much surprised "Here." Otherwise the Clerk got through the roll call creditably, except when he called the name of "Mr. Soup." Mr. Shoup of Idaho did not recognize the name, or else considered it inappropriate, and failed to respond.

SPECTACLE IN THE HOUSE.

Over in the House wing the ladies' and members' galleries were filled with brilliantly gowned women, the wives of members and their friends. In the public galleries were the wondering constituents of new members who had a vague idea that the said new members would arise immediately after they were sworn in and electrify the House with their eloquence. The Executive gallery was filled with high dignitaries of the Government and the Diplomatic Gallery resplendent with representatives of foreign Governments.

The floor was open to the public until 11:45 o'clock, and was filled with a surging, pushing crowd, swaying through the aisles so thick that members could hardly reach their seats, and the air hummed steadily with the buzz of voices. The old members took their old seats, while the new members strayed about aimlessly, finally ensconcing themselves in any seat they found vacant.

As at the opening of all recent sessions of the House, access to the galleries of the chamber was to-day restricted to those furnished with cards of admission, and as there were many more persons unprovided than there were of the number with tickets, a great multitude were obliged to wander in disappointment about the Capitol or to gratify their curiosity in some other direction. The issue of tickets kept the galleries from being overcrowded, but there was no waste space. Many faces familiar to the members of the last Congress were missing, and in no section of the country was the change so impressive as in the Maine delegation, from which Dingley and Reed, two of the brainy and influential men in their party and the House, had disappeared, leaving Boutelle alone of the trio who have been so long associated in legislative work.

VETERANS ARE PRESENT,

At 11:30 a shrill-voiced clerk directed those not entitled to the floor to retire, and thereafter the obdurate doorkeepers refused admission to all except members. Officers and pages rapidly cleared out those already in. Conspicuous on the floor were the veterans—Mr. Payne of New York, leader of the majority; Gen. Grosvenor of Ohio, Mr. Hepburn of Iowa, Mr. Dalzell of Pennsylvania, Mr. Bailey of Texas, Mr. McClellan and Mr. Sulzer of New York. Among the prominent new members were Capt. Chanler of New York, who distinguished himself in the Santiago campaign, and Mr. Levy of New York, who enjoys the distinction of owning Monticello, the home of Jefferson.

There were flowers in greater profusion than ever before. Some of the pieces were very beautiful.

While the roll was being called a large floral gavel from the Union Veterans' Union of Dubuque, Iowa, and a beautiful basket of flowers from his old comrades of Hyde Post G. A. R. of Dubuque were placed on the Speaker's desk. Many other floral offerings, including a set piece of American Beauty and Meteor roses received by the Speaker, were taken to the Speaker's room.

The first debate of the session was between Mr. Richardson and Mr. Hepburn. In practically abandoning the Democratic attempt to stop the adoption of the rules of the last Congress, he appealed to Mr. Hepburn, the Republican advocate of rule revision, to renew his fight for greater freedom of debate and action, promising him the support of every man on the Democratic side. This compliment caused a general laugh on both sides of the house, and Mr. Hepburn retorted rather sarcastically, when he had the opportunity, apparently resenting the attempt to put him in the position of an ally of the minority.

ORGANIZATION OF THE HOUSE.

Gen. Henderson Elected Speaker, and the Reed Rules Adopted by a Strict Party Vote.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 4.—The election of Speaker Henderson and his induction into office, the appointment of the usual committees to wait upon the President, and the seat-drawing contest with the usual amusing features went off without a hitch. The only other feature out of the ordinary was the adoption of the Reed rules for the present Congress. The Democrats knew it was futile to more than protest against the adoption of these rules after the Republicans had decided upon this courses in caucus and the debate upon the resolution to adopt them was very brief. They were adopted by a strict party vote.

As the minute hand of the clock opposite the Speaker's rostrum overtook the hour hand at noon, the gavel of the Clerk of the last House, Major McDowell, descended with a bang. The noise ceased and there was a strange stillness in the hall. The members arose and the spectators in the galleries bowed their heads. In this stillness the voice of the blind Chaplain, the Rev. Henry Couden of Michigan, was elevated and his prayer made the occasion reverent.

After the invocation the reading clerk began calling the roll, and a minute later the buzz had recommenced, making a noisy background for the staccato notes of the Clerk as he called out the names.

There were no demonstrations during the rollcall. When it was concluded, Clerk McDowell announced that 352 members had answered to their names, a quorum. "The next thing in order," announced the Clerk, "is the election of Speaker."

Mr. Hepburn (Rep., Iowa,) offered a resolution which was adopted viva voce providing that the House proceed to the election of a Speaker for the Fifty-sixth Congress. Thereupon Mr. Grosvenor, (Rep., Ohio,) as Chairman of the Republican caucus, presented the name of David B. Henderson (Rep., Iowa.) The mention of the name of Gen. Henderson was greeted with a round of applause from the Republican side.

Mr. Hay, (Dem., Va.,) Chairman of the Democratic caucus, presented the name of James D. Richardson of Tennessee, and his name drew the plaudits of the Democratic side. Mr. Ridgely of Kansas nominated John C. Bell (Pop., Col.,) as the Populist candidate, and Mr. Wilson (Silver, Idaho,) placed Francis G. Newlands (Silver, Nev.,) in nomination as the candidate of the silver party.

Each party having put forward its candidate by the direction of the Clerk, the roll was called, and each member voted for the candidate of his political affiliation.

Mr. Morris, (Rep., Minn.,) Mr. Overstreet, (Rep., Ind.,) and Mr. Carmack, (Dem., Tenn.,) were appointed tellers.

The roll call resulted:

NEW SPEAKER INTRODUCED.

The Clerk thereupon announced the election of Mr. Henderson, amid great Republican applause. He designated Mr. Richardson, Mr. Bell, and Mr. Newlands as a committee to escort the Speaker to the chair.

The committee retired to the lobby, and after a short wait the doors of the main portal of the House swung open and Gen. Henderson entered upon the arm of Mr. Richardson, followed by the two other members of the committee. In this order the procession moved down the main aisle, the members on either side rising and cheering. Mr. Richardson, in a neat speech, introduced the Speaker, and in response to the hearty cheers he addressed the House as follows:

"Gentlemen of the House of Representatives: The voice of this House has called me to grave responsibilities. For that call I am most profoundly grateful, and I am keenly sensible of the weight of the responsibilities that attach to this great office. I am encouraged, however, by the thought that no member of this body can escape responsibility, either to his people or to his country. All of us are under bonds to do our best.

"The approval of the country; the approval of one's own conscience; the attainment of great results, are not secured by petty contests on narrow fields, but must be sought and won on broad, patriotic lines of thought and action.

"It is my duty, as it will be my aim and pleasure, to impartially administer the laws adopted for our Government, but no Speaker can be successful unless he has the cooperation of the members of this House.

"The generous partiality and kindness that have been shown to me by the entire membership here encourage me to believe that such imperfections as I may have may be modified by the considerate and supporting disposition of those constituting this great body.

"I am ready to take the oath of office."

OATH IS ADMINISTERED.

In accordance with the time-honored custom, the oldest member of the House in point of service, Mr. Harmer, (Rep., Penn.,) administered the oath to the Speaker. The Speaker then announced that the oath would be administered to members by States.

As the names of the members were called they appeared at the bar in groups of about a dozen, and there, with raised hands, were sworn in by the Speaker. In the Maryland delegation was John Walter Smith, who was elected Governor of his State in November, and who will remain in the House until he is inaugurated Governor.

The officers of the House selected by the Republican caucus last Saturday were then elected, Alexander McDowell of Pennsylvania, Clerk; Henry Casson of Wisconsin, Sergeant at Arms; W. J. Glenn of New York, Doorkeeper; and J. C. McElroy of Ohio, Postmaster, after which the usual resolutions were adopted to inform the President and the Senate of the organization of the House.

A committee of three, consisting of Messrs. Cannon, (Rep., Ill.,) Payne, (Rep., N. Y.,) and Richardson, (Dem., Tenn.,) were appointed to join a similar committee from the Senate to wait on the President and inform him that Congress was in session and ready to receive any communication he might have to make.

DEBATE OVER RULES.

Mr. Dalzell, (Rep., Penn.,) one of the floor leaders, then precipitated a short but lively debate by offering a resolution for the adoption of the rules of the last Congress. They were the rules of three Congresses, he said, and their operation had proved their value.

Mr. Bailey (Dem., Texas,) protested against forcing the rules of the last House permanently upon the present House without warning or consideration, but he expressed a willingness to see them adopted temporarily until others could be framed.

Mr. Richardson (Dem., Tenn.,) indorsed what his colleague had said, but from what the public press had said he realized how hopeless resistance would be. Nevertheless he protested in the name of the minority. He good-naturedly chided Mr. Hepburn, (Rep., Iowa,) who frequently complained of the rules in the last Congress, for not leading his partisans in a fight for their reformation. Had he done so, Mr. Richardson said, the minority would have been glad to join him.

Mr. Hepburn, (Rep., Iowa,) replying to Mr. Richardson, admitted that he had favored some modifications, but he frankly stated that his colleagues in the Republican caucus had been opposed to him and that he had yielded to their united wisdom.

Mr. Dalzell then moved the previous question, which was ordered, and the vote was taken by years and nays upon the adoption of the rules of the last Congress.

The resolution for the adoption of the rules was adopted—177 to 158.

DRAWING FOR SEATS.

A resolution for the biennial seat drawing was then adopted upon the motion of Mr. Boutelle of Maine, and preparations were made for this amusing proceeding. By unanimous consent Mr. Grow of Pennsylvania, as an ex-Speaker of the House, and Mr. Harmer of Pennsylvania, the oldest member, were granted the privilege of selecting their seats before the drawing.

Each selected his old seat. The members then retired behind the rails in the rear of the seats, leaving the floor vacant, and a blindfolded page, Griffin Halstead, son of Murat Halstead, drew the little balls containing the numbers from a box. Each ball was numbered, and the number of the member corresponding was given an opportunity to select a seat as his name was called. The name of Mr. Adamson (Dem., Ga.,) was the first called, and he selected the seat occupied in the Fifty-first Congress by the late Speaker Crisp. The names of Mr. Steele (Rep., Ind.,) and Mr. Babcock (Rep., Wis.,) were drawn early, and amid the applause of their colleagues they selected prominent positions on the Republican side.

Mr. Hepburn (Rep., Iowa,) was the first prominent Republican who was forced to go to the "Cherokee Strip" on the Democratic side for a seat. He was received with applause by the Democrats.

The seat drawing having been completed, Mr. Gardiner (Rep., N. J.,) announced the death of Vice President Hobart in fitting words, referring briefly to his brilliant and useful career and the profound grief with which the Nation had received the news that he had passed away.

Later he said he would ask the House to set aside a day to pay appropriate tribute to his memory. As a further mark of respect, upon his motion, the House at 3:50 o'clock adjourned until to-morrow.

SENATE IS CALLED TO ORDER.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 4.—Promptly at 12 o'clock noon Mr. Frye of Maine, President pro tem, called the Senate to order. The blind Chaplain, the Rev. Dr. Milburn, pronounced the invocation, making a beautiful and touching reference to the death of Vice President Hobart.

Mr. Bacon (Dem., Ga.,) was the first member to be recognized by the Chair. He presented, on behalf of Mr. Mallory, (Dem., Fla.,) who was detained from the session by illness, the credentials of Senator-elect Taliaferro, (Dem., Fla.) They were filed.

Mr. Penrose (Rep., Penn.,) presented the credentials of Matthew Stanley Quay, appointed Senator from Pennsylvania by the Governor.

On motion of Mr. Cockrell (Dem., Mo.,) the credentials of Mr. Quay were referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. In this connection, Mr. Chandler (Rep., N. H.,) offered a resolution that Senator Quay be admitted as a Senator from Pennsylvania. This resolution also went to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Remonstrances and memorials against the seating of Mr. Quay were presented by Mr. Burrows (Rep., Mich.,) and Mr. Jones, (Dem., Ark.)

The credentials of Mr. Hayward (Rep., Neb.,) were presented, and subsequently the announcement was made by Mr. Thurston of Nebraska that, owing to critical illness, Mr. Hayward was unable to be present.

By direction of the Chair, the new Senators then were presented at the Secretary's desk, where the oath of office was administered to them by the President pro tem.

Accompanied, each by his colleague, the new Senators in coteries of four, were presented to the presiding officer and received the oath which made them formally members of the body.

Those who took the oath were Senators Aldrich, (R. I.,) Beveridge, (Ind.,) Burrows, (Mich.,) Clark, (Mont.,) Clark, (Wyoming,) Cockrell, (Mo.,) Culberson, (Texas,) Daniel, (Va.,) Davis, (Minn.,) Depew, (N. Y.,) Foster, (Washington,) Hale, (Me.,) Hanna, (Ohio,) Hawley, (Conn.,) Kean, (N. J.,) Lodge, (Mass.,) McComas, (Md.,) McCumber, (N. D.,) Money, (Miss.,) Proctor, (Vt.,) Quarles, (Wis.,) Scott, (West Va.,) Stewart, (Nevada,) and Taliaferro, (Fla.)

After the administration of the oath the roll call showed the presence of seventy-eight members.

Mr. Cullom, (Rep., Ill.,) offered the usual resolution that the Secretary of the Senate inform the House of Representatives that it was ready to proceed to business.

Mr. Platt (Rep., Conn.,) offered a resolution that a committee of two Senators be appointed to join a like committee of the House to wait upon the President and inform him that Congress had assembled and would await his pleasure in communicating to it whatever he might have to suggest. Mr. Platt (Rep., Conn.,) and Mr. Jones (Dem., Ark.,) were named as the committee on the part of the Senate.

Mr. Carter (Rep., Mont.,) presented a memorial and protest against the seating of Senator-elect Clark of Montana, and also a petition from the Governor and other prominent citizens of Montana, asking for an early hearing on the protest against Mr. Clark by the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

The entire matter was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. Sewell (Rep., N. J.,) announced the death of Vice President Hobart, and offered the following resolutions:

"Resolved, That the Senate has received with the deepest regret the information of the death of Garret Augustus Hobart, late Vice President of the United States.

"Resolved, That the Senate be suspended in order that the distinguished public services of the deceased and the virtues of his private character may be fittingly commemorated.

"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be instructed to communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives."

Mr. Sewell announced that at some suitable future date he would call up the resolutions, when an opportunity would be afforded Senators to pay their tributes to the late Vice President.

Mr. Kean (Rep., N. J.,) then, at 12:33 o'clock, moved as a further mark of respect that the Senate adjourn, and amid a deep silence the Chair declared the motion carried.

CHARGES IN THE CLARK CASE.

Memorial Accuses the Montana Senator of Bribery.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 4.—The memorial presented in the Senate to-day by Mr. Carter (Rep., Mon.,) is from some of the members of the Montana Legislature, and against the "validity of the pretended election of William A. Clark" to the Senate. The memorial recites that Mr. Clark "did secure and procure votes in this legislative assembly by the payment therefor, and by the promise of payment therefor, of large sums of money." Further, "your memorialists and protestants do aver that the said William A. Clark, by himself and his agents did bribe sundry members of said legislative assembly to vote for him for said office," the memorialists alleging that he was not the untrammeled choice of the Legislature of Montana.

The assertion is made that by corruption and bribery Mr. Clark was enabled to secure enough votes to compass his election as Senator.

It is recited that the sum of $30,000 paid to members of the Legislature by Mr. Clark or his agents for votes was produced in open session of the Legislature and deposited in the Treasury of Montana, where it still remains unclaimed by Mr. Clark. The sum of $35,000, it is alleged, was to be paid for the votes for four members of the Legislature. It is alleged that the $30,000 is but a small fraction of the amount expended by Mr. Clark to compass his election. The memorialists offer to show to the Senate ample evidence to establish the charges they make.

The charges are signed by Henry S. Stiff, Speaker of the House, and twenty-seven other members of the Montana Legislature.

Appended to, and made a part of, the memorial, is a report of the investigation made of the election of Senator Clark by the Legislature of Montana.

The petition is signed by Robert B. Smith, Governor of Montana; T. E. Collins, State Treasurer; Henry S. Stiff, and many other prominent citizens of Montana, and asks for an early and full hearing of the charges against Senator Clark, which are set out fully in the petition.

The petition declares that "for the purpose of securing the support of members of said legislative assembly to vote for and elect the said William A. Clark, he did confederate and conspire with" parties named and unnamed by the petitioners, "to corrupt, bribe, and buy the members of said legislative assembly and to thereby secure their votes in behalf of the candidacy of said William A. Clark." It is alleged that Clark did in the furtherance of his desires pay large sums of money to the members of the Legislature for their votes. The petition then names a number of members of the Legislature with sums they are alleged to have received set opposite their names. These sums aggregated, according to the petition, about $500,000.

In addition to the sums alleged to have been paid by Senator Clark to persons named for their votes or influence, it is asserted that Senator Clark offered to various persons for their votes or influence sums aggregating $175,000. These persons also are named in the petition. The petitioners aver that many other sums unknown at this time were paid out corruptly by Senator Clark in advancing his candidacy for the Senate.

THE CONGRESSIONAL LIBRARY.

Librarian Putnam Asks Congress for Additional Help.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 4.—Herbert Putnam, the Librarian of Congress, has submitted his first annual report. It contains as an appendix a personal sketch of John Russell Young, late Librarian, and Mr. Putnam's predecessor. The report is made up mainly of a statement of what the library contains up to date in the line of books, pamphlets, maps, charts, music, manuscripts, and prints.

This mass of material has never been catalogued on a modern basis, and Mr. Putnam states in great detail just what should be done in this line. He recommends a considerable increase in the working force of the library to accomplish this and other necessary work. In the estimates the total force is raised from 134 to 229. He is now getting together a working reference library for the use of members at the Capitol. Special collections will be sent over on deposit from time to time bearing on questions at the moment under consideration.

Mr. Putnam says the reading and music room for the blind has been decidedly successful.

GEN. WHEELER'S SEAT.

Representative from Alabama Has Not Yet Asked for Leave.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 4.—Notwithstanding the repeated statements to the effect that Gen. Joe Wheeler is about to return to Washington to resume his seat in Congress, the officials of the War Department assert that they know nothing of any such purpose on the part of the officer. Certainly he has not yet applied to the War Department for leave of absence, although perhaps it may not be necessary for him to go further than his immediate superior officer, Gen. Otis, to secure permission to return to the States. In that case, however, his leave would be limited to sixty days.

The officials point to the decision of the last House—that the General had forfeited his seat in the House by holding his army commission, and make the point that the conditions now are precisely similar, so that if the General returns, he must either resign his commission or his seat in Congress.

It is suggested that a solution of the problem might be had by appointing the General to be a Major General and retiring him at once, in which case as a retired officer he might continue in the legislative branch under the decision in the case of Gen. Sickles.

SUBSIDY BILL IN THE HOUSE.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 4.—The Shipping bill was introduced in the House to-day by Representative Payne of New York, who, with Senator Hanna, prepared and introduced the bill last year. Mr. Payne says it is the same in all essential particulars as the former bill, except that a provision is made that the bounties shall not exceed $9,000,000 annually, and that foreign-built ships having American registry shall have only 50 per cent. of the bounty rates provided. In case the total bounty earned exceeds $9,000,000, a pro rata allowance is to be made.

The bill provides a compensation of 1½ cents per gross ton for each 100 nautical miles covered by sail or steam vessels, outward or homeward bound, up to 1,500 miles each way, and after that 1 cent per gross ton for each 100 nautical miles covered.

An additional allowance is made to fast steamships, beginning with 1 cent per gross ton for each 100 miles by a fifteen-knot ship and slightly higher rates as the speed of the ship increases. The bill also makes these merchant steamships available as auxiliary naval v

FOURTEEN PAGES.

THE WORST THING THEY CAN DO.

The promotion of W. J. BRYAN's nomination or acquiescence in it by New York Democrats is not only bad morals, but blind and suicidal as politics.

The State of New York gave McKINLEY a plurality of 268,469 over BRYAN in 1896. This county gave him a plurality of 20,720 over the combined Democratic and Populist vote for BRYAN. Is not that enough? What do the gentlemen ask? Do they absolutely demand another defeat, this time by half a million votes, to convince them that W. J. BRYAN is not to the taste of the voters of this State?

If the Democracy of New York is to continue as an organized and vital party it must strive to regain power in the State. Do its leaders suppose that their acceptance without a protest of BRYAN as a candidate and their campaign in his support next year will commend them to the confidence and favor of an electorate that stands ready to vote him down by hundreds of thousands of votes, an electorate that distrusts and detests him and would not have him as against any candidate the Republicans are capable of naming? If the Democrats of New York support dangerous policies and dangerous candidates in the Nation they are not safe and not to be trusted in the State.

However low may be his or its political estate, no man, no party, need despair of the future. Past errors may be atoned for and their consequences lived down. But for the man or the party that persists in profligate courses there is no hope. For any New York Democrat who has any reputation to lose in politics, agriculture, or the study of music would be a vastly more profitable occupation next Summer than campaigning for W. J. BRYAN. It would be better for the party organization to stay out of the campaign altogether than to enter it as a supporter of the destructive principles of Bryanism.

The Democrats of New York ought to fight against the renomination of BRYAN from now until the end of the roll call. They betray the people of their State if they do not fight him. They destroy themselves if they aid or acquiesce in the movement to make him again a candidate.

ARMY REORGANIZATION.

As we have already said, what makes Mr. ROOT's report most valuable is that there is not a discoverable trace in it of "politics." If Mr. ROOT were a much less able man than he is, he could do good patriotic work in the Secretaryship by making recommendations with a sole view to the efficiency of the army. If he were even an abler man than he is, his ability would be neutralized and lost if he allowed anything to interfere with the honest expression of his opinions about the needs of the army. That he has absolutely nothing else in view is most gratefully evident from one end of his report to the other, and makes his report very notable and exceptional, if not quite unprecedented, among similar public documents in our time.

As to the reorganization of the army, which is the burden of the report, the Secretary's two initial propositions arrest the attention and compel the respect of the reader in proportion to the amount of reflection which the reader has already expended upon the subject. The whole report, so far as it relates to organization, hinges upon them and refers to them: "First, that the real object of having an army is to provide for war. Second, that the regular establishment will probably never be in itself the whole machine with which any war will be fought."

The first of these propositions we believe to be eminently sound, and it is more fruitful than would appear at first glance. Because, if we had asked the "man in the street," who is the man represented and spoken for in Congress, if we had asked him before the Spanish war broke out, for what we had an army, he would have said that it was to fight Indians and put down riots. In fact, the days of Indian fighting are pretty well over. The more, from a strictly military point of view, may be the pity, since it is plain that the experience gained in Indian fighting has been of immense benefit to our officers and troops, not only against the insurgents in the Philippines, but against the Spanish regulars in Cuba. And that it should be necessary to use the army at all in case of riots, that it should be a National police, is simply a discredit to the Commonwealths in which the local police is so inefficient as to require the army to be invoked. A much worse discredit comes upon a State when the army has to be invoked, as in ALTGELD's case, because the local authorities are themselves in sympathy with the rioters. The army will be still valuable, it is to be feared, as a National police. But we must recognize that its main purpose is to be equal, in time of war, to much larger tasks than fall to it in time of peace.

The second proposition is perhaps equally indisputable as the Secretary means it. We are not likely to have a regular army which is capable of fighting a "big war." But it is a fact that of our foreign wars, the Mexican war was fought by the regular army, and so was the Cuban campaign in the war with Spain. And probably no professional soldier doubts that the work in the Philippines would have been more rapidly and economically accomplished if the prejudices of Congress had not been allowed to prevail, and if the addition to the army had been made in the form of an enlargement of the regular army instead of the enrollment of volunteers for a military service which is eminently and exclusively of the professional kind.

But the points are nevertheless well taken. Our regular army must be, in time of peace, a nucleus and a "cadre." For this purpose it is necessary that preparation for war must be its main business, and all the Secretary's recommendations are made with a view to its efficiency in that respect. There is not a single sentence in the report which is calculated to give any aid or comfort to a demagogue in Congress or to a barnacle in the service. Everything is calculated for the discouragement of these two classes of public enemies, and for the encouragement of the working officers of the army. In how refreshing contrast to the politicians among his predecessors is Mr. ROOT's frank and merited acknowledgment of the invaluableness of the Military Academy. This appears in his statement that, during the Spanish war alone, West Point has been worth all it has cost from its foundation, as well as in his recommendations for its enlargement, and for supplementing its work by more serious and systematic post-graduate instruction than is now required or supplied.

The most conspicuous lesson of the Spanish war was that the line of the army was very much "all right," but that the staff was all wrong. It broke down completely under the demands made upon it and for the supply of which it existed. It is to the reform of the staff departments that the Secretary addresses himself, so as to make of the staff not only an efficient instrument for its ordinary needs, but also so as to make it a "general staff" in the European sense, or what Mr. ROOT prefers to call a "war college," a bureau for the prevision of the military needs of the country, and so far as it may be, of preparation for them. The end he proposes is one the importance of which no reasonable American citizen will dispute. The adequacy of the means is a matter for experts, and we need not doubt that he has had the benefit of the most expert advice the country can furnish. The importance of the proposition that service in the staff shall be a "detail" only, and not a permanent appointment, we need not go to the French Army and the Dreyfus case to appreciate. We have quite sufficient and recent evidence of it here at home. And it is to be taken in connection with the recommendations about promotion.

These come to this, that so long as a man is an officer of the United States Army on the active list, so long he shall be made to feel that his standing and his promotion depend to an appreciable degree upon his behavior, and this by no means in the negative sense of the absence of misbehavior. It is now complained that the latest occasion upon which the standing of an American officer really depends upon his own exertions is the occasion of his graduation at the Military Academy. After that, it does not matter to his personal fortunes whether he takes his duties in a zealous or in a perfunctory manner. And that is very bad. There is no set of men in the world whom it would not "demoralize" to know that it did not matter. Nobody can blame the officers who simply fulfill their duties without enthusiasm, when they know that they will "get their steps" in due course, if they do not in the meantime give occasion for scandal, and who also know that desirable appointments are distributed, not for merit, but for "influence" and favor. There is not an ambitious officer in the army who will not thank the Secretary of War for trying to do for him what the greatest soldier of modern times, if not of all times, pretended to do for his officers, to "open the career to the talents." We venture to say that, to all the active and hardworking officers of the army who neither have nor desire to have any hope of professional advancement except through professional merit, the first report of Secretary ROOT will come as an encouragement and an incentive.

ENGLISH MONEY AND AMERICAN SECURITIES.

The 6 per cent. Bank of England rate is the result of conditions that were clearly described in Mr. A. J. WILSON's cable letter to THE TIMES's Financial Review yesterday. "The present necessities arising from the war," says Mr. WILSON, "the hunger of all the markets for more metal, the stoppage of the usual supplies of gold, the artificially stimulated requirements of India, and the increase in normal demands for bullion for export due to the larger trade transacted" furnish good and sufficient reasons for vigilance in guarding the Bank of England's present stock of gold, which, although it is $50,000,000 greater than its holding at the time of the Baring failure in 1890, is really smaller in proportion to the bank's liabilities and in proportion to the necessities and the risks of the present situation in the London banking world.

All these conditions are temporary. The war will end some time, the need of funds in the London money market will become less pressing, and the 6 per cent. rate will be reduced. A matter of more permanent and far greater interest is the future course of London investment funds. Mr. WILSON estimates that the English investing public has parted with the enormous sum of $750,000,000 worth of our railroad securities since the beginning of 1898. Continental and Egyptian Government stocks had long before been thrown overboard. This momentous displacement of invested capital, probably quite unprecedented in the history of finance, was due to two leading causes—the diminishment or total disappearance of earnings in the form of interest and dividends on the American securities, which served to destroy confidence in American investments, and the marvelous craze for "Africans," "Australians," and British industrial company shares that for so many months dominated the London investment market and swept its stock of free capital into other channels. Of course, it was a very great feat for us to pay for this vast volume of bonds and shares, even with our $600,000,000 of surplus exports added to our cash remittances and existing credit balances. But we have the consolation of knowing that the earnings of these securities are now kept at home, diminishing by just that much, whatever the sum may be, the amount which England can expect to put to her credit in adjusting the season's balances.

The important question, however, is, how long will it be before free capital will again accumulate in the London market, and how much of it will be likely to seek American investment? If our New York banks had a great surplus reserve of idle money now, American money would be loaned in London to take advantage of the high money rate there. But all our money is at work, and the rates are high here. The present condition and promise of our industries does not escape the attention of the British investor. He may not as yet feel inclined to put out his money over here, but it is inevitable that he should feel so inclined if two favorable conditions attend the management of our railroad and business corporations, including even our "industrials." These conditions are, first, of course, good earning power, and second, hardly less of course, honorable management. An American corporation that can show a capacity to make money, and whose management inspires confidence to a degree which makes the investor in its securities feel that he will be fairly treated at all times, might not find it at all difficult to interest the British investor when next the British investor shall be looking around for good things to buy.

Rich as this country has come to be, it can still use profitably a great deal more money than its people possess. We have resources to develop. British capital would come in handy for building up the industries of the South. It may be a long look ahead, but the turning this way of the current of British investment money will be a very important event in the industrial and commercial history of the time and of this country.

POSTAL GRATUITIES

It is not easy to say exactly what are the principles on which the charges of the Post Office are or should be fixed. The work of the department was not laid out for it in advance on any deliberate plan. Like all similar work in our country it has grown up with the growth of the country, as needs and opportunity have presented themselves. But in common with the other departments the Post Office has developed more intelligence, skill, and foresight as the years have passed, and each successive chief has carried forward the progress made by his predecessors with as little regard to political differences as has been shown anywhere.

Postmaster General SMITH, for instance, devotes a large part of his report this year to advocating the policy of rational revision of the postal rates most strenuously urged by Postmaster General BISSELL in the Administration of President CLEVELAND. The purpose of this revision is to cut off the service now rendered for far less than its cost to certain patrons of the Post Office who have no legitimate claim whatever to such favors. This expensive abuse occurs in what is known as second-class matter, which includes newspapers and periodicals of a literary character, published not less than four times a year. The rate charged is one cent for each pound or fractional part thereof. The rate on books and printed matter is eight times as great as this, and the rate on letters is thirty times as great. The reason for giving this service at so low a price unquestionably is that the Government sought to promote the free and extended circulation of intelligence and of such reading as is to be found in journals and periodicals. But the privilege has so far been abused that Mr. SMITH asserts that of the 353,000,000 pounds of second-class matter carried last year, fully one-half was not properly in that class, and ought to have been charged third-class rates. Had the proper charge been possible the Government, instead of $1,763,516, would have received $26,248,346, making a difference in the revenues of $24,248,346.

The department, the Postmaster General says, is powerless to change the rate, because of the vagueness of the law and its interpretation. The task must be taken up by the lawmaking power. He sums up what he considers necessary in this regard as follows:

> The points to be reached are clear and well defined. It is vital to re-establish in their proper classification and forbid the privilege of the pound rate to serial libraries of books, to "house organs," and other sheets of an exclusive advertising character, to sample editions for advertising purposes, to advertising circulars which are masked under the names of fraternal societies, to returns by news agents of unsold periodicals, and to schemes by which publishers pervert their prerogatives by sending matter in their own names at the pound rate for advertisers and purchasers who have not the privilege.

Doubtless the subject will be pursued in Congress. It is important from many points of view. The waste of the people's money is enormous. The sum mentioned as lost by the Postmaster General amounts to two-thirds of the entire interest paid annually on the total bonded debt. It would suffice to pay all the interest on that debt were it refunded at 2½ per cent. If applied to the work of the Post Office alone it would be nearly, if not quite, sufficient to enable the department to provide for a reduction of letter postage to one cent. There are very few matters of greater financial and social importance to come before Congress this year.

GOOD WORK WELL DONE.

We congratulate the Executive Committee of the Indianapolis Monetary Convention on the approach of a great success in their work. With the passage in anything like completeness of the financial bill prepared by the House Caucus Committee, Mr. H. H. HANNA and his associates will have a right to feel that they are rewarded for the faithful, intelligent, and unselfish labors that they have crowded into the last three years.

It was in January, 1897, that the Monetary Convention was held, a wholly non-partisan body of business men, gathered from all parts of the country for the sole purpose of considering how to secure a remedy for the defects and evils of our currency system. After ample discussion certain fundamental ideas were agreed on, and a permanent executive organization was formed, of which Mr. HANNA was made the Chairman. The only means of promoting their object open to the committee was discussion, public and private, through the press, through correspondence and publications of their own, and through personal argument with the representatives of the people. There was no room for the ordinary methods of agitation; the object in view permitted no appeal to popular emotion; from the very nature of their aims all incitement of party prejudice was forbidden; their task was to convince the reason of the country and of the country's legislators, so far as these were not already in sympathy.

How well they performed that task is shown by the fact that the provisions of the caucus bill, so far as they go, are in direct harmony with the programme of the Indianapolis Convention. The Executive Committee of that convention would be the last to claim exclusive credit for all that has been brought about in these three years. Indeed they are not likely to claim any credit at all. But it remains true that so much is due to their efforts that nothing of real value would have been done without those efforts. The success that they have attained is a splendid and inspiring lesson in the power of enlightened and conscientious appeal to the reason and conscience of the people in a free and progressive Nation. For what has been done has been done by this kind of appeal. Much remains to be done, but it will be easier for what has been accomplished. It is fortunate that we shall continue to have the same service from the same admirable organization.

Erving Winslow's Dispatch.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The "Thanksgiving Greeting," of Erving Winslow, which I read in yesterday's TIMES, seems to me about the most outrageous and impertinent assault upon the majesty of the Chief Magistrate of this Nation that has ever been allowed. I do not know whether it is treasonable, but it seems to me it ought to be. In any case, I desire to add my voice to the volume of protest which I am sure that it will elicit, and I hope and believe that your paper will do everything possible to hold the author of that dispatch and his followers up to public execration.

DON'T TAKE IT TO HEART.

S. B. McManus in The Ram's Horn.

Don't take it to heart, little friend,
When the world seems to use you unfair;
Just believe that the worst soon must mend—
That the dreariest road has an end;
And that some day a full, measured share
Shall be given to you as your part,
So don't take it too much to heart.

Don't cry when endeavor proves vain
To work out some sweet, kindly deed;
You may feel all the hurt and the pain
For the loss that was yours, but the gain
Was the trying to do, and the meed
God will give unto you bye and bye;
So take heart of His love, and don't cry.

Don't take it to heart if your best
Is reckoned of not as much worth:
A failure is gain oft confessed,
And God sees it, blessing and blest,
As a gracious, sweet gift to the earth;
Why seek for the world's empty smile—
God will make it all right in a while.

Don't cry when you see your years speed
As a cloud-shadow under the sun,
And you stand as a wind-broken reed,
Weary, waiting, helpless, in need,
And the sands of your glass nearly run:
God will call you up home bye and bye—
Be patient, dear heart, and don't cry.

Take nothin' to heart but the thought
That God knows us, and just as we are;
That He misses no sheaf we have brought,
That He knows all we have yearned for and sought,
That He judges all kindly and fair;
Don't fret, then, dear heart, neither cry—
God's kingdom will come bye and bye.

CENSUS IN NORTH ALASKA

USE DOG SLEDS AND CANOES

Accepted Their Posts at Financial Sacrifice, as Their Wages Are Absurdly Low for the Gold Region.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 4.—Among the men whom the United States is sending into wild and dangerous regions on its errands are fourteen who will receive very little recognition, and will never be known as heroes, and yet they are taking their lives into their hands in the service of their country as truly as the soldiers in the Philippines. They are the census enumerators in Northern Alaska.

These fourteen men go about their perilous duties urged by no desire for money, for they have accepted the positions at a sacrifice. The wages offered to them, $16 a day, are absurdly low in the gold region, and at first, according to the report of Agent Samuel C. Dunham, he was unable to get any good men for the work. They simply laughed at him. Finally Mr. Dunham, who is a man of great energy, made strong personal appeals. He appealed to the men's friendship, to their love of adventure, and to their love of country, and finally succeeded in getting them to undertake the task for what they regarded as a pittance.

It is not long since Major Ray issued an urgent appeal to the Government not to let emigrants go to the Cape Nome region in the Winter. He declared that it was suicide. Yet half of the fourteen enumerators have already set out for their posts of duty, and will spend the Winter traveling over the wild and desolate region of Northern Alaska. They will do their traveling on dog sleds and in canoes. There is no other way, except along the coast, where they can use revenue cutters.

Many of them go into regions where lawlessness prevails, and some into the lairs of outlaws and cut-throats. "The chances are that I will have a Muldoon's picnic this Winter," coolly wrote Enumerator John W. Kelly after reaching his district and finding his route lay through a region infested by Indian outlaws. "I will take a duplicate census in a memorandum book, so that if I am shot there will be some chance of recovering the work. If I am killed and I have any allowance for work already done at the time, please pay the money earned to my sister, Miss Cora Kelly, Jackson, Mo."

Census Director Merriam has an interesting series of letters and reports from Mr. Dunham on the progress of the work. The Yukon is the dividing line between Northern and Southern Alaska. The enumerators in Southern Alaska will not have an easy time, but they will have no such perils to confront as those north of the Yukon. The Director says that Dunham, who has been at work all the Summer, is the very man for the task. Physically he is strong and powerful, and Mr. Merriam says that no man of less strength could be intrusted with such work. He is alert and vigorous, quick of resource, and has had experience.

A "dog train" consists of six or eight dogs and a sledge, and it is in this conveyance that the Alaskan adventurers are making their journeys through the wilderness of snow and ice. They will have to make long detours through uninhabited wilds to reach a camp here and there, made up of a mere handful of settlers. The dogs are worth from $50 to $150 apiece, and it costs the Government 50 cents a day to feed them. Each enumerator takes with him an Indian interpreter, who gets $5 a day. When the enumerators reach creeks and rivers that are navigable, they will go down them in canoes, as Dunham loosely says in one of his reports, "for the purpose of enumerating the floating population."

When Kelly arrived in the Kotzebue district and got ready to start on his journey, he reported that he had gone there on the revenue cutter Bear. "I was nine days on the Bear," he cheerfully reported, "with Capt. Jarvis, the most of the time chasing Indian murderers." An Indian outlaw named Olturek had just waylaid and killed two penniless adventurers named Ostenborg and Jensen, and thrown their bodies into caches. There was no motive for the crime except the one given by Kelly—"pure cussedness" and a desire to hurl defiance at the officers of the law. After the killing, which followed the murder of two miners, Olturek sent word to Jarvis that he would shoot any white man who came near him. The first white man to start for Olturek's neighborhood after this warning was Kelly, but before he got there Olturek was dead. Dunham reports the outlaw's death, but gives no particulars. There are more outlaws in Kelly's way, however, including an Indian named Kokomuk, who is also looking for white men.

Census Director Merriam believes that next year there will be a greater rush to the Nome region than there was to the Klondike last year. There were 5,000 people there when Dunham last reported, and he believes that there will be 25,000 next year. It is claimed the need produced during the short Summer more than $1,500,000, and Dunham thinks a larger amount has been picked up along the beach. He says that building operations in that region have been active. Lumber has been $500 a thousand feet and coal $140 a ton. Food costs $4 a meal. Two-thirds of the population is living in tents. Dunham is now at St. Michaels, but says he is going to Nome by "dog train" in March. The total cost of taking the census for the northern district will, he estimates, be $45,000.

Mr. Merriam expects to have the census proper ready in two years from next July. This includes the subjects of population, vital statistics, manufacturing, and agriculture. The schedules will be ready for distribution about May 1, and the work will begin by June 1.

ANTI-CATHOLIC SUIT FAILS.

Decision of United States Supreme Court as to an Appropriation.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 4.—The United States Supreme Court to-day rendered an opinion in a case dealing with the right of the Government of the United States to appropriate money for an institution conducted by the Catholic Church. The case was that of Joseph Bradfield of the District of Columbia against United States Treasurer Roberts, and was brought to restrain the Treasurer from paying the money appropriated to meet the terms of an agreement made by the Commissioners of the District with the management of Providence Hospital, in this city, because it is conducted by Sisters of Charity of the Catholic Church.

The petition was denied by the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, and to-day's action of the Supreme Court of the United States affirmed this action. Justice Peckham delivered the opinion of the court to-day, and in passing upon it said:

"Assuming that the hospital is a private eleemosynary corporation, the fact that its members, according to the belief of the complainant, are members of a monastic order, or sisterhood of the Roman Catholic Church, and the further fact that the hospital is conducted under the auspices of said Church, are wholly immaterial. Whether the individuals who compose the corporation under its charter happen to be all Roman Catholics or all Methodists or Presbyterians or Unitarians or members of any other religious organization or of no organization at all is not of the slightest consequence with reference to the law of its incorporation. All that can be said of the corporation itself is that it has been incorporated by an act of Congress, and for its legal powers and duties that act must be exclusively referred to."

GERMAN MEAT INSPECTION.

The Consideration of the Bill Has Been Postponed.

BERLIN, Dec. 4.—The question of American meat imports into Germany has already created much bad blood on both sides of the ocean, and it still looks as if this matter would prove the first serious test of the friendly understanding reached between the two countries.

In this controversy, as in others, there are two opposing currents within the German Government. The fact that the influences favorable to the United States, which are directed by Count von Bülow, the Foreign Secretary, are just now again in control, has been strikingly demonstrated.

The Meat Inspection bill, which the Reichstag Commission, hostile to the United States, was to have taken up to-day, has been postponed indefinitely at the instigation of the Foreign Office.

THE FRANCO-AMERICAN TREATY.

PARIS, Dec. 4.—In the Senate to-day M. Fresneau protested against the signing of the Franco-American convention of July 24 without the knowledge of interested parties, such as the Chambers of Commerce and agricultural associations. He also said the Senate ought to demand a postponement and an examination of the treaty until the interested parties had made their observations on the subject.

M. Millerand, the Minister of Commerce, replied that the text of the convention would be communicated to the Chambers of Commerce and Agriculture, by which satisfaction would be given to all.

M. Fresneau wished for a further discussion of the convention, but the Senate refused to agree to it.

In the Chamber of Deputies, during the discussion of the Budget of the Interior, the House, at the request of the Premier, M. Waldeck-Rousseau, rejected a Socialist proposal to suppress the Secret Service funds by a vote of 312 against 207.

FRENCH INSULTS TO VICTORIA.

PARIS, Dec. 4.—The police, in addition to another seizure of copies of La Caricature, containing matter and illustrations grossly insulting to Queen Victoria, to-night seized copies of a ribald song entitled "The Disembarkation of the English," containing a drawing ridiculing her Majesty. The song had been exposed in many shops and kiosks.

CONFERENCE ON ABYSSINIA.

Discussion in Rome Concerned the Boundaries Alone.

ROME, Dec. 4.—The conference here between the Minister of Foreign Affairs, Marquis Visconti Venosta; Commissioner Martini, the British Ambassador, Sir Philip W. Currie, and James Rennel Rodd, the British Consul General in Egypt, who was Special Envoy to King Menelek of Abyssinia in 1897, was solely concerned with the delimitation of the frontiers of Erythrea and the Soudan, and the details of frontier arrangements affecting intercourse between the two territories.

It was the presence in Italy of Commissioner Martini, who is Governor of Erythrea, which suggested the expediency of Mr. Rodd's visit, in order to rapidly and verbally arrange matters.

It is officially stated that Emperor William of Germany was neither consulted nor interested in the arrangement, which was purely one of boundaries, upon which Italy, more as a matter of courtesy than anything else, was consulted. No element of offensive or defensive alliance was considered, and the reports to that effect published in the United States are officially characterized as absolutely untrue.

GERMANS DISCUSS FINANCES.

Say There Is Little Chance for a Restored Silver Standard.

BERLIN, Dec. 4.—The Reichstag to-day discussed the Government's Currency bill providing for an increase of silver coins until the amount reaches the proportion of 14 marks per head of the population. Dr. von Thielman, Secretary of the Treasury, said the increase was imperative, adding that thaler pieces would at the same time be withdrawn from circulation.

Germany, in 1897, he continued, imported 40,000,000, and, in 1899, up to Sept. 30, 47,000,000 marks more in gold than she exported.

Regarding the maintenance of the gold standard and the stoppage of the gold output of South Africa, he asked what would be the result if the war lasted longer than a year.

Herr Weltzien, Conservative, remarked that the Boers were not only gallant defenders of their liberty, but also held the keys of their gold deposits, and might cut off much of Germany's small gold supply.

Herr Koch, Director of the Reichsbank, pointed out that all the great States had now adopted the gold standard, which, he regarded, settled the question of bimetallism.

Dr. Arendt, Secretary of the German Bimetallic League, attributed the rise in the discount rate to the scarcity of gold.

Dr. Siemens, Director of the German Bank, said he considered that the international monetary conventions anticipated by Dr. Arendt were impossible of realization, and that there was absolutely no prospect of the restoration of the silver standard.

The bill eventually was referred to a special committee.

The Kaiser Hears Melba Sing.

BERLIN, Dec. 4.—This evening the Emperor attended the Royal Opera, where Mme. Melba appeared in "Lucia di Lammermoor." The house was packed, and almost as many were turned away as were admitted. Another performance will be given Friday. Mme. Melba will sing Thursday at an entertainment for the benefit of the Red Cross Society in South Africa.

SANTOS COFFEE BARRED OUT.

Health Board to Take No Chance of Admitting Bubonic Plague—The Trade Seriously Affected.

The four coffee-laden vessels from Santos, which are held at Quarantine because of the discovery of supposed cases of bubonic plague on the J. W. Taylor, which was the first of them to arrive, will not be permitted to dock in this city. Whether or not their cargoes of coffee will be allowed to come into the city is a question that is agitating coffee dealers and others.

Health Officer Doty, although opposed to the vessels themselves docking, has given a clean bill of health to four barges laden with coffee from the J. W. Taylor, although Second Engineer Stovey of that vessel was taken to Swinburne Island on Saturday, having manifested plague symptoms. The remainder of the cargo will be released in a day or two. President Murphy of the local Board of Health refuses to allow any of the coffee from the Taylor or the other vessels hailing from Santos to come into New York. The steamers are being watched night and day by health officers, and any attempt to land the coffee, President Murphy says, will result in seizure and arrests.

The mate of the Taylor and the Captain of the Lassell went to the Custom House yesterday and entered their vessels. The men were in charge of a quarantine officer, and after transacting their business were conducted immediately back to the quarantine station. The Captains of the Ragusa and Roman Prince, the other two detained steamers, will be brought to the city to-day on a similar errand. Formal application was made yesterday to the Health Board by the agents of the Roman Prince for permission to land that vessel's cargo, attention being called to the fact that no illness had developed on the steamer. The application was denied, the Health Board having decided that no coffee from Santos can be landed here.

Col. Dudley F. Phelps, Chief of the Law Division of the Custom House, said last evening that he had discussed the question of the J. W. Taylor and her cargo with President Murphy of the Health Department and that they had come to a perfect understanding, by which the Custom House and local sanitary officials would work in harmony. The Taylor, he said, was allowed to be entered so that she might clear, and with the distinct understanding that the ship was not to leave Quarantine and come to this city unless allowed to by the local health authorities.

At the Coffee Exchange yesterday the quarantining of the Taylor, Roman Prince, Lassell, and Ragusa was widely discussed, as it ties up 140,000 bags of coffee, worth nearly a million and a half of dollars. A result of this has been an advance of 1 cent a pound for coffee and the compelling of purchases to replace it at higher than those paid at the port of shipment. Six more ships from Santos, the Maskelyne, Lancefield, Concepcion, Conductor, C. W. Jones, and Willowdene, are due here from Santos with about 200,000 bags of coffee, and they will be dealt with under Quarantine restrictions. The situation is likely to compel the trade to a ruling on deliveries, as there is no precedent to guide the brokers. The strait is certain to entail money losses and vexatious delays.

HALIFAX, N. S., Dec. 4.—Because of an inquiry sent here by the agents of the steamer Roman Prince, at New York from Santos, the Board of Health to-day unanimously voted not to allow that steamer to unload its cargo of coffee at this port.

BALTIMORE ART CONFERENCE.

Means of Beautifying Cities to be Discussed—Artists and Architects from All Parts of the Country.

BALTIMORE, Dec. 4.—The Municipal Art Society of Baltimore, which was formed for the purpose of furthering plans which might be of value in beautifying the city, has determined to invite artists and architects from all parts of the country, and delegates from kindred societies in Boston, Philadelphia, and Cincinnati, to attend a conference in this city. Many invitations to participate in the proceedings have been already accepted, and a representative gathering is assured. The meeting promises to be a convention of art connoisseurs to discuss the improvement of the American city.

At the opening meeting, in McCoy Hall, Johns Hopkins University, Dec. 13, an address will be made by Edwin H. Blashfield of New York City on "Mural Decoration"; George Kroeh, of the Leland Stanford University will speak on "The Devepopment of American and European Cities." On Dec. 14, at 4 o'clock, there will be a conference at McCoy Hall for the purpose of discussing various subjects relating to the artistic developments of cities, including parks, open spaces, suburban improvements, and municipal decorations. At night there will be a dinner to the visitors at the Maryland Club. At this but it is expected that the discussion will turn on subjects kindred to those discussed at the meetings.

Among those who have accepted invitations to attend the conference are Sylvester Baxter, Edwin H. Blashfield, Charles de Kay, Albert Kelsey, George Kriehn, Frederick R. Lamb, Charles McKim, Russell Sturgis, C. Turner, J. Q. A. Ward, Prof. A. R. Ware, John Wilson, and J. K. Taylor, supervising architect of the United States Treasury, who has charge of the erection of the new custom House in Baltimore.

AMERICAN POTTERY EXHIBITION

The National Arts Club has now an exhibition of art potteries in the club galleries, 37 West Thirty-fourth Street, which will last for a fortnight longer. It is in pursuance of the idea of the club to keep members and their guests posted concerning the progress of American manufactures into which art enters, and at the same time exhibit some of the most interesting objects of modern and ancient work from abroad. The little gold and silver show at the club's housewarming on Oct. 30 was of the same nature.

The great bulk of exhibits is from kilns in the United States, but Mexico is also represented by some pieces of Indian workmanship, and Mr. A. W. Drake supplies a number of owls and animal figurines made by the Zuni of New Mexico. The Rookwood Pottery of Cincinnati send a score or more of their fine vases, including not only the better-known brown ware with floral decorations in darker tones, but their later "sea-green," "iris," "tiger eye," and "goldstone" ware, among which are gray, blue, and white pieces of exceptional beauty. Theodore B. Starr exhibits two-score pieces from the Cueby Faience Potteries, near Boston; the dark-green enamel ware, with strong conventional plant forms, makes a capital foil to the pale yellow, violet, ivory white, primrose, and golden yellow pieces which belong to the newer notes in this much admired ware.

The National Arts Club is the first to present a new-comer in ceramics, the painter Brewer of East Hampton, L. I., who shows a dozen examples of his rough peacock green, mirror surface, and gold-under-glaze vases, a distinctly fresh note in the art. He is a beginner trying novel paths in the decoration of pottery and porcelain with green tones over gold, iridescent effects on rough and smooth surfaces, "pe-h-blow" glazes and dashed with pure gold designs under transparent glaze. Art potters will have to reckon with him if he makes good the promise of his beginnings. Very attractive are the plates shown by Hugh Robertson from the Dedham Potteries, accessors to the Low-of-Chelsea wares. The borders of conventional turtle, bat, mushroom, and rat, poppy, and other, soft tones of blue. His rough-surface vases, "volcanic," crimson with drab splash, mahogany, blue, crackle, and the rest are worth examining. Curious experiments in lustred tiles are shown by Edward Lentt of Atlanta, Ga., who also exhibits vases of elaborate design and decoration.

Another large exhibit is from Charles Volkmar of Corona, L. I., who adds to his well-known large painted tiles and yellow jars a number of new colors, massive, dull green, gold, ivory white, and mottled brown, which show his clean, workmanlike manner. The club's fireplaces and grillroom are permanent exhibits for his soft green tiles of varying shade. From the Atlan Club of Chicago, William Bulger and other members send contributions. Among the sendings of D. Noorlan is conspicuous, since it is made of pieces by Clement Massier, the potter who has excited so much interest in Paris with the iridescent ware from Nice. The exhibit from Dikran G. Kelekian is a study in the marvelous work of ancient Oriental potters, Egyptian, Babylonian, Assyrian, Persian, Arabian, Greek, and Rhodian, to which may be added the smaller exhibit by Azeez Khayat. Fine old pieces of Chinese and Japanese pottery are shown by A. D. Vorce and I. A. Lantheir, while John Chadwick exhibits modern Spanish pottery of a very pleasing sort.

CHRISTMAS ART BARGAINS

The Christmas Sketch Mart, given under the auspices of the Alumnae and Students' Association of the Woman's Art School, Cooper Union, will be held Friday evening next, Dec. 8, and Saturday afternoon and evening, Dec. 9, at Cooper Union. There will be opportunities to purchase "original sketches" of such well-known artists as George W. Maynard, W. L. Metcalf, J. H. Twachtman, F. S. Church, Robert Reid, H. C. Christy, and W. A. Clark, and also sketches by the alumnae and students of the school. Booths artistically decorated with holly and mistletoe and rendered as attractive a bevy of prettily gowned art students can make them will offer for sale casts, paintings, sisters, photographs of famous of all kinds silhouettes, and decorative work and still life.

The object of this yearly entertainment are to raise money to carry on the work of the Alumnae and Students' Association, such as establishment of a well-organized luncheon room for the students, the partial support of an apprentice on sketch class under the instruction of W. A. Clark, and the composition class under H. B. Froehlich. Last year the association awarded scholarships and a number of free tickets for the lunchroom. The admission to the mart will be free.

The Ladies of Bikur Cholim Industrial School will hold "Kaffie-Drinken and Huis-Vrouw Bazaar" in aid of their school at Holland House this afternoon and evening. To-morrow afternoon and evening the bazaar promises to be very interesting. The ladies who will serve the coffee and pour over the tables will wear old Dutch costumes, and every appointment and decoration will be old Dutch in character.

THE HAGUE PEACE AGREEMENT.

Neither Great Britain Nor Germany Has Yet Signed.

BERLIN, Dec. 4.—Count Osten-Sacken, Russian Ambassador to Germany, is authority for the statement that neither Great Britain nor Germany has yet signed the three conventions and three declarations approved by the Peace Conference at The Hague.

Some time ago England notified Dr. de Beaufort, Dutch Foreign Minister, that she was ready to sign, with certain reserves. He replied that this could not be done, according to the rules of the conference, unless all the signatory powers consented; and not all the replies were in from the powers.

Regarding Germany's failure to sign, Count Osten-Sacken said that she would be bound in honor by England; and, referring to United States, he remarked that in that case the signing was subject to Congressional ratification.

Kaiser Knows No German-Americans.

BERLIN, Dec. 4.—Emperor William's latest bon mot, it is said, grew out of the ardent efforts of a well-known German-born American to obtain an audience. The applicant had pleaded that he was a German-American public man, a member of some American Deutsche, and had been refused by the Kaiser, who replied, "Ich kenne keine Deutschamerikaner." (But natural- I know Americans. I know Germans. Ich kenne nur Germanen. I know German-Americans I do not know.")

COUNTING KENTUCKY VOTE

State Board Canvasses Returns of Fifty-one Counties.

COUNT WILL END TO-DAY

FRANKFORT, Ky., Dec. 4.—Fifty-one counties were canvassed by the Kentucky State Board of Election Commissioners to-day out of a total of 119 in the State. Of these 51 counties, 5 were passed over to be considered immediately upon conclusion of the work of the Canvassing Board. The counties passed over are Christian, Fleming, Green, Harlan, and Harrison.

The board met at 11:30 o'clock, in the office of Secretary of State Finley, all three members—ex-Chief Justice Pryor of the State Supreme Court, W. T. Ellis, and C. B. Poyntz—being present. There was a clash between the Commissioners and Secretary of State Finley, who, by virtue of his office, acted as custodian of certificates received from the county Boards of Election.

"We are ready for the returns, Mr. Finley," said Judge Pryor.

"Adair County," replied the Secretary; handing out an envelope.

"Why don't you give us the returns from the entire State?" inquired Mr. Ellis.

"I am custodian of those returns," replied Mr. Finley, "and as such I prefer to keep them in my own hands. I do not mean that the board would for an instant misuse them, but as they are in my charge and as I am responsible for them, I cannot give them up, except as they are required by the board."

"They are the property of the board, Mr. Finley," replied Mr. Ellis, "and the board has all the right in the world to have them one by one, or all, as it may elect. I am willing that you should be joint custodian of the records while they are in the possession of the board, but I consider even that a concession on the part of the board."

"I must decline to hand them over," was Mr. Finley's reply, "and request leave to consult with my legal advisers."

Mr. Ellis waved his hand in assent, and after a short talk with Augustus Wilson of Louisville, the attorney acting for the Republican Party, Mr. Finley turned around, remarking: "I will waive the point, Mr. Ellis; here are the returns," and he handed them out.

This was practically the only argument that occurred during the day, and it was carried on without bitterness or discourtesy on either side. Once began, the canvass went on rapidly, thirteen counties being disposed of when the board adjourned at 1 o'clock for dinner. It reconvened at 2:30 o'clock and within three hours thirty-eight counties, including the five that were passed over, were canvassed. The board will meet again at 9:30 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The first county over which any trouble arose was Christian, which gave 2,816 votes for Goebel and 3,471 to Taylor. It was passed, on account of alleged irregularities in the precinct of Hopkinsville. Fleming County was the next county laid over for future argument. The County Commissioners first certified 1,938 votes for Goebel and 1,890 for Taylor. Later they discovered errors in the count and sent a substitute certificate, giving Goebel 1,771 and Taylor 1,695. The county was passed by mutual consent of Democrats and Republicans.

Green County was passed on account of alleged irregularities in the Brentwood Precinct. When Harlan County was called, Judge Hargis, acting as chief adviser for the Democratic Party, arose and asked that the county be passed on account of irregularities, the nature of which, he declared, he was unable to state, being in ignorance concerning them. He knew there were some, however.

Mr. Wilson quizzed him a little as to the nature of the trouble, but Judge Hargis declared he had not read the charges and does not know what they were. The county was passed as he requested, the Republicans offering no objection. The Election Commissioners of Harrison County had sent two certificates forward, making up differences of trouble in Cynthiana. This was on account of an injunction issued against them by Judge Kimbrough, ordering them to certify for all the Republican candidates. The first certificate was filed in accordance with the injunction. The injunction being dissolved later, the second certificate was filed, making a difference of 133 votes in Taylor's count.

Secretary of State Finley announced that he would decline to receive from the county election officers of Jefferson County the mass of evidence covering the alleged Republican fraud in the City of Louisville. When this was stated in he declared that he had no power to receive any such matter and that he must decline to touch it. Deputy Clerk Day of Louisville, who presented them, insisted upon their being received. Mr. Finley refused. Mr. Day declined to take it away, and it was allowed to remain lying on the floor of Mr. Finley's office.

It will probably take the board the greater part of to-morrow to canvass the returns of the remaining counties, and it will then resolve itself into a Contesting Board, adjourn to the large hall in which the Legislature meets, and for a time vocal fireworks will be in order. The real work that will count for the election of Goebel or Taylor will begin then, and every inch will be fought fiercely on both sides.

There was nothing in the work of to-day that will count for much, unless it be the decision of the Commissioners in the canvass of Bracken County. Here the polls were closed when 23 Democrats and 6 Republicans were waiting to vote, all desiring to vote the straight party tickets. They were at the polls in time to vote, but the supply of regular ballots had been exhausted and their votes were refused. The County Commissioners asked that the votes be admitted. The board denied the request, as it had no power to go behind the certified returns.

In the canvass of Breckinridge County it was discovered that two certificates of election had been filed, the county officers desiring to alter the count given in their first certificate. Commissioner Ellis asked the attorneys to declare themselves on this point, as it might be of importance later on. He wanted to know if the attorneys were of the opinion that the county officers had a right to make corrections at a date subsequent to the original filing of the certificate.

The city was very quiet to-day. A large number of men, mostly Republicans, came in from outlying counties. Among the arrivals were Lieuts. Sparks and Scoville of the Laurel County militia, but they did not come on orders. They came, according to Adjt. Gen. Collier, as private citizens, to see what was going on. There was not a semblance of a row of any kind during the day. Mayor De Honey swore in sixty extra policemen, but they were needed chiefly on account of the crowds drawn by court day and the opening of the Congressional campaign.

MAJOR JOHNSTON HOPEFUL.

Imprudence, He Thinks, Will Alone Cause Bloodshed in Kentucky.

Major P. P. Johnston of Lexington, Ky., who was the candidate for Lieutenant Governor on the John Young Brown ticket, is at the Murray Hill Hotel.

"I am hopeful," he said to a TIMES reporter yesterday, "that no serious trouble will result from the present election controversy in Kentucky.

"Frankfort, where the State Board of Election Commissioners is in session, is filled with armed men, partisans of the different candidates. An imprudent act on the part of one or more may cause much bloodshed, and I am afraid there are some men who want to be imprudent.

"The State Board should conclude its labors not later than Thursday. On the face of the returns, W. S. Taylor, the Republican nominee, has a plurality of about 3,000. He should get the certificate.

"My latest information is that the Republicans are growing timid. There is a great deal of blustering talk about what this, that, and the other man will do in certain contingencies, but that does not alarm me so much as the possibility of an act of imprudence during the sessions of the Election Commissioners. But I very much hope that bloodshed will be avoided.

"We are to have a special election in the Seventh Congressional District on the 18th inst. to fill the vacancy caused by the death of E. G. Settle. Anti-Goebelism is the issue. June Gayle of Owen County is the Goebel candidate, and he is opposed by William C. Owens of Scott County, who defeated W. C. P. Breckinridge in a memorable contest. Mr. Owens, who bitterly assailed Goebel on the stump in the late campaign, was nominated by the Brown Democrats and indorsed by the Republicans. I expect to see Owens chosen."

KINGS DEMOCRATIC COMMITTEE.

Indications that Opposition to Senator Coffey Is Weakening.

The Democratic County Committee of Kings will meet to-night and organize. It is reported that James Moffett will be re-elected Chairman. The anti-Coffey members of the committee may make a fight against the re-election of Assemblyman John J. Cain as one of the Vice Chairmen. Cain is one of Senator Coffey's lieutenants.

There are indications, however, that the opposition to Senator Coffey is weakening.

MR. CLAUSEN A SACHEM.

Tammany Asks Democratic Committee to Hold Convention Here.

At the regular monthly meeting of the Tammany Society last night, President George C. Clausen of the Department of Parks was formally installed as a Sachem. Mr. Clausen was elected some time ago, but had not been inducted into office.

A resolution was adopted inviting the Democratic National Committee to hold the next National Convention in this city.

CITY CLUB AND MR. GARDINER.

The Council Preparing a Report—Rumor About Its Contents.

The Council of the City Club held a meeting last night at the clubhouse for the purpose of preparing a report of the club's work for the last few months. The report will be presented to the club at a meeting to be held to-morrow evening. At the conclusion of last night's meeting, Secretary Pryor said:

"The results of our work will be made public at the meeting of the club on Wednesday night. We will have some important news for the newspapers then."

It is understood that a part of the report will deal with the charges that were preferred against District Attorney Gardiner by a committee appointed by the Council. Secretary Pryor would not say anything about the matter.

A dinner will be given at the clubhouse on the evening of Dec. 14. A discussion on municipal ownership of the water supply of the City of New York will be the feature of the evening. It is announced that the speakers will be Controller Bird S. Coler, F. C. Moore, President of the Board of Underwriters, and William F. King, President of the Merchants' Association.

DEMOCRATIC CLUB ELECTION.

Mr. Keller Chosen as President—The Treasurer's Report.

The annual meeting and election of the Democratic Club took place at the clubhouse last night. The following ticket, which received 886 votes, was declared elected: President—John W. Keller; First Vice President—Edward F. O'Dwyer; Second Vice President—Cord Meyer; Treasurer—Theodore F. Hascall; Secretary—William E. Wyatt; Corresponding Secretary—Adrian T. Kiernan; member of the Board of Governors, (term to expire in December, 1901)—Perry Belmont; members of the Board of Governors, (terms to expire in December, 1902)—P. Henry Dugro, Andrew Freedman, Asa Bird Gardiner, and James McCartney.

At the meeting which preceded the election the following resolution was adopted:

"Resolved, That the thanks of the Democratic Club are eminently due and are tendered to the Hon. Perry Belmont for his able and faithful services to the club as its President for the past year."

According to the report of the Treasurer, 609 resident and 103 non-resident members were elected in the fiscal year ending Nov. 22. In the same period the receipts from fees and dues were $172,480; from house accounts, $78,980.55; from sale of property, $27,506.31; balance on hand from last year, $34,720.93. The club has total assets of $327,469.69, and liabilities of $124,393.54, and a bank balance of $10,561.64. During the year the club paid off a second mortgage of $60,000, interest, $3,600; paid on first mortgage $25,000, and set aside a sinking fund of $15,000. Included in the assets are $12,275 in unpaid dues, and $9,131.26 in house accounts.

The new Board of Governors will meet to-night.

THE FRANCHISE TAX LAW.

The Governor Will Not Recommend Any Change in Its Provisions.

ALBANY, Dec. 4.—Gov. Roosevelt states that he will not recommend, and there probably will be no change in the provisions of the franchise tax law, so far as affects the application of that law, made at the coming session of the Legislature.

There may be some slight changes made to render more practicable the enforcement of the statute. These will probably include an increase in the clerical force of the State Board of Tax Commissioners. The law has not had a sufficient trial to ascertain its efficacy and the results which it will accomplish, and it is undoubtedly the purpose of the Governor to have it continued in operation in its present form for at least twelve months longer.

Gov. Roosevelt to-day consulted with Prof. Jenks of Cornell College, Prof. Seligman of Columbia, Senator Stranahan, Chairman of the Special Joint Committee of the Legislature on Taxation, and Judge William M. Cohen of New York City, all experts on taxation, on franchise tax matters, and the question of taxation as affecting trusts.

TRIAL OF ELECTION CASES.

Extraordinary Term of Court Sits in an Improvised Room.

The Extraordinary Term of the Supreme Court, convened by order of Gov. Roosevelt and presided over by Justice Werner, for the consideration of violations of the election law, is now holding forth in the Criminal Court Building in an improvised courtroom on the top floor, formerly occupied by the Health Department. The crude room reminds one of a country Justice's court, but the lack of facilities is not permitted to interfere with the business in hand.

When the court was convened yesterday the trial of George T. Sullivan, alias William Morris, of 263 Madison Street, for false registration, was resumed. Sullivan, it was alleged, hired a room at 28 Amsterdam Avenue for two weeks for the purpose of voting in the Second Election District of the Nineteenth Assembly District. The jury brought in a verdict of guilty, and Sullivan was remanded until to-day for sentence.

The next case moved was that of A. Hermon Fromensohn, who registered from 111 Canal Street, in the Second Election District of the Eighth Assembly District, on Oct. 21. Fromensohn was formerly a newspaper man and magazine writer, and is well educated. The prosecution seeks to prove that he registered illegally, and asserts that he never slept at the residence given to the registration board. The case was not completed when court adjourned until to-day.

CHOATE ON CHAMBERLAIN.

Ambassador Denies Intention to Confirm the Secretary's Remarks.

LONDON, Dec. 4.—Many people close to Joseph H. Choate, the United States Ambassador, say he was not only unaware of the tenor of the speech delivered by Joseph Chamberlain at Leicester Nov. 30, when he himself was speaking at the American Thanksgiving banquet in London, but was also ignorant of the fact that the Secretary for the Colonies was making any speech the same day.

Mr. Choate repudiates emphatically any intention to confirm the Colonial Secretary's remarks, maintaining that he only reiterated, on behalf of the United States, expressions of friendship often made before, and he does not believe there is any necessity of withdrawing anything he said, and, while refusing to express an opinion on Mr. Chamberlain's speech, Mr. Choate draws attention to his own speech, which included the statement that he believed the watchword of the United States was still "no entangling alliances."

Fatal Fire in Chicago.

CHICAGO, Dec. 4.—Fire to-night burned one of the two buildings occupied by John A. Gauger & Co. and Hardy Brothers & Foley, molding factories, at Twenty-first Place and Loomis Street. John Bohannon, a fireman, was killed, and James E. Donnelly, another fireman, seriously injured by the falling of a wall. Twelve horses were burned to death. Gauger & Co.'s loss is $30,000, and Hardy Brothers & Foley lose $25,000.

CIRCUS LIFE ATTRACTS HER.

Veteran Manager's Daughter, Agnes Robinson, Marries a Performer Against Her Parent's Wishes.

It was announced in Jersey City yesterday that Miss Agnes Robinson, the daughter of Gilbert Robinson of 13 Lewis Street, a veteran circus manager, had married France Reed, a circus performer, and had gone westward with her husband. The marriage took place against the wishes of the bride's parents. They were anxious that she should not marry any one in the circus business.

Miss Robinson last Summer visited her uncle, John Robinson, in Cincinnati. He is the proprietor of an Opera House and the owner of the Cincinnati Terrace Garden, in which the performers of Robinson's Circus are trained. France Reed was practicing there. Miss Robinson met him. They fancied each other. Reed told his uncle, Dan Rice, that he would like to marry Miss Robinson, and asked him to intercede with her father. When Gilbert Robinson heard that his daughter was receiving Reed's attentions he caused her immediate return home. Then her parents tried to induce her to give up Reed. She refused.

Reed arrived in Jersey City on Nov. 27, and soon had an interview with Gilbert Robinson. Robinson refused to give his consent that Reed should marry or see his daughter.

The couple met at the house of Mrs. John Rule of Corbin Avenue. Reed proposed immediate marriage. Miss Reed said the banns had not been published. Reed suggested that they be married by a Protestant clergyman in Jersey City, and later by a Roman Catholic clergyman in Toledo. They were married Wednesday afternoon by the Rev. T. C. Mayham, the pastor of Grace Methodist Episcopal Church, in Tonnele Avenue. Mr. Robinson was in New York, Miss Robinson bade farewell to her mother and her grandmother, both once professional riders. She said to them, "I shall learn to ride. My husband will teach me and some day I will be as great a rider as my mother or grandmother has been."

When Mr. Robinson learned the news at his home that evening he said: "I can see that girl, brought up amid refining influences, educated as carefully as we knew how, sitting on the top of a —— show wagon."

CAUSE OF DEATH DISCLOSED.

Fine Wire in Bread Punctured Mrs. Keifer's Lung.

Mrs. Katherine Keifer, forty-eight years of age, living at 406 Fourth Avenue, Brooklyn, died last Friday at St. Peter's Hospital after suffering with a complaint which baffled medical skill nearly two weeks. When an autopsy was performed yesterday it was found that a short piece of fine wire had punctured one of her lungs, causing death.

Mrs. Keifer about ten days ago swallowed a large piece of bread accidentally and shortly afterward suffered great pain. She was taken to St. Peter's Hospital, where the X rays were used, but without result.

HER HAIR MADE HER INSANE.

Mrs. Monahan Worried by the Talk of Her Envious Neighbors.

Mrs. Rose Monahan, whose husband is a locomotive engineer, was taken from her home, at 836 Southern Boulevard, to the Harlem Hospital last night insane. Mrs. Monahan is a strikingly handsome woman, and had hair so intensely black and lustrous that she was the envy of all the women for blocks around. They talked so much about Mrs. Monahan's tresses that it annoyed her and that, with illness, upset her mind.

When her husband reached home last night after his run he found that his wife had taken her scissors and cropped her hair off close to her scalp. She was talking in an incoherent manner. Mr. Monahan called in a physician, and upon his advice sent his wife to the hospital.

SAW HER BROTHER KILLED.

Just as Rachael Smith, sixteen years old, reached the foot of the stairs at 59 Walker Street, where she is employed, last evening a man's body landed on the hatchway close to the door. It was that of her brother Morris, eighteen years old. His skull was crushed and he died instantly. The girl's screams brought Policeman Pross to the scene and he summoned an ambulance from Hudson Street Hospital. Surgeon McWhorter, when he arrived, could do nothing but pronounce the young man dead.

Young Smith was hoisting a case of goods from the first floor when he slipped and fell from where he was standing near the open hatchway on the fourth floor. William Wasserstron, another employe, was standing near Smith, but was powerless to help him, and as he looked down the shaft he saw his companion killed. Smith was eighteen years old and lived at 222 Clinton Street with his parents. He was foreman for M. Goldberg & Co.

WEST END ASSOCIATION MEETS.

Resolutions Adopted Relative to Driving and Removing Snow.

The West End Association held its annual meeting last night at the Hotel Endicott, 102 West Eighty-second Street. President Cyrus Clark presided. The officers were re-elected, and are as follows:

President—Cyrus Clark; Vice Presidents—James Van Dyck Card, John C. Coleman, and James J. Phelan; Treasurer—J. Edgar Leaycraft; Secretary—George D. Sheppard.

Several resolutions were passed. Among them was one appointing a committee of five to call on the City Magistrates and Police Captains and ask that the laws preventing reckless driving on Broadway from Fifty-ninth Street to One Hundred and Tenth Street be more strictly enforced. A second resolution named a committee of three to ask the Commissioner of Street Cleaning to remove the snow on Broadway from Fifty-ninth Street to One Hundred and Tenth Street immediately after every heavy snowfall, and asking the co-operation of the League of American Wheelmen to this end.

Street Railway Elections.

Directors elected by the Twenty-eighth and Twenty-ninth Street Crosstown Railroad Company's stockholders at their annual meeting were H. H. Vreeland, D. B. Hasbrouck, P. A. B. Widener, W. L. Elkins, Thomas Dolan, Thomas F. Ryan, C. E. Warren, H. S. Beattie, and Henry A. Robinson. The Inspectors of Election chosen were the same as those of the Metropolitan Company.

Police Guard a Trust Company.

The office of the Nassau Trust Company at 91 Broadway, Brooklyn, for the last three weeks has been closely guarded both day and night by policemen in plain clothes. The reason became known yesterday, when Police Captain Short of the Bedford Avenue Station made a statement to the effect that last month ex-Postmaster Andrew T. Sullivan, the President of the trust company, received information through an anonymous source that a gang of crooks contemplated an attack on the company's safe. Some credence was placed in this report because of the many recent burglaries in that section of the city.

WHAT IS DOING IN SOCIETY.

As long as the Indian Summer weather lasts people will be loath to leave the country and come to town. Although church parade on Sunday was quite brilliant, and for an hour Fifth Avenue looked itself again, still there were many absentees and a number of houses are yet closed. The Ogden Mills have been in and out of town for the past month. They arrived yesterday for the season. Mrs. John Jacob Astor has been also in the country, but was in town yesterday. Mrs. Astor, Sr., has not been seen out very much since her return from abroad. The town filled up yesterday. Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Mackay have returned to New York and are at their house on Madison Avenue.

On the Pretoria, which arrived Sunday, there came among others the Hon. C. Calderon, Colombian Minister at Washington, and Mme. Calderon, William B. Mercer, Jr., W. Raymond, and Adolph Schaus. La Champagne, which arrived yesterday from Havre, brought among other passengers Mr. and Mrs. R. M. Hoyt, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Smith, Mrs. Terry, Mr. Oswald Stuart Sloan, and Mr. Joseph Navarro. From all accounts the celebration of Thanksgiving at the Webb Farm, at Shelburne, Vt., must have been an interesting one. As has already been stated, Mr. William K. Vanderbilt took Mr. and Mrs. Oliver Harriman, Jr., and Mr. and Mrs. James Lawrence of Groten to Shelburne in his private car on Wednesday last, and the party left on their return Sunday night. There were ten covers at the Thanksgiving Day dinner, and the table was laid to represent a harvest scene, sheaves of wheat in a circle being surrounded by a large display of vegetables and fruit, with cut flowers in profusion.

The appearance of Mrs. George Gould and her daughter, Miss Marjorie Gould, at the recent wedding of Mr. Snowden and Miss Churchman, at Philadelphia, last week, seems to have greatly excited the newspapers of that city, who are just recovering from the fit of hysterics caused by the return from Europe of Mr. and Mrs. Anthony J. Drexel. A writer in The Sunday Times says: "Miss Bertha de Pourtales Churchman just missed being the most prominent figure at her own wedding. If it hadn't been for Mrs. George Gould of New York and her daughter Marjorie the paramount place would undoubtedly have been given to the bride, but the cold, steely glitter of Mrs. Gould's pale-gray sequins, and the rhinestone buttons of Miss Marjorie's white kid shoes, were too much for even the glacial calm of Philadelphia. It was such a pity, for there hasn't been a prettier wedding in Philadelphia this season," &c. Mrs. Gould, by the way, is organizing some private theatricals for a house party she is to give at her Lakewood home during the Christmas holidays, and in which she herself is to appear. This will be Mrs. Gould's first venture on the stage since she closed her professional career.

The deaths of Mrs. Henry A. C. Taylor and Mr. Madison Jones were the general topics of discussion wherever people met yesterday, as it was not generally known that either was ill. Mrs. Taylor's death throws the Fearing and Sheldon families into deep mourning, and the large Taylor and Pyne connection into temporary mourning at least. Mrs. Taylor was Miss Charlotte Fearing, daughter of the late Daniel B. Fearing. Her sister married Mr. Frederick Sheldon, and her brother, George R. Fearing, Miss Travers. Her nephew, Mr. Daniel B. Fearing, married Miss Henrietta Strong. Mrs. Taylor leaves an unmarried daughter and a son, Miss Taylor and Mr. Henry Richmond Taylor, and another son, Mr. Moses Taylor, who married Miss Edith Bishop. Her funeral will be held at her late residence, 3 East Seventy-first Street, at 11 o'clock this morning. Mr. Madison Jones was for many years one of the best-known bachelors in New York society. He was a member of the Union, University, Tuxedo, and Racquet Clubs. His funeral will take place at Grace Church at 10 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The first Monday German was danced in Baltimore last night. This is always an event of much social importance, not only in Baltimore, but in New York and Philadelphia as well. Among the "buds" who made their bows at Lehman's Hall last night and who are known in New York were Miss Charlotte Latrobe, the daughter of ex-Mayor Latrobe; Miss Louise Lee, daughter of Mr. Charles O'Donnell Lee, and Miss Nancy Lee, daughter of Mr. Columbus O'D. Lee, both cousins of the Iselin family of this city; Miss Mary Peter, a niece of the second and late Mrs. Schuyler Hamilton, Jr., and Miss Margaret Ridgeley, daughter of Mr. Otho E. Ridgeley.

Albert Morris Bagby gave his first musical morning of the season at the Astoria yesterday. Miss Clara Butt sang and Vladimir de Pachmann played. There was a large audience, who remained until the end of the entertainment. The other artists were Miss Ollie Chew and M. Polo Plançon. There is a seeming impression in the minds of some people that a piano solo is given as an obbligato to their conversation. This chatter was most annoying.

Miss Butt and the vocalists. M. Plançon was, as always, a favorite yesterday. He sang the "Three Grenadiers," to the delight of all. Miss Butt, who is supposed to have been the model for Du Maurier's Trilby, was the subject of great interest. She sang "The Lost Chord" as an encore. As a whole, the morning was a charming one. Many of the old subscribers were present to prove their appreciation of Mr. Bagby's efforts. The Palm Room and all the restaurants were crowded with luncheon parties, which followed the musicale.

One of the most attractive events of the Philadelphia season so far was the luncheon given yesterday at the Acorn Club by Mrs. W. H. H. Robinson to the débutantes of the season. The decorations of the room were of an elaborate nature, and consisted of palms, potted plants, and American Beauty roses in great profusion, while each table was also handsomely decorated. Forty-five sat down to luncheon, during which a band stationed in the hall played. Among some of those present were Miss Ellen Drexel Paul, Miss Mildred Harrison, Miss Edith Meade, Miss Florence Cramp, Miss Elizabeth Keating, Miss Virginia Campbell, Miss Esther Harrison, Miss Ethel Whelen, Miss Weightman, Miss Rhoda Morris, Miss Hope Binney Tyler, Miss Annie Hayes, Miss Lippincott, Miss Anna Emlen Hamersley, Miss Fanny Brock, Miss Rhoda Howe, Miss Sara Brinton, and Miss Wister.

Paris is still continuing its series of dinners and teas and entertainments generally during the short Autumn season. The American residents made much of Thanksgiving, and several large dinners were given. The ships which are sailing this week bring quite a number of Americans who have been passing the Summer and Autumn in Paris and a few of the resident colony there. Mr. Augustus Jay is on the St. Louis, making his annual visit to the country. Others booked on the same ship are Mr. Count and Countess Raoul d'Oyley (formerly Evans) and their daughter Miss Evans, Mr. and Mrs. Richard Stevens, Mr. Casper S. Crowninshield, Mrs. Robert N. Kelly, Mrs. W. H. Forbes, Mr. and Mrs. O. W. Bird, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Borie, and Mrs. William Harper and Miss Harper. On La Gascogne are Mr. and Mrs. Tudor Hale and on the Lucania Mr. and Mrs. F. WATCH FOUND IN THE STREET.

Was Engraved "From Frankie to Al."—A Little Girl's Honesty.

Nora Murphy, ten years old, who says she lives "somewhere near Bethune and Washington Streets," entered the Tenderloin police station last night and handed to Sergt. Daly a lady's gold watch. She said she picked it up at Seventh Avenue and Fourteenth Street.

An older girl who accompanied Nora explained that she had met her at that corner examining the timepiece, and advised surrendering it to the police. The Sergeant put the watch away. On the inside of the case is engraved "From Frankie to Al."

SAYS SON STOLE HER RINGS.

MOUNT VERNON, N. Y., Dec. 4.—Carlton Sheppard, eighteen years old, was arraigned before Justice Schat to-day on a charge of grand larceny made by his mother, Mrs. Kate Sheppard, of 527 South Seventh Avenue, this place. He was remanded until to-morrow.

Sheppard, it is said, was fond of display. His mother missed diamond rings said to be worth $700 about a week ago. According to the police, her son's absence from home all night led her to make a complaint against him. The police learned that Sheppard was in New York City. When he returned home last night he was arrested. In his pockets were found pawn tickets showing that a loan of $100 had been obtained on the rings.

BIGGEST CHINESE CARGO HERE.

The steamship Ping Suey, which arrived yesterday from Hongkong on her maiden trip, brought the biggest cargo that ever came from China to an American port on the Atlantic Coast.

Her consignment of tea is by far the largest ever brought to this city. There are 7,513 packages, 32,944 half chests, and 20,723 boxes of this commodity alone, which foots up roughly in weight about 2,500,000 pounds. The vessel has, besides hundreds of tons of firecrackers and matting from China, several tons of tin from Singapore and a big assortment of silks and curios and a large consignment of animals. The tonnage of the Ping Suey is 4,150, and she carries a crew of seventy-five men, mostly Cingalese and Lascars. Shewan, Fowes & Co., 16 Beaver street, are her agents.

The Ping Suey has been chartered to load grain at Philadelphia for Rotterdam, and she will be the biggest vessel that ever went up the Delaware.

PLAN OF EXTORTION ALLEGED.

Charles Thomas Davis, editor of a financial paper published in the Wall Street district, was arrested yesterday afternoon by Court Officer Barrington of the Centre Street Court on a charge of attempted extortion. The complainant is Henry A. Seymour of the banking and brokerage firm of Seymour, Johnson & Co., who made affidavit before Police Magistrate Pool that Davis had attempted to obtain $3,000 from him to suppress the publication of information alleged to be prejudicial to the firm.

Davis, according to Mr. Seymour, was ordered out of the office, and in the latest issue of his paper there was published an article accusing Seymour, Johnson & Co. of aiding in the floating of alleged worthless securities of a car brake concern, whereby many investors lost large sums of money. With the article appeared lithographs of the certificates bearing the name of Seymour, Johnson & Co.

Davis, who lives at the Gilsey House, was taken to the Church Street Police Station, and was still there at a late hour last night. He will be arraigned in the Centre Street Court this morning.

CHICAGO RAILWAYS WIN.

Court Upholds Their Terminal Charge of Two Dollars Per Car.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Dec. 4.—The nine railroad companies running into the Union Stock Yards won a victory in the United States Circuit Court to-day, when Judge Kohlsaat ruled that the terminal charge of $2 per carload of live stock, imposed by the roads, is reasonable and that the Inter-State Commerce Commission has no right to enjoin them from charging this extra fee.

The Court was asked to pass upon the legality of the "Chicago rate" or charge for transportation up to the terminals of the companies' tracks, and in declaring the charges from the terminals to the stock yards reasonable he finds that the defendants impose this extra fee to cover the charges imposed by the stock yards company for use of its tracks.

RAILWAY HELPS A STATE.

The Santa Fe Pays a $35,026.90 Recording Fee to Colorado.

Special to The New York Times.

DENVER, Dec. 4.—The Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé Railroad has obviated the necessity of an extra session of the Colorado Legislature and tided the State over a financial stringency that has threatened to result in the closing of the State university and other institutions.

This morning the company filed amended articles of incorporation with the Secretary of State on the capital stock of $233,486,000, paying into the State's coffers a recording fee of $35,026.90. The capitalization of the Santa Fé makes it the largest in Colorado, and one of the five largest corporations in the world.

TO LAUNCH THE BAILEY.

The torpedo boat destroyer Bailey will be launched from the works of the Gas Engine and Power Company and Charles L. Seabury & Co. to-day at noon, at Morris Heights. The invited guests will be conveyed to the Mount Morris works on a special train over the New York Central Railroad, leaving the One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street station at 11 o'clock.

The Bailey, which is the first United States war vessel ever launched on the Harlem River, is one of the three of her type for which the Government appropriated $250,000 two years ago. She was named after Rear Admiral Theodorus Bailey, and will be christened by his granddaughter, Miss Florence Beekman Bailey, the daughter of Edward S. Bailey of this city.

AID FOR TUSKEGEE SCHOOL

Carl Schurz Presides at a Meeting at Madison Square Garden.

LETTER FROM MR. CLEVELAND

Ex-President Indorses the Work Being Done—Booker T. Washington Appeals for Money.

An audience that filled every seat and overflowed into the aisles gathered last evening in the Concert Hall at Madison Square Garden at a meeting in aid of the Tuskegee Industrial Institute, at Tuskegee, Ala. Ex-President Grover Cleveland was to have presided, but was unable to come, and sent a letter instead, which was read.

Carl Schurz presided, and with him on the platform were Dr. Booker T. Washington, President of the institute, who delivered an address; Morris K. Jesup, William E. Dodge, Alexander E. Orr, the Rev. Dr. Charles H. Parkhurst, Richard Watson Gilder, Chancellor MacCracken, J. Kennedy Tod, Le Grand B. Cannon, the Rev. R. Heber Newton, Hamilton W. Mabie, the Rev. Dr. Morgan Dix, William Dean Howells, ex-Mayor Strong, Henry Holt, J. Pierpont Morgan, Wheeler H. Peckham, President Baldwin of the Long Island Railroad, and the Rev. Dr. Lyman Abbott.

Among those who filled the boxes were Mr. and Mrs. S. P. Avery, Mr. and Mrs. R. Fulton Cutting, Mr. and Mrs. John D. Rockefeller, Mr. and Mrs. C. P. Huntington, Mrs. Frederick Billings, Seth Low, Theodore K. Gibbs, and Mr. and Mrs. C. M. Pratt. Mr. Cleveland's letter, dated Princeton, Dec. 4, is as follows:

My Dear Dr. Washington: My inability to attend the meeting to-morrow evening, in the interest of Tuskegee Institute, is a very great disappointment to me. If my participation could have in the slightest degree aided the cause you represent, or in the least encouraged you in your noble efforts, I would have felt that my highest duty was in close company with my greatest personal gratification.

It has frequently occurred to me that in the present condition of our free negro population in the South, and the incidents often surrounding them, we cannot absolutely calculate that the future of our Nation will be always free from dangers and convulsions, perhaps not less lamentable than those which resulted from the enslaved negroes less than forty years ago. Then the cause of trouble was the injustice of the enslavement of four millions; but now we have to deal with eight millions, who, though free, and invested with all the rights of citizenship, still constitute, in the body politic, a mass largely affected with ignorance, slothfulness, and a resulting lack of appreciation of the obligations of that citizenship.

I am so certain that these conditions cannot be neglected, and so convinced that the mission marked out by the Tuskegee Institute presents the best hope of their amelioration, and that every consideration makes immediate action important, whether based upon Christian benevolence, a love of country, or selfish material interests, that I am profoundly impressed with the necessity of such prompt aid to your efforts as will best insure their success.

I cannot believe that your appeal to the good people of our country will be unsuccessful. Such disinterested devotion as you have exhibited and the results already accomplished by your unselfish work ought to be sufficient guarantee of the far reaching and beneficent results that must follow such a manifestation of Christian charity and good citizenship as would be apparent in a cordial and effective support of your endeavors.

I need not say how gratified I am to be able to indicate to you that such support is forthcoming. It will be seen by the letters which I inclose that already an offer has been made, through me, by a benevolent lady in a Western city to contribute $25,000 toward the endowment fund upon condition that other subscriptions to this object aggregate the amount required. With so good a beginning I cannot believe it possible that there will be a failure in securing the endowment which Tuskegee so much needs.

Dr. Washington in the course of his address, during which he outlined the benefits to the negro of industrial training, said that it had been agreed among the thoughtful negroes of the South, as well as among the negroes' friends both North and South, that this training in connection with religious and academic instruction was the basis of the solution of the negro problem. He said that largely through the influence of the aid that the North has given the South in the past thirty years there is now little opposition in the South to the negroes receiving any form of education.

"We can plant a school in any county of the South," he said, "and, while in some cases it may not receive the encouragement of the whites, it will not receive their opposition."

Another important result accomplished in the thirty years, Dr. Washington went on to say, is that of educating the Southern white man to the point where he believes in the education of the negro. Dr. Washington instanced the fact that just before he left Tuskegee he received $50 from a Southern white man in Mississippi for the education of a black boy.

This man, he said, had been a slaveholder, and at first was not inclined to encourage the education of the negro, but he wrote to Dr. Washington saying that he had reached that point where he believed Tuskegee was doing the work that the negro most needed to have done for him, and he wanted to show the North by his contribution that Southern white men were as deeply interested in the development of the negro as the Northern man. Another man, an Alabamian, had within the year contributed $1,000 for the same purpose.

The negro had now come to realize, Dr. Washington declared, that for his salvation he must go through the slow and patient process of evolution like other races. Dr. Washington closed by saying that the institute's most pressing need now is an endowment fund of at least $500,000. About one-fifth of this sum has already been raised. Mr. Baldwin and others spoke, and at the close of the meeting several subscriptions to the fund were handed in.

ASTORIA GAS SCHEME AGAIN.

The City to Fight Grants of Land Under Water—Conflict with State Board.

Within a short time the courts are to be called upon to determine the relative authority of the State Land Board and the Dock Department of this city in the disposal of lands under water within the boundaries of the City of New York. The anticipated litigation will derive additional interest from the fact that the applications for grants of lands which will be the basis of the action were made by the Astoria Light, Heat and Power Company. The applications in themselves are regarded as conclusive proof that the Astoria gas scheme, which occupied so large a share of the attention of the Legislature last Winter, is not dead by any means, and the attitude of the city authorities indicates that they are as thoroughly opposed to the company's plans as ever. Assistant Corporation Counsel Charles Blandy represents the Dock Department in the controversy, and Tracy, Boardman & Platt appear for the company.

The applications involved are three in number, two of which were made April 27 last and the third on May 29. They ask altogether for a grant of 14.92 acres of land under water in front of the Astoria Company's property on Berrian's Island. Appraisers appointed by the State Land Board have fixed the value of the property at $3,000, to be paid by the company to the State. The final hearing on the matter is to take place at Albany on Thursday, when it is expected the State Land Board will adopt a resolution overruling a protest which has been filed by the Dock Department, and providing for the issue of a patent to the lands. The city will then take the matter into the courts.

Ever since the passage of the Greater New York charter the Corporation Counsel's office has held to the opinion that it conferred jurisdiction over lands under water within the city limits upon the Dock Department, and

When the first application was made for a land grant under this section, the Dock Department sought to have a condition inserted in the patent providing that if the city should desire at any time to improve the water front at that point it should have power to take possession of the land without compensation to the owner under the grant from the State. The State Land Board held that this provision was unreasonable, and the patent was issued. Mr. Blandy took the matter into the courts. Supreme Court Justice Chester decided against the city, and his decision was affirmed by the Appellate Division in the Third Department, and later by the Court of Appeals.

In the matter of the application of the Astoria Light, Heat, and Power Company, the Dock Department has not sought to impose conditions, as in the case already decided adversely to the city, but rather to prohibit the grant altogether as detrimental to the city's interests.

A. B. Boardman of the firm of Tracy, Boardman & Platt declared yesterday that the Dock Department had no authority to prohibit a grant of land by the State Land Board.

IN WASHINGTON'S MEMORY.

Patriotic Societies to Observe the Centennial of His Death—The Ceremony at St. Paul's.

Nearly three thousand invitations will be sent by the General Society of the Cincinnati and the New York State Society of the Sons of the Revolution for the joint commemoration by the societies in old St. Paul's Church on Dec. 14, the hundredth anniversary of Washington's death. The invitations will be interesting souvenirs of the event, for they will be printed from an engraved plate upon parchment, and the seals of the two societies will be blended, the first time that these two seals have ever appeared in unison.

Among those invited will be Gov. Roosevelt, Mayor Van Wyck, Recorder Goff, Major Gen. Roe, Gen. Avery D. Andrews, John Alsop King, President of the New York Historical Society, and Henry G. Marquand, President of the Metropolitan Museum of Art.

The services will be held at noon. The members of the two societies will meet in the vestryroom and, wearing their badges, will march into the church. With them will be a delegation in uniform from the Military Society of the War of 1812.

The interior of the church will be decorated with flags and other patriotic banners. The details of the programme for the church services are not entirely complete, but the sermon or the Washington eulogy will be delivered by the Rev. Dr. Manclus Holmes Hutton of Rutgers College and the senior Chaplain General of the Cincinnati Society. The Rev. Dr. Morgan Dix, Chaplain of the Sons of the Revolution, will probably open the services with prayer. Invitations have also been extended to many other members of the New York clergy, and an interesting musical programme is being prepared.

This Washington service is in charge of a joint committee from both the Sons of the Revolution and the Cincinnati Society. From the former the committee consists of Frederick S. Tallmadge, President of the society; Frederick Clarkson, Surrogate James M. Varnum, John V. Clarkson, Frederick Gallatin, Philip Livingston, James M. Montgomery, Morris P. Ferris, William Gaston Hamilton, William I. Martin, Philip Schuyler, Louis Rutherford Morris, and J. William Beekman.

The committee from the Cincinnati Society consists of one member from each of the nine States in which there are State Cincinnati organizations. Talbot Olyphant, of this city and New York State Society, is Chairman of the entire committee, and the other members are, Fountain K. Lathrop, Massachusetts; Charles Isham, Connecticut; George W. Olney, Rhode Island; F. Walcott Jackson, New Jersey; Richard Dale, Pennsylvania; Heth Lorton, Virginia; H. R. Duval, Maryland; Alfred Dearing Hardeu, South Carolina, and District Attorney Asa Bird Gardiner, who is Secretary General of the Cincinnati Society, as ex-officio member.

The Cincinnati Society has a total membership of about 700 throughout the country. The membership of the New York State Society of the Sons of the Revolution is about 2,000. The latter organization is going to commemorate the centenary of Washington's death in every one of the thirty-one States where it is established.

The day will also be fittingly commemorated in every State by the George Washington Memorial Association, which, moreover, proposes a great tribute to Washington's goodness and wisdom in the fulfilment of his written wish that there might be established at Washington a National University for the higher education of the youth of the country. During his lifetime at his instance a site for the university was selected on the Potomac, at Washington, upon a knoll corresponding to the one upon which his monument now stands. No sustained effort has heretofore been made to carry out his great purpose, and the personal contribution which he intended to make, according to his will, has been well-nigh forgotten. The George Washington Memorial Association has claimed this heritage, adopted the idea, and means to give momentum to it by erecting a memorial building to cost about $250,000 to be devoted to the administrative work for the higher university education.

The association of which Mrs. Ellen A. Richardson is President has organized committees in nearly all the States of the Union, and these are making systematic efforts to secure sufficient funds. Several thousand dollars have already been subscribed. Especially good work is being done by the Popular Fund Division of the association of this city. At a recent afternoon tea given at the residence of Mrs. T. St. John Gaffney, on Riverside Drive, about $800 was raised.

In 1795 George Washington wrote:

"I have greatly wished to see a plan adopted by which the arts, sciences, and belles-lettres could be taught in their fullest extent, thereby embracing all the advantages of European tuition with the means of acquiring the liberal knowledge which is necessary to qualify our citizens for the exigencies of public as well as private life, and which with me is a consideration of great magnitude by assembling the youth from the different parts of this rising Republic, contributing from their intercourse an interchange of information to the removal of prejudices which might sometimes arise from local circumstances."

He justified his faith by works in bequeathing stocks to the value of $25,000 as a personal contribution toward his ideal "seminary of learning," and later in officially reserving a tract of nineteen acres (long known as "University Square") as a site for the institution. Succeeding Presidents John Adams, Thomas Jefferson, James Madison, and James Monroe, as well as others in later years, shared Washington's convictions, and urged upon Congress the desirability and expediency of founding a National university, and it would appear that nothing but inertia stood in the way of the realization of the dream of the Presidents.

FAIR TO AID CUBAN ORPHANS.

Will Be Held at the Waldorf—American Society's Work in Cuba.

A fair for the benefit of Cuban orphans will be held on Dec. 6 in the small ballroom of the Waldorf-Astoria. It will be under the management of the Cuban Orphan Society, an amalgamation of the Trustees of the Cuban Orphan Fund and the Woman's Auxiliary, which were organized immediately after the conclusion of peace with Spain for the purpose of aiding the "helpless victims of Spanish cruelty and misrule."

Contributions of money or salable articles are solicited for the fair. They may be forwarded to Mrs. Lena P. Cowdin, 15 West Eleventh Street. Among those who have undertaken to participate in the sale by caring for tables on which the goods are displayed are Mrs. Douglass Robinson, Jr., Mrs. W. Bramman, Mrs. H. F. Osborn, Mrs. W. H. Draper, Mrs. James Benkard, Miss C. S. Leverich, Mrs. W. B. Beekman, Mrs. M. H. Willard, and Mrs. J. Le Baron Johnson. The doors will be open from 11 A. M. to 7 P. M.

The society has issued a circular, in which it is stated that the subscriptions they have received within the past six months in New York, Pittsburg, and Providence have amounted to about $33,600. With this twelve American women have been sent to Cuba, all of them trained teachers, under the supervision of Miss Laura D. Gill. A children's home, recently established in Remedios, is now prepared to feed, clothe, and educate 400 children; classes in agricultural training and a kindergarten have been instituted in Santa Maria del Rosario; material aid has been afforded to the native asylums and hospitals of Cienfuegos and Remedios, and young Cuban women are being trained for teachers in Havana and Cienfuegos.

Better Brakes a Necessity.

From The Electrical Review.

It is curious that electric railway managers, who have so practically stimulated invention in all directions concerned with starting cars and keeping them moving, have done so little for the equally necessary devices used in stopping them. Compare the controller of a modern electric car with the ancient hand brake, which is to-day just the same as that used by the late George Stephenson in the memorable trials of the Rocket in England some two-thirds of a century ago. There is no need to call the attention of any observing man to the growing necessity for better brake systems on the large and heavy cars, from which the exigencies of transit requirements in American cities demand high speeds. The most elaborate mechanism of highly perfected operation is used to start the car and keep it running, but when it is to be stopped recourse is had to a most inefficient, slow-acting, and unsatisfactory means. The hand brake on the modern street car is not only an anachronism—it is a danger.

AMATEUR BILLIARD TOURNEY.

W. W. Kellogg, the Chicago expert, won the first game in the second amateur billiard tournament for the championship of Class B at the Manhattan Athletic Club last night. His opponent was Florian Tobias of this city, and the score at the finish, after sixty-eight innings, stood 300 for the Westerner and 195 for Tobias. Neither man played in true form. Kellogg made a few good runs, but the strange surroundings were evidently too great a handicap. Tobias's game was never better than mediocre, and his work throughout was most uneven.

After five minutes' intermission J. De Mun Smith of St. Louis crossed cues with John A. Hendrick, the New Haven crackajack, thus making both of the opening games duels between the East and West. About 500 spectators watched the contests, which were under the personal supervision of Dr. Ranney, Secretary of the Billiard Committee of the Amateur Athletic Union.

The following ten players are entered in the tourney: J. De Mun Smith, St. Louis; W. W. Kellogg, Chicago; George E. Hevner, Philadelphia; Albert G. Cutler, Boston; Charles Threshie, Boston; John A. Hendrick, New Haven; Dr. A. B. Miller, New York; Dr. Walter G. Douglass, New York; Florian Tobias, New York, and L. A. Servatius, New York.

Of these men the most prominent in the public eye is Servatius, who won the last handicap amateur tournament less than two weeks ago, defeating the best amateurs in the city on even terms, although allowed a handicap.

In the opening game between Kellogg and Tobias the latter won the bank, and, selecting the spot ball, ran ten points. The balls were left in a poor position and the Chicago expert drew a blank. Tobias rolled up eleven in his next inning, and had a lead of twenty-five before the Western crack scored at all. When he did get the ivories together, however, he seemed to hypnotize the balls, and in two innings assumed the lead, which position he never afterward lost. In the eleventh inning he rolled up twenty-two, and ran twenty-eight in the twenty-first inning. At the end of his thirty-first inning Tobias left two balls frozen on the rail and called to have them spotted, after which he ran thirty-one, the highest of the game.

The score:

Kellogg—0 0 0 0 6 2 1 0 3 1 1 22 10 5 0 1 10 20 4 8 0 28 18 9 7 0 2 1 31 0 2 1 0 9 2 9 1 1 8 0 14 1 1 1 0 2 0 0 8 0 1 3 2 0 5 0 2 0 2 0 1 4 2 1 2 1 0 2 4. Total, 300. Average, 4 28-68. Highest runs, 31, 28, 22, 21.

Referee—Wilson P. Foss.

At 12:30 this morning the second game was unfinished. At the end of the fifty-sixth inning Smith of St. Louis had scored 228 points and Hendrick, the New Haven expert, had 201 points.

POGGENBURG DEFEATS MULDAUR.

Ferdinand Poggenburg defeated Mark H. Muldaur in the second series of the intercity and inter-club amateur billiard tournament at Maurice Daly's Academy last night.

The tournament is being conducted under the rules of the National Association of Amateur Billiard Players, adopted on Nov. 8.

Poggenburg, who is a scratch man, had to score 300 points before his opponent made 220, and he found no difficulty in conceding this handicap. The playing was not up to the players' usual standard. Poggenburg, who in the previous tournament made a general average of more than 7, had all he could do to make 5, 5, 59, while Muldaur made but 3, 7, 58.

Both men played well at the start, Muldaur making 11 in his first inning to Poggenburg's 8. In their second effort Muldaur netted 5 and Poggenburg 2. The latter then made his best run of the game, 38. This break was a beautiful exhibition of open table play. He continued his good work in the next inning, and with a run of 10 followed by another of 36 rapidly drew away from his opponent.

The score:

Poggenburg, (300)—8 2 38 0 10 36 1 4 0 5 7 4 0 0 2 0 2 17 1 0 8 2 12 1 1 0 1 8 1 12 2 0 7 4 0 19 0 1 1 0 5 2 1 17 3 0 0 7 1 3 0 8 1 3 1 20 2 13. Total, 300. Average, 5 5-68. High runs, 38, 36, 20.

Two games will be played to-day. Stark and Arnold will play in the afternoon and Keeney and Townsend in the evening.

CITIES COMMITTEE HEAD.

Rural Representative Practically Certain to Have Chairmanship—Mr. Odell on "Hayseeds."

It is regarded as practically certain that the Chairmanship of the Cities Committee in the next Assembly will go to a representative from one of the rural districts. This is the present intention of the Republican State leaders, and unless something happens between now and the time for the convening of the Legislature, in January, the present programme will be carried out. The coming conference between Gov. Roosevelt, Senator Platt, and Chairman Odell may develop a new situation. Mr. Odell makes no secret of the fact that the present plans of the State leaders are subject to change. In former years legislative committees have been made up and changed within a few hours of the assembling of the Legislature.

Chairman Odell went to Washington last night to have a talk with Senator Platt. Before leaving he confirmed the report that the Cities Committee would be headed by some man from up the State.

"Nobody down here wants it," said he, "and there are good reasons for giving it to a man from a rural district. There is nothing in the argument that a rural man should not have the Chairmanship of the Cities Committee because country Assemblymen are prejudiced against cities. I think many countrymen would do better for the cities than a city man. The 'hayseeds,' as all the people living above the Bronx are called, are not prejudiced against New York, and a 'hayseed' Chairman of the Cities Committee would treat New York fairly."

Mr. Odell's remarks were construed by those at headquarters to mean that Merton E. Lewis, who represents one of the Monroe County districts, is out of the race. After the declination of Edward H. Fallows of this city to take the place it was generally thought that the prize would go to Mr. Lewis. It is now thought that the Chairmanship of the Committee on Taxation and Retrenchment will go to Mr. Lewis. Reports say that Gov. Roosevelt regards Mr. Lewis as an expert in tax matters and will urge his selection for the place, as much important tax legislation is expected at Albany during the coming session.

Nothing could induce Chairman Odell to say who would be named as Chairman of the Cities Committee. Among the names heard in connection with the place were those of Assemblyman Costello of Oswego, Assemblyman

ELECTION IN PUERTO RICO

Voting Has Been Going On for Weeks and Is Not Yet Ended.

TWO PARTIES IN THE RACE

Fight Between the Federals and Republicans Is So Far an Even One —Suffrage Is Restricted.

SAN JUAN, Puerto Rico, Nov. 29.—Local interest in Puerto Rico is just now centred on the elections. The two parties, the Republicans and Federals, are striving for supremacy. The fight is an even one, and it will be a case of the best winning. The result will go a great way toward determining how soon Puerto Rico will be given civil government. Elections are to be held in sixty-nine towns.

At the present writing nine towns have had their elections, dating from Oct. 28. The Federals were victorious in five of these. At this rate the Puerto Rican elections will be continued two months more. Up to date, elections have been held in but one town at a time. The votes have been cast and the election decided before the proceedings were taken up in the next town. As a consequence, considerable time has been lost, and it is not at all unlikely that orders will shortly be issued allowing the elections to be held in several towns at the same time.

They are all municipal elections, and are for the purpose of choosing the following officers in the various towns: One Alcalde, or Mayor; one Municipal Judge, one Suplente, or Vice Judge; five School Trustees, and the members of the Town Council.

All elections are held under the general direction of army officers designated by Gen. Davis. One each of such officers presides at each election. It is the duty of the army officer in charge to call the contending parties in convention to nominate their candidates. The parties are requested to select the names of two persons and alternates whom they desire to represent them on the Registration Board, and also to name a person and alternate for each voting place in the municipality. The officer in charge designates one voting place for each 200 legally registered voters. In the event of the parties failing to make nominations, the officer selects the candidates from those who compose the first two-thirds of those qualified to hold office.

Those eligible for office are limited to the taxpayers, who are included in the first two-thirds of the toal number of taxpayers who are qualified to vote, in the order of the amount of taxes paid. Any taxpayer whose name falls within the one-third remaining and who pays taxes in an amount equal to the smallest paid by any person in the two-thirds class, is eligible to hold public office. Members of the liberal professions are also eligible, namely: Lawyers, physicians, pharmacists, surgeons, dentists, professors of schools, priests and ministers, civil and electrical engineers, and those having a degree in the arts or sciences.

An elector, to vote, must possess the following qualifications: He must be a bona fide male resident of the municipality, over twenty-one years of age on date of election; must be a taxpayer of record in the municipality in which he votes at the date of the order, or he must be able to read and write. Persons who pay insular or municipal taxes of any kind in their own right or name, or in the name of their lawful wife or minor child, or the members of a firm, corporation, or copartnership, paying taxes, and the heirs of an estate that pays taxes, are deemed taxpayers under the meaning of this clause. But administrators, guardians, trustees, agents, or other persons who pay taxes for others than themselves or their lawful family are not taxpayers within its meaning through such payment.

Further than this the voter must have resided in Puerto Rico for two years next preceding the date of his registration, and for the last six months of the two years within the municipality where the election is held. Provided, that any bona-fide resident who has been absent from Puerto Rico during any part of the period of two years, and who has not acquired citizenship elsewhere, shall be considered as a resident within the meaning of the order.

Citizens or subjects of foreign countries possessing the foregoing qualifications will be permitted to vote at municipal elections, provided they have resided in Puerto Rico for five years next preceding the date of election, and for the last six months of said period within the municipality where the election is held; and provided, further, that they shall have made renunciation under oath of their foreign nationality, said oath being administered by the Municipal Judge, or an army officer, and said renunciation to be accompanied by a declaration of intention to become citizens of the United States.

Printed blank forms for this purpose will be prepared and furnished free of charge to Municipal Judges by the Civil Secretary. The declaration will be executed in duplicate, one copy forwarded by the Municipal Judge or army officer to the Civil Secretary for file, and the other will be retained by the person making the oath. Municipal Judges are authorized to collect a fee of 25 cents, American currency, for the performance of this duty.

No person who has been convicted of a felony within five years next preceding the day of election is eligible to office.

Boards of Supervisors, one board for each polling place, to superintend the balloting, and consisting of one army officer, as President, and one member each of the political parties whose candidates' names are on the official ballots, are appointed by the officer in charge. Each civilian member of these boards is required to take oath for the faithful discharge of his duties. The army officer has no vote except to determine a tie. The Australian ballot system is to be used.

The persons elected are to hold office until Nov. 1, 1900, or until their successors are duly elected and qualified.

The Federal Party, which is composed of the island's better element, is the outgrowth of the old Liberal Party which was organized in 1887. The Federals claim that it was through their influence that autonomy was granted to Puerto Rico by Spain in 1897. They have enrolled in their ranks the majority of the merchants, land holders, plantation owners, and the higher educated and broad-minded element of the island. This party demands a civil government for Puerto Rico, with Luis Munoz Rivera, their leader, as Governor, and with "Puertorriqueños" at the head of all the departments. The military must be done away with entirely.

The Republican Party is a later organization. Although it has been in existence only five months, it has accomplished wonders in pushing itself to the front, under the able management of Dr. Basbosa, who is considered to be one of the best native physicians on the island. The Republicans are composed mostly of the laboring class, and consequently, the colored element predominates. At the same time, many of the most influential business men are among its members. The Republican Party endeavors to stand by the Administration, and by so doing hopes to further its cause.

The platforms of the two parties, which have been published, seem to differ only in minor detail, so it would seem that the elections simply decide personal political differences.

The Federal Party in its platform applauds the fact of annexation to the United States and advocates an absolute identity with the United States in laws and form of government. It demands to become an integral part of the United States, with Territorial representation in Congress at the present and full and unrestricted State representation in the future.

The platform urges the right of franchise for all citizens and absolute free trade between the island and the United States; the establishment of schools and universities for the education of both men and women; a revision of the judicial system, and the establishment of trial by jury. In conclusion it states:

"The Federal Party affirms its faith in the tradition and character of the American people, and it trusts to it, as well as to the efforts of the people of this island, for making of Puerto Rico an emporium of wealth and culture, over which may forever wave the Stars and Stripes."

The preamble of the platform of the Republican Party indorses and commends "the able, patriotic, and true American spirit manifested by William McKinley, President of the United States, in releasing us from the misrule of Spain," and expresses the hope of a speedy settlement of National affairs. This party also takes pride in the fact of annexation, pledges itself to conform to the laws of the United States, and asks for an opportunity to demonstrate its fitness to govern itself.

The platform asks for free suffrage, declares the devotion of the party to liberty of speech and press and opposes any union of Church and State. It is hostile to the introduction of foreign contract labor, but favors the establishment of free, non-sectarian schools in which the English language shall be taught. It asks for a revision of the laws of taxation and for a judiciary like that of the United States.

The elections already held have passed off with comparative quiet. One or two riots have occurred, and, in one case, revolvers were drawn and a man was shot.

A general order has recently been issued prohibiting all riotous demonstrations. It is also announced that blasphemous abuse will not be tolerated. It has been the custom of the people to parade the streets in disorderly crowds, crying, "Down with the Federals!" "Death to the Republicans!" and using vile names in referring to party leaders. It is the intention of the commanding General to put a stop to all such proceedings.

Puerto Rican Exports and Imports.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 4.—The War Department made public to-day a statement of exports and imports at the five principal ports of Puerto Rico for the months of May, June, and July, 1899. The report shows a slight balance of trade in favor of these ports of $347,882. The total of imports into the ports named for the three months is $2,572,618. The exports during the same period were $2,920,500. LONG PRAISES NAVAL CADETS.

He Says the Football Team Made a Gallant, If Unsuccessful, Fight.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 4.—Secretary Long's opinion of the football game between the Annapolis and West Point Cadets at Philadelphia last Saturday is embodied in a personal letter which he to-day addressed to Rear Admiral F. V. McNair, Superintendent of the Naval Academy, in which he said:

"I hope you will say for me to the football team that while they did not win, they made a gallant fight, and that it was especially gratifying to the department; that certainly so far as my observation went and so far as I have heard from others, nothing could have been manlier or handsomer or in better spirit than the way in which the two teams made their fight, and that the absence of any brutal, unbecoming or ungentlemanly conduct was especially noteworthy.

"Tell them that the department does not forget that they are just as brave, just as manly, just as faithful to their duty, and have given just the same assurance that in whatever emergency they are placed they will do everything in their power as if they had won the game on Saturday."

Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railway Company
FIRST MORTGAGE EXTENSION
FIFTY YEAR FIVE PER CENT. GOLD BONDS
PRINCIPAL DUE 1944.

Interest payable May 1st and Nov. 1st.

These bonds are the only direct obligation of the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railway Company except the 4% Bonds of 1890. They are a first mortgage on important sections of the Company in Missouri and Kansas, and at the rate of only $20,000 per mile, or at a less rate per mile than the 4% Bonds upon the other portions of the line, and while apparently as well secured, are offered at prices which yield 1% more of income. These Bonds are as well secured, it is believed, as the Missouri, Kansas and Eastern 5s of this System, which sell at 105, while these are at a less rate per mile than the direct obligation of the Company.

The condition of the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railway Company is believed to be better than ever before. The Company has no floating debt. By reason of heavy expenses in the past, which have brought the road into good physical condition, a favorable rate of operating expenses is expected in the future.

The surplus of the Company for the year ending June 30, 1899, after deducting interest on bonds and rentals and all charges, was $584,683. The gross earnings for the first three months of the current fiscal year show increase, as follows:

These bonds are listed on the New York Stock Exchange. WE OFFER BONDS OF THIS ISSUE SUBJECT TO PRIOR SALE AND ADVANCE IN PRICE AT 95 AND ACCRUED INTEREST.

PHILADELPHIA PRICES.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 4.—Pennsylvania Steel shares again furnished the feature in the market to-day. There was more good buying, and in consequence an advance in the common to 90 and in the preferred to 99. Marsden also was strong. American Asphalt moved in unison with Marsden, and Electric of America was not far behind. The steel stocks were neglected and heavy. Fairmount Park Transportation declined 2 points to 21½. Gregor Manufacturing was in good demand at 40½. In the afternoon the market yielded in sympathy with New York, United Gas declining 1¾. Electric Storage 2, and the others fractionally.

OUTSIDE SECURITIES.

Influenced by the same conditions that affected the Stock Exchange market yesterday, the market for outside securities was irregular throughout the day and weak at the close. A number of issues ended the day with net losses, among which were some of several points. A few stocks were strong and showed substantial advances, but these were much in the minority. High rates for money are always a very unfavorable element in curb market conditions, and sufficient ease has not yet been established to remove all apprehension as to the immediate future. Trading was active only in a very few issues, the most notable of which were Storage Power and Distilling of America. Other issues were entirely neglected or traded in only to the extent of a few hundred shares.

STORAGE POWER was strong from the opening, and led the list in strength as well as activity. A few reactions occurred in the stock during the day, but the upward tendency was marked, and at the close quotations showed a net gain of 2 points. Highest sales were made at 40⅞, and it closed at 10⅝ bid. Many orders in the stock appeared in the market, and transactions amounted to a number of thousands of shares. Friends of the stock attribute the last few days' advance to buying by insiders in anticipation of the announcement of important developments that are under way, and which will, it is said, prove of substantial advantage to the company.

DISTILLING OF AMERICA was traded in to the extent of several thousand shares, most of which was of the common stock. This issue was under pressure, and a good deal of stock appeared, but it was fairly well taken, and closing quotations showed a net loss of only one-quarter of a point. Opening at 9⅞, it sold down to 9½ and closed at 9¼ bid. Sales of the preferred stock were made as low as 32½, and the final bid for this issue was 32, a loss of 1 point from Saturday's final bid. Most of the common stock sold at the lower figures, one lot of 1,000 shares changing hands at 9½.

AMALGAMATED COPPER was firm early in the day, and little stock was offered. But not much stock was wanted, and after the bids of 58⅛, made for a few hundred shares, were supplied the bid fell below 58, and it ended the day with a fractional net loss at 85⅜ bid. Other copper stocks were traded in to even a less extent than Amalgamated Copper, and they also were weak at the close.

GENERAL CARRIAGE attracted much attention by advancing from 65 to 135. Only 100 shares changed hands on this advance. Manipulation seemed the only explanation of this remarkable rise.

ELECTRIC AXLE opened strong, but declined later with the rest of the market. First sales were made at 6¾, and the last sales at 6¼. Final bids were 6¼, and these showed a slight advance for the day. It is understood that important developments are under way in the affairs of the Electric Axle Company, and yesterday's early buying of the stock was said to be in anticipation of the announcement of the progress being made in the company's business.

STANDARD OIL was traded in to the extent of about 100 shares. It closed unchanged at 466 bid, although early sales were made substantially above this price.

BUFFALO GAS bonds sold down to 73, and closed at 69 bid.

COTTON.—As compared with the recent lively fluctuations and active speculation, yesterday's market was an uninteresting affair. Neither side seemed disposed to take the initiative, while the outside public hesitated as a general thing, if anything, being disposed to withdraw pending new conditions upon which to found fresh conclusions. The market opened steady in tone with prices 1 point lower to 5 points higher. Radical bulls attempted to bring about a more decided advance at the start, but soon desisted, the cable news from Liverpool proving to be too great an obstacle and the movement in the South larger than generally expected. As reported by special dispatches spot cotton in the South, middling quoted, was as follows: New Orleans, 7½c; Mobile, 7⅞c; Savannah, 7 5-16c; Charleston, 7¼c; Wilmington, 7¼c; Norfolk, 7¼c; Baltimore, 7¾c; Memphis,

MOLINEUX TRIAL OPENED

People's Case Outlined to the Jury by Mr. Osborne.

DEATH OF BARNET DESCRIBED

The trial of Roland Burnham Molineux for the murder by poison of Katherine J. Adams on Dec. 28, 1898, began in earnest yesterday in the Court of General Sessions before Recorder Goff and a jury that it had taken three weeks to choose. The theatre of the trial is the largest of the four rooms of the Court of General Sessions. Like the rest of the courtrooms, its acoustics are bad and its means of ventilation worse. In the early morning it is cold, and late in the afternoon its temperature is like that of the hot room of a Turkish bath. Windows cannot be opened without exposing some one to direct draught, and so the Court, the jury, the lawyers, and the witnesses swelter or shiver according to the time of day.

Most of the persons directly interested were in court early. There were Messrs. Weeks and Battle, the attorneys for the defense; Gen. Molineux, Assistant District Attorneys O'Connor and Collins, Chief of Detectives McClusky, experts in handwriting and pathology, chemists, newspaper men, and a few favored spectators, among whom there was but one woman. Only Molineux, Assistant District Attorney Osborne, who has charge of the prosecution, and the Recorder were absent. At 10:35 the Recorder arrived, and as soon as he was seated on the bench the crier called "Roland B. Molineux to the bar."

There was a bustle, with a craning of necks, as a door opened in the rear of the courtroom, and through the aisle with springy step came the trim, youthful figure of the defendant. His customary smile broadened as he came up the aisle and noticed the interest which his entry created. Before taking his seat between his counsel and his father he shook hands with the attorneys, with his father, with Handwriting Expert Carvalho, and with Dr. Allan McLane Hamilton, who is associated with the defense. Then he sat down, and throughout the day he seemed, as usual, the least interested person in the courtroom.

THE INDICTMENT READ.

Assistant District Attorney Osborne came in a moment later, and the trial was then opened with an innovation that tested the composure of the prisoner. Mr. Weeks asked that the indictment be read to the jury. Mr. Osborne did not object, and the Recorder said that while this was unusual in this country, he would allow it, but that according to the old custom the prisoner must stand during the reading. The clerk read the document with as much feeling as can be thrown into legal tautology. There are six counts in the indictment, and to the lay ear one sounded just the same as the others. For half an hour the prisoner stood and listened to the accusation of the Grand Jury. During the reading of the first count, when the clerk reached the words, "She, the said Katherine J. Adams, then and there became mortally sick and distempered in her body," Molineux's hand went to his mouth in an attempt to mask a smile. He coughed several times and then seemed to pull himself together, resolved not to let his sense of humor control him.

At the conclusion of the reading Mr. Weeks made the usual motions to dismiss the indictment and that the District Attorney elect on which count to proceed to trial. Both were denied, and at 11:10 Mr. Osborne began his address to the jury.

Molineux followed the words of the prosecuting attorney closely, but the smile never left his face. Mr. Osborne began by telling the jury in a few words how a package containing poison had been sent to Harry Cornish at the Knickerbocker Athletic Club, and how Cornish had given that poison—cyanide of mercury—to Mrs. Adams. A number of times during the opening address Mr. Weeks interrupted with objections to Mr. Osborne's statements, but only once was his action of any avail. When Mr. Osborne attempted to erect a blackboard to show some peculiarities of handwriting, the Court ruled with Mr. Weeks that there was no necessity for it, and that the prosecutor must make his meaning clear through oral demonstration.

Mr. Osborne went at great length into the sending of the poison and pictured to the jury the inner workings of the sender's mind at the time. The sender, he said, had worked the scheme all out so that he was satisfied that no human being could trace it back to him.

"And he cared not who took it," said Mr. Osborne. "He sent it to the adversary and did not even give him the rattlesnake's chance of striking. Poisoning is a scientific business, gentlemen of the jury, and is becoming more and more so as years go by. From the history of the earliest known and recorded cases, the mistakes of one poisoner have been improved upon by those following."

THE QUESTION OF MOTIVE.

The question of motive was touched upon. "You must not look for a man with an all-consuming hatred for Cornish," said Mr. Osborne, "but for a man whose hatred for Cornish is strong and never ceasing—one that lasts all a man's life."

Mr. Osborne said the things the prosecution would attempt to prove were that Mrs. Kate J. Adams and Henry C. Barnet both died from the effects of the same poison sent through the mails. He said he would first establish beyond any reasonable doubt a motive for the person who sent the poison, and that the motive was a desire to rid himself of an adversary against whom the sender had a deep and lasting hatred.

"But," he added, "you will not be compelled to convict or return any verdict on such evidence. For the prisoner has dropped more than one stitch in the proceedings—he has dropped a whole spool of thread—and the case, which seemed at the outset most complicated, is at the present time the simplest case I ever participated in as counsel."

The greatest blow which the defense received was the refusal of the Recorder to instruct Mr. Osborne not to refer to the Barnet case. Mr. Weeks objected strenuously to this line of argument. He pointed out that the first indictment against Molineux had been dismissed by Justice Williams on account of the illegality of evidence touching the Barnet case, but Recorder Goff said that he could not tell in advance what the evidence would be, and allowed Mr. Osborne to get before the jury all the facts connected with Barnet's death. Mr. Weeks attempted to speak again on this point, but the Recorder shut him off short with the remark:

"We may as well understand now that when I rule I rule, and no further argument is necessary." There was no mistaking the tone in which this was delivered, and Mr. Weeks was silenced.

Mr. Osborne said he would produce a man who not only hated Cornish, but who hated Barnet as well. He referred to peculiarities in handwriting which, he said, were noticeable in all the samples he would introduce. When he referred to the letters written to certain patent medicine firms asking for samples, he said that the poisoner had given in one of them an accurate description of himself, in that he had said he was afflicted with a certain nervous trouble; that he contemplated matrimony; that he was thirty-one years old; that there had been consumption in his family, and that he measured 37 inches around the chest and 31 inches around the waist. This, he said, was Roland B. Molineux.

POINTS IN THE EVIDENCE.

Molineux, he said, was also the man who hated Cornish and Barnet; he could have in his possession, without question, quantities of cyanide of mercury; he used the kind of paper on which the requests for patent medicine samples were written; he knew that Hartigan & Co. of Newark sold silverware like the bottle holder; he spent part of his time in Newark and part in New York; he had hired the letter boxes; "and finally," said Mr. Osborne, "he is the only human being on earth who exactly fits every one of the requirements necessary to a complete identification."

The first direct reference to Molineux's marriage was made by Mr. Osborne almost at the close of his address. "Everything tends to show," he said, "that Roland B. Molineux liked and loved a woman. Here was a man, apparently, whose whole idea seemed to dwell upon women, who wrote for marriage guides, who contemplated matrimony, who constantly wrote for remedies. Suppose he should fear there should come a break between himself and this woman. Suppose he should go to her and plead with her for a speedy marriage. Suppose there should come along a strong and healthy man, good-looking and athletic, who was beginning to pay this woman marked attention. And suppose the man who wrote those letters and this woman should suddenly marry. What would you say to that? What would you think?

Continuing and speaking rapidly, Mr. Osborne declared that the man who could be at the New York General Post Office at 5 o'clock in the evening to mail letters, who wrote with such strong and invariable characteristics as he had described, who rented the letter box at 1,620 Broadway, who lived at the Knickerbocker Athletic Club, and who wrote the letters signed "H. C. Barnet" and "H. Cornish" was the prisoner at the bar.

Mr. Osborne spoke for three hours and a half, and at his request the Recorder adjourned court at the conclusion of the opening address. The taking of testimony will begin to-day at 10:30.

The action of the Recorder in excluding curious persons from the courtroom led to the making of a motion before Justice Beach in the Supreme Court yesterday, wherein a lawyer asked for a writ of mandamus to compel the Recorder to admit him to the court, claiming that the trial of Molineux would be null and void unless the public was excluded for sufficient cause. Justice Beach promptly denied the motion.

WORK FOR SUNDAY OBSERVANCE.

The Rev. Dr. W. S. Hubbell, Secretary of the New York Sabbath Committee, and the Rev. Dr. R. R. Meredith, pastor of the Tompkins Avenue Congregational Church, Brooklyn, spoke at the fifth annual meeting yesterday of the Woman's National Sabbath Alliance, in the chapel of the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church. Dr. Hubbell reviewed the work done by the Sabbath Committee toward preventing the sale of merchandise on Sunday and the closing of Sunday theatres. He advised the introduction of a bill prohibiting the opening of fairs on Sunday, with special reference to the coming Pan-American Exposition.

Dr. Meredith, after referring to the scenes of Sunday desecration he had witnessed at Coney Island, declared that 500 men whom he could name would be able to stop them. He traced the lack of Sunday observance to the neglect of religious training in the home.

Dr. Meredith touched on the subject of the Sunday newspapers.

"A man has body, intellect, and spirit," he said. "His body calls him to lie in bed late on Sunday morning, but his intellect calls upon him to rise and exercise his mind. Yet he may not take up his time with reading the papers, for his spirit calls him to worship."

The auxiliaries reported their progress during the year. The annual reports showed a membership of 805, an increase over last year of 120. The receipts for the year were $1,507.11 and the expenses $1,459.

The old Board of Directors was re-elected, with the exception of Mrs. P. C. Lounsbury, who was succeeded by Mrs. Stephen Smith. Miss St. Clair was made an honorary Director.

Mrs. Darwin R. James was re-elected President. The other officers re-elected were: Vice Presidents—Mrs. A. Alexander, Mrs. D. J. Burrell, Mrs. Horace Green, Miss E. S. Hamilton, Mrs. William M. Isaacs, Miss S. R. Kendall, Mrs. Madeleine S. Rogers, and Mrs. Theodore Weston; Treasurer—Mrs. Frank R. Van Nest; Recording Secretary—Miss Matilda Kay. Miss Isabella M. Territt was elected Corresponding Secretary, and also Field Secretary pro tem.

Mazet Hearing at Astor House.

The Mazet committee will resume its sessions at 10:30 o'clock to-morrow morning in Parlor 74 at the Astor House. These quarters were secured only after considerable search for accommodation in some public building. Mr. Moss said the committee would probably be in active operation until Jan. 1.

LEGAL NOTES.

WILL NOT SUBSCRIBED AT THE END.—The will of Isabella Andrews, offered for probate in the Surrogate's Court of Kings County, was written upon a blank or printed form, consisting of a single sheet of paper folded in the middle so as to make four pages. At the top of the first page was the printed introduction, following which were several dispository provisions, the page being complete in itself. The reverse side of the first page was headed "third page," and contained the clause appointing executors, the testimonium clause, and the attestation clause, all of which were printed and had been properly filled up. The page at the right of this last-mentioned page was headed "second page," and contained the continuation of the dispository provisions, wholly in writing, which extended to the end of the page. The Second Appellate Division, by a divided court, has affirmed the decision of the Surrogate denying probate to the will. The court holds, by Justice Cullen, that the will was not entitled to be admitted to probate because not subscribed by the testator at the end of it, as required by the statute. Justice Cullen says that were it not for decisions in like cases in the Court of Appeals, they would hold the will to be good; but entirely against their first impressions, and solely under the stress of authority, they hold that the decision of the Surrogate was correct. Presiding Justice Goodrich, in a dissenting opinion, concurred in by Justice Woodward, said that to hold that the will was not actually signed at its end, when the page on which the signature appeared was marked "third page," and was preceded by another page, marked "second page," was to defeat the will of the testator. "The highest duty of courts," the Presiding Justice said, "is to ascertain what is just, and many cases may be found where, having ascertained this, the courts have bent their energies to the doing of exact justice, even where a technical reading of a statute might prevent it."

HUSBAND AND WIFE.—Catherine Mooney in 1887 obtained a decree of limited divorce from her husband, James Mooney, with an allowance of $80 a month alimony. After a few years the husband stopped making regular payments, so that in 1894 he was in default several hundred dollars. Payment of the arrears was enforced through Mrs. Mooney's attorney, and application by the husband for a reduction of the amount of the alimony was successfully resisted, and subsequent payment was enforced by the same attorney. Then Mr. Mooney mortgaged his property to the Citizens' Savings Bank, and a subsequent sale of the property on foreclosure by the bank, in June, 1898, resulted in a surplus of $11,150. One-third of this sum was, in proceedings by this attorney, directed to be deposited with the City Chamberlain to secure Mrs. Mooney's right of dower. The Chamberlain was to keep the money invested during the joint lives of husband and wife, the income, after the husband's death, to be paid to the wife during her life. There was also retained $4,000 as security for payment of alimony. Though the feelings of husband and wife toward each other were then very bitter, Mrs. Mooney recently executed a relinquishment of her claim to the moneys so retained, and consented that the order made in the matter be vacated. Mrs. Mooney's attorney objected, claiming he had a lien upon the fund for his services. Justice Scott yesterday granted the application to vacate the orders, holding that the Court had no power to enforce the attorney's application by summary process, and, even if the attorney has a right of action, that did not imply a lien upon this fund, which would require its further retention in the hands of the Chamberlain.

EXCAVATION OF LAND UNDER WATER.—William M. Tebo, an owner of land under the waters of New York Bay, at Twenty-fourth Street, in the Borough of Brooklyn, in constructing a dry dock upon it, excavated such land and adjoining land belonging to the State of New York, without having a license from the latter, to a depth of twenty-six feet, which far exceeded the natural depth of water at that place. The excavation caused the collapse of a wharf owned by Alexander M. White, standing on land adjoining that of the State, which wharf did not increase the pressure upon the excavating owner's soil. In a suit by Mr. White to recover damages for injury to his wharf, a judgment in his favor against Mr. Tebo, in the Kings County Special Term, has been affirmed by the Second Appellate Division. The Court holds, in an opinion by Justice Cullen, that the excavating owner was liable to the owner of the wharf for the injury to that structure.

Election of Church Trustees.

The congregation of the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church yesterday afternoon elected Francis Forbes a member of the Board of Trustees, to fill the unexpired term of the late Robert Bonner. Charles P. Britton, William C. McGibbon, and Alfred Vondermuhll were elected Trustees for a term of three years, to succeed John W. Auchincloss, Robert W. Stuart, and George F. Vietor, who retire Dec. 15.

FOREIGN.—Late accounts of the battle of Modder River show that the Boers' rifle fire was the most murderous in history and will probably revolutionize present theories of warfare. CONGRESS.—The House yesterday heard the message of the President, and immediately took up the resolution offered by Tayler of Ohio in the Roberts matter. A substitute was offered, but was lost on a vote. After extended argument by Tayler, Roberts, and others, the Tayler resolution was carried by a vote of 302 to 30. Speaker Henderson thereupon appointed a committee of nine to pass on the eligibility of Roberts. As a mark of respect to the memory of Congressman Settle, (Ky.,) the House adjourned at 6:25 o'clock. Over 800 bills and 30 resolutions were introduced yesterday. The session of the Senate was devoted to the reading of the President's message, and an adjournment was taken upon the announcement of the death of Senator Hayward.—Pages 1 and 6.

ANTI-BUCKET SHOP COMBINE.

Commercial Exchanges Throughout the Country to Work Together.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Dec. 5.—A concerted movement will be made by commercial exchanges all over the country against the vicious bucket shop system. The Chicago Board of Trade has taken the initiative. Secretary George Stone has circulated copies of a resolution adopted by the Directory calling upon the exchanges of the country to combine against the encroachments of this form of speculation. A number of replies have been received, and each indicates that the feeling against the bucket shops is as strong in other large cities of the country as it is in Chicago.

The purpose of the anti-bucket shop crusaders is to strike at the bottom of the whole business by securing the aid of the New York Stock Exchange and the Cotton Exchange, which, in conjunction with the Chicago Board of Trade, form the basis of nearly all the bucket shop operations in the country.

Communications for the purpose of securing a joint attack upon the bucket shop system have been forward to nearly all the leading commercial organizations of the country. No convention city has been designated. If all the replies are favorable, as they promise to be, a committee will be appointed here to work out the preliminary plans with the other leading exchanges.

ROBERTS'S FATE IN COMMITTEE'S HANDS

Speaker Names Nine Members to Pass on Eligibility.

TAYLER RESOLUTION PASSED

Vote Stood 302 to 30 Against the Claimant from Utah.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 5.—The House today, by a vote of 302 to 30, referred the question of the eligibility of Brigham H. Roberts, the Mormon Congressman-elect from Utah, to a committee of nine members, to be appointed by the Speaker. This action was consequent on the adoption of the following resolution offered by Mr. Tayler of Ohio Monday:

Whereas, It is charged that Brigham H. Roberts, a Representative-elect to the Fifty-sixth Congress from the State of Utah, is ineligible to a seat in the House of Representatives; and

Whereas, Such a charge is made through a member of the House on his responsibility as such member, and on the basis, as he asserts, of public records, affidavits, and papers, evidencing such ineligibility;

Resolved, That the question of the prima facie right of Brigham H. Roberts to be sworn in as a Representative from the State of Utah in the Fifty-sixth Congress as well as his final right to a seat therein as such Representative be referred to a special committee of nine members of the House to be appointed by the Speaker, and until such committee shall report upon and the House decide such question and right the said Brigham H. Roberts shall not be sworn in or be permitted to occupy a seat in this House, and said committee shall have power to send for persons and papers and examine witnesses on oath in relation to the subject matter of this resolution.

In accordance with the terms of the resolution, Speaker Henderson appointed the following members to serve as a committee:

Republicans—Tayler, (Ohio,) Chairman; Landis, (Ind.,) Morris, (Minn.,) Freer, (West Va.,) Littlefield, (Me.,) McPherson, (Iowa.)

Democrats—De Armond, (Mo.,) Lanham, (Texas,) Meyers, (Ind.)

Of the thirty votes cast against the adoption of the resolution, twenty-eight were cast by Democrats, one by Mr. Newlands of Colorado, (Silverite,) and one by Mr. Loud of California, (Rep.)

ROBERTS'S NAME NOT CALLED.

Mr. Roberts entered the hall about 11:30 o'clock and immediately became the cynosure of all eyes. He moved around through the throng on the floor rather aimlessly. Just before the House convened he took the seat he selected yesterday on the extreme right of the Democratic side, in what is known as the "Cherokee Strip."

It developed that Mr. Roberts's name was not on the official roll call of the House, so that in case of a vote or other action by the House he would not be a participant. This was in accord with all precedents, as the roll is made up of those members who have been sworn in, and have thus consummated their rights to membership. Representative Richardson, the Democratic floor leader, said that no exception could be taken to this procedure.

At 12 o'clock Speaker Henderson called the members to order. All arose in their places, Mr. Roberts included, and stood with bowed heads while the Chaplain delivered his invocation. After the reading of the journal had been concluded, Mr. Cannon, from the committee appointed yesterday to wait on the President, reported that the President would communicate in writing. Immediately thereafter Major Pruden, the President's executive clerk, announced the message, and it was at once laid before the House. The members listened attentively to the reading.

The reading of the message consumed two and one-half hours, and at the conclusion the Republicans gave it a hearty round of applause. Mr. Payne, (Rep., N. Y.,) the floor leader of the majority, immediately moved that the message be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the State of the Union and ordered printed.

Mr. Grow (Rep., Penn.,) expressed a desire to debate the message, but this was declared out of order. The Speaker then laid before the House Mr. Tayler's resolution as to the Roberts case.

DEMOCRATS OFFER A SUBSTITUTE.

Mr. Tayler immediately took the floor. It was arranged that there should be three hours' debate, one-half on each side, one-half hour to be allowed Mr. Roberts and to come out of the time of the minority. This arrangement having been made, Mr. Richardson, the Democratic leader, gave notice of a substitute he would offer, as follows:

"Whereas, Brigham H. Roberts, from the State of Utah, has presented a certificate of election in due and proper form as a Representative from said State; therefore be it

"Resolved, That without expressing any opinion as to the right or propriety of his retaining his seat in advance of any proper investigation thereof, the said Brigham H. Roberts is entitled to be sworn in as a member of this House upon his prima facie case.

"Resolved, That when sworn in his credentials and all the papers in relation to his right to retain his seat be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, with instructions to report thereon at the earliest practicable moment."

Mr. Tayler then opened his speech in favor of the adoption of his resolution. He would not urge its adoption, he said, were he not prompted by a high sense of duty. The Constitution was inconsistent, if it was contended that the limitations it imposed were not to be added to. The power of Congress to halt the claimant at the door, he insisted, was clear. The ineligibility created by conviction for crime was a power inherent in government irrespective of the Constitution.

He cited several cases to show that as a punishment for the crime the Legislature had ample authority to disqualify a man from holding office.

When Mr. Tayler began to speak Mr. Roberts left the seat he had been occupying and took a seat near the main aisle, where he could hear with greater ease. Throughout Mr. Tayler's remarks he sat facing his accuser except when he turned to his desk to take notes of the points to which he desired to reply.

TAYLER ARGUES.

Continuing, Mr. Tayler read from a decision of the Supreme Court, defining polygamy, which stated that, irrespective of whether a man had contracted a plural marriage after the passage of the Edmunds act and irrespective of whether he had since cohabited with a plural wife, he was guilty of polygamy, if he still maintained the relation of husband to more than one wife.

Referring again to the two proclamations of amnesty, he argued that the claimant was in no better position than he would have been had no such proclamation been issued. But higher than civil law was a law of civilization, which demanded that one so tainted should be excluded.

He cited the case of Whittemore, who had been guilty of selling cadetships, and who upon his appearance at the bar of the House was rejected as unfit to sit in the House. The power and the right were inherent, said Mr. Tayler. It was only a question of propriety, of wisdom, and of precedent.

In all his investigations and study of precedents, Mr. Tayler said, he had failed to find a single case where the House had hesitated to assert upon proper occasion its right to halt a member at the bar when his qualifications for a seat were questioned. He quoted extensively from "McCreary on Elections" in support of his argument. He reviewed the cases of Proctor Knott, Boyd Winchester, and John M. Rice of Kentucky, who had been stopped at the bar of the House on the ground that they were disqualified because they had been disloyal.

"We are told," said Mr. Tayler, in conclusion, his voice ringing out clearly, "that we are about to create an unhappy precedent. Why, Mr. Speaker, we are doing this in the open gaze of the whole world, not in a cloistered court. We are the servants of the people, empowered to do the right as we see it. The public eye is upon us, the public conscience quickens us. In that presence we can do no wrong if we do but obey it."

Mr. Tayler's concluding words were greeted with a storm of applause, both from the floor and the galleries. Few Democrats, however, joined in it.

RICHARDSON REPLIES.

Mr. Richardson, the minority leader, followed Mr. Tayler. He did not intend, he said, to discuss the merits of the case. The question in issue was as to whether the Representative-elect (Roberts) had a prima facie right to his seat. He was not willing to reject a Representative-elect who appeared at the bar of the House with his credentials in due form. If he was denied admission, a precedent would be created which would rise to plague the House in years to come.

The only Constitutional objection raised against the member-elect related to his naturalization, and that, Mr. Richardson asserted, would not hold. He defied the other side to produce a single precedent where objection was raised to the administration of the oath except on exceptional grounds. The precedents cited were made during the war, and were not to be relied upon. They had all been since overruled, after the passions that followed the war had subsided.

Mr. Richardson declared that the minority was in nowise bound by his position. He spoke for himself alone. He was willing to say that if the charges against the member-elect were proved, he should favor his expulsion.

"If there is one thing the American people are a unit upon," said he, "it is that the American home shall be preserved in all its loveliness, sweetness, and purity.

"But," he proceeded, "it is not wise to permit our judgment to be warped by public clamor. To do so amounts to condemnation without trial."

Mr. Richardson then brought forward several precedents in support of his position. The first was the case of George Q. Cannon, who appeared in the House as a Delegate-elect from Utah in 1873. Mr. Cannon was a Republican. Almost identically the same charges now made against Mr. Roberts were then made against Mr. Cannon. He read from the speeches of S. S. Cox of New York and other prominent Democrats opposing the denial of a seat to Mr. Cannon on the ground that it would establish a dangerous precedent and produce chaos in the future.

"Those Democrats," said Mr. Richardson, "rose above party prejudice, and stood by the Constitution and the right."

He also cited the case of Ramy, a colored Republican from South Carolina, in the Forty-fifth Congress, where the Democrats had insisted that he should have the oath administered to him. He also quoted the late President James A. Garfield in support of his contention that where the credentials presented are regular in form there is no power in the House to exclude him.

Mr. Richardson read the words of Mr. Garfield, which concluded: "There are no personal objections."

"But there are personal objections in the case before the House," interposed Mr. Tayler, amid laughter and applause.

"Not personal objections to the member-elect," said Mr. Richardson. "Personal disqualifications only are alleged."

"Yes, personal objections," shouted a member on the Republican side, amid another outburst.

Mr. Richardson read from alleged interviews with Mr. Dalzell of Pennsylvania, Mr. Steele, of Indiana, and Mr. Cannon of Illinois, in which they were alleged to have stated that Mr. Roberts was entitled to take the oath upon the prima facie evidence of his credentials.

Mr. Dalzell and Mr. Steele denied the interviews. Mr. Cannon asserted that, in his opinion, if charges of ineligibility were made it was competent for the House to receive them now or hereafter.

ROBERTS PLEADS HIS CAUSE.

Mr. Roberts himself took the floor in his own defense after Mr. Richardson had concluded. He occupied a conspicuous place immediately in front of the Clerk's desk.

Several legal volumes were piled up in front of him and a bouquet of carnations lay upon his desk. The most intense interest was manifested as he arose. Members crowded about, but were compelled to retire to their seats. The galleries were hushed. The occupants leaned over to listen, eager to let no word escape.

His voice was soft and low, but his enunciation was distinct, and in the stillness could be heard to the furthest corner of the hall.

As he got into his argument, however, his voice grew louder, until on several occasions it rang out until the fretted ceiling overhead gave back the echo.

Mr. Roberts began by sending to the Clerk's desk and having read a copy of his naturalization papers, in order, as he said, that all the documents in this extraordinary case should be before the House. He then read a paragraph from McCreary on elections, containing a general caution against hasty procedure in election contests.

"Now, gentlemen," continued Mr. Roberts, "that is the statement of one whose book has authority in this country, and if it is the rule of the House of Representatives in cases that arise to the dignity of a contest, how infinitely more should that rule be observed when only a mere protest is made against a member who presents himself to take the oath of office.

CLAIMS CITIZENSHIP.

"I next proceed to the consideration of the charges that are supposed to justify what the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. Tayler) himself concedes to be an unusual proceeding, and which my friend on this side (Mr. Richardson of Tennessee) has demonstrated to be an unprecedented proceeding. The gentleman from Ohio bases his charge upon a court record; that some twelve years ago in the midst of our conflict in the then Territory of Utah over the subject of polygamy that I pleaded guilty to the charge of a misdemeanor. The gentleman seems to be oblivious to the fact that since the date of his court record on this subject we have had two Presidential amnesties proclaimed that have been applied to me disqualified by the Edmunds-Tucker act. I understand gentlemen who were lawyers to admit this fact, and they will certainly appreciate the cost of it.

"The gentleman from Ohio has no court record to show that I ever was arraigned or condemned of any crime whatsoever since the promulgation of the amnesty proclamation of the President of the United States. The gentleman seems also to forget the fact that since the confession of that misdemeanor to which he has referred the law was passed by Congress an enabling act authorizing the people of the State of Utah to form a State Government. That Enabling act also had a provision embodied in it that qualified all citizens within the limits of the territory to become citizens of the United States and was particularly framed to remove the disqualifications and disabilities which have been created by the Edmunds-Tucker law.

"The gentleman seems to forget also that the State Constitution of Utah was satisfactory to the President and his advisers, and Utah has been admitted as a State into the Union and has taken upon itself the responsibilities of a sovereign State, declaring under its Constitution who of the people residing in its borders shall exercise the elective franchise and be qualified for office as citizens of that great Commonwealth.

WHY WAS ACTION DELAYED?

"The second charge, which is supposed to go to the question of eligibility of the member from Utah, is, that upon affidavit and other papers in his possession, the gentleman from Ohio says that ever since 1889 I have been a persistent lawbreaker in the State of Utah. If that be true, let me ask why it is that I was not punished for lawbreaking. Certainly there was no disposition not to excute the law on the part of the people of Utah. Its administration was in the hands of non-Mormons, of those who had no sympathy with men of my religious faith. All the machinery of the law was in the hands of Federal ap-

JULIA MARLOWE SEEKS DIVORCE

Action Against Her Husband, Robert S. Taber, Begun in Vermont, Charges Severity and Neglect.

Special to The New York Times.

BURLINGTON, Vt., Dec. 5.—Julia Marlowe Taber, the well-known actress, applied to-day for a divorce from ther husband Robert S. Taber, on the grounds of intolerable severity and neglect and refusal to support.

The case was brought in Lamoille County Court, held at Hyde Park, Chief Justice Taft presiding. W. B. C. Stickney, a leading Vermont lawyer, appeared for the petitioner, and L. C. Moody of Waterbury for the respondent. Decision was reserved. Mr. Taber's residence is given as Stowe, where he has a Summer home.

There has been considerable talk from time to time respecting the domestic affairs of Mr. and Mrs. Taber, and within a fortnight rumor had it that divorce proceedings were about to be begun. When Miss Marlowe returned to this country, early in the Fall, it was said that she and her husband had separated, and it was then declared that the reason for that action was that their artistic temperaments so widely differed it would be impossible to continue their professional careers and remain man and wife. Mr. Taber is still abroad.

PLAN TO ENLARGE WEST POINT.

Gen. Viele of New York Will Urge Action by Congress.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 5.—Gen. Egbert L. Viele of New York, who was Chairman of the Board of Visitors to the Military Academy last Summer, has come to Washington to discharge the duty imposed upon him by the committee to see that the recommendations by the Board of Visitors are acted upon.

"The Board recommended," said Gen. Viele, "that the number of students at West Point be increased, and the scope of the institution be widened. To my great delight the Secretary of War has approved our suggestions, and his report helps out the Board of Visitors.

"When the committees of the Senate and the House are ready, I expect to go before them to urge the adoption of the recommendations made by us and seconded by Secretary of War Root. Meantime we have been forehanded, and have obtained plans upon which the plant of the Government at West Point, largely unoccupied, in my judgment, will be more fully employed, thus turning out a greater number of qualified young men to take the places in the army made vacant by retirement and casualty."

KENTUCKY CANVASS ENDED

The Republican Plurality for Governor Is Now 2,838.

CONTESTS TO BE MADE TO-DAY

Election Board Will Hear Arguments on Disputed Counties—Gov. Bradley Before the Board.

FRANKFORT, Ky., Dec. 5.—The State Board of Election Commissioners, sitting as a canvassing board, finished its work at 4 o'clock this afternoon and to-morrow at 11 o'clock the members will sit in the State Senate chamber as a contesting board to hear arguments in the cases of eleven contested counties. The first important fight will come up on the question of whether or not the board has the right to go behind the certificated returns, filed with the Secretary of State by the different counties. Upon the issue of the argument on this point will rest the next Governorship of Kentucky.

On the face of the returns now on file, Taylor has a plurality of 2,838, his total vote being 193,714, against 191,331 for Goebel. If there is to be no "going behind" the returns, the board will have no option but to issue the certificate of election to Taylor. If the board decides that it has the power to go behind the returns, it cannot be stated who will receive the certificate. It will depend entirely upon the results of the contest, to be decided before the board, and the matter will without doubt be carried for final settlement to the State Legislature, which meets next month.

This morning proceedings were enlivened by Gov. Bradley, who made an address to the board regarding the statement that he had brought soldiers into Frankfort. Before the meeting began the Election Commissioners sent this letter to Gov. Bradley:

His Excellency, W. O. Bradley, Governor of Kentucky.

Sir: Since the State Board of Election Commissioners convened in this city on yesterday it has been persistently asserted in the public buildings and on the streets of this city, as well as published in the newspapers, that a body of armed men in citizens garb have been brought here with your knowledge, by your consent, or with your approval, to stand by with a view of overawing this board while it discharges the duties imposed upon it by law. These reports, though emanating from reputable sources, have not, so far as we know, been denied, either by you or any one for you. Under these circumstances we hold it to be our duty to inquire directly of you whether or not there is any truth or semblance of truth in the reports to which we herein call your attention.

WILL S. PRYOR,
W. T. ELLIS,
CHARLES B. POYNTZ,
State Board of Election Commissioners.

The Governor wrote the following reply, which he carried personally into the board room, and handed it to Judge Pryor, Chairman of the board:

Gentlemen: I regret very much that you should have for one moment believed the atrocious lie that has been circulated, and of which you speak, have absolutely become wearied by contradicting the lies of a partisan press. You should know me well enough to know that I don't resort to any such clandestine methods. And especially you should know that the report is false, in view of the fact that I waited upon the Chairman of your board on yesterday morning and offered, if he desired, to exclude all persons except those who had business in the departments from the building.

Any statement that any men or set of men have been brought here with my knowledge, consent, or approval to stand by with a view of overawing the board, is a malicious lie. I have brought no man here for any purpose, and no man is here by my order. I see it stated in the papers that certain members of the State Guard are here in citizens clothes. I have seen several officers here, but they are here individually, and not by members of that organization, and without any assistance on my part. Instead of intimidating, I am ready at all times to protect every officer of the law in the discharge of his duty. W. O. BRADLEY.

As he entered Gov. Bradley inquired: "Can I interrupt your board a moment? I want to make a public statement. I received your communication a few moments ago. I was a little busy at the time, and my attention was not called to it until a moment ago. I answered it at once. I only want to answer it in writing, and I want to make a statement for the benefit of lying correspondents that are purposely misrepresenting the facts."

Before the Governor was interrupted by Judge Hargis, the senior Democratic counsel, who for some time had been trying to break in, but could not until Gov. Bradley paused to breathe.

"I object to this statement," said Judge Hargis. "I don't know what it is about."

"It is about the presence of the soldiers," said Judge Pryor.

"Then I have no objection;" returned Judge Hargis.

"I don't care if you do object," replied the Governor, with a strong emphasis on the "I." "I want to say there are no soldiers here. There are some officers here who have come on individual business, but not in uniform. No soldier is here, no citizen is here, by my order. I don't do things that way. I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that I came to you yesterday morning, seeing this crowd here, and I said to you if you wanted the crowd excluded from this building I would do it."

"That is right," replied Judge Pryor, "and I so notified the board."

"I say to you," went on the Governor, speaking in quick, emphatic tones, "that no officer shall be intimidated in the discharge of his sworn duty as long as I am Governor of this State, and any man who intimates that I have called soldiers here or anybody here is a malicious liar. That is all I have to say to the board."

"We thought," replied Judge Pryor, "that it was due to us and just to you that you should be notified of the fact that was suggested."

"That is right," said Gov. Bradley, as he walked toward the door. Turning, with his hand on the doorknob, he said, emphatically, "I am responsible for it in here or out of here."

After leaving the Commissioners' room Gov. Bradley stopped in front of a large crowd of spectators who filled the outer office of the Secretary of State. "Now, boys," he said, "you know they are talking about intimidation, and I don't really think it wise for you to remain here. Of course, we all know you wouldn't intimidate anybody, but it is just as well that there should be no arrest."

In addition to the counties passed yesterday for argument before the contesting board, the Counties of Hopkins, Jefferson, Johnson, Knox, Lewis, Magoffin, and Martin were passed to-day. Harlan County was among those passed yesterday, the Democratic attorneys promising to announce to-day the nature of their evidence against the legality of the vote in that county. Judge Hargis declared, however, that the evidence had not been received and that all objections to the vote of Harlan County were withdrawn.

Immediately upon the conclusion of the canvass Judge Pryor remarked:

"Gentlemen, you will please submit in writing when the board convenes to-morrow copies of the charges you bring in each county, and will, of course, serve copies upon the attorneys on the other side."

Ex-Gov. McCreary declared that it would be very difficult to do this in the time allowed.

"I don't think so," said Commissioner Ellis; "just put it into the briefest possible shape. Don't attempt any argument. Just state your case."

Ex-Gov. McCreary assented to this, and then ensued an argument on whether the Democratic lawyers should be allowed to take the certified returns from the office of the Secretary of State in order to secure the precise data on which to base their charges. Mr. Wilson, for the Republicans, suggested that the attorneys for both sides visit the office of the Secretary of State to-night and go over the returns together, thus obviating all necessity for removing them from the office. This was finally agreed to.

Mr. Wilson then suggested that, as the great question to be settled by the board to-morrow was whether or not it has a right to go behind the certified returns, it might be well to argue that question first, as all the others depended on it. The matter was not decided, but it will probably be brought up at the opening of the first contest in the morning.

So far there has not been the slightest indication of trouble in Frankfort. The streets have not been crowded. There have been no more arrests than usual. The canvassing of votes has been carried through in the most harmonious manner, and there has been no lack of courtesy by the representatives of each party toward the other.

BOSTON DEMOCRATS AT WAR.

John R. Murphy Bolts the Nomination of Gen. Collins and Makes Serious Charges.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Dec. 5.—John R. Murphy, who was the unsuccessful candidate for the Democratic Mayoralty nomination, will formally announce to-morrow that he will support the Republican candidate, Thomas N. Hart, next Tuesday, and will urge his 16,000 followers to do likewise. Mr. Murphy takes this course, he says, not because of disappointment, but because of the alleged corruptness of the dominant faction of the party.

He charges the men who backed Collins with stealing the caucuses, and with filing blank nomination papers at Democratic headquarters, and afterward substituting lists of names at their leisure, thus obtaining first places on the ballots. He further accuses the administration of padding the payrolls of the city with the names of hundreds of men, prior to the caucuses, and asserts that these men received full pay for weeks, while they did nothing except electioneer in the interest of Gen. Collins.

He alleges the importing of repeaters from other cities, and adds that the same system enabled Mr. Quincy to be Mayor twice.

BAY STATE CITY ELECTIONS.

BOSTON, Dec. 5.—The feature of the municipal election in fifteen of the thirty-two cities in the State to-day was the added triumph of the Social Democracy. Last year the new party captured Haverhill, and this year Brockton was not only added to the column, but candidates in other cities made respectable showings, and the vote which they received materially affected the other contestants.

As a rule the Republicans were successful, Quincy being reclaimed from the Democrats and independent candidates defeated in other cities by substantial majorities. The Democrats, however, were victorious in Springfield by a good margin.

As usual there was considerable interest manifested in the license vote and there were three surprises when the vote was counted. Taunton changed over from license to no license, while Waltham and Fitchburg, which have for some time been "dry towns," voted this year for "wet goods."

Nearly all the cities voted in favor of making eight hours a day's labor for the city employes.

FALL RIVER, Mass., Dec. 5.—John H. Abbott, M. D., (Rep.,) was elected Mayor of this city over John S. B. Clark by a majority of 318 votes. The City Government for next year will be thoroughly Republican. The vote on license was: Yes, 7,083; no, 3,621. Last year: Yes, 6,504; no, 4,170.

PITTSFIELD, Mass., Dec. 5.—Hezekiah S. Russell (Rep.) was elected Mayor over S. A. Bailey by a small majority. Both branches of the City Government are Democratic.

POLITICAL ISSUES IN CANADA.

Special to The New York Times.

MONTREAL, Dec. 5.—For the first time since Canada became a confederation the principal political issue between the parties will this year not be on the question of tariff. Indeed, the chief question on which the Liberal and Conservative politicians seem to be divided just now is the rather curious one whether the tariff is a matter on which they differ at all.

The exact date of the coming general elections in the Dominion has not yet been announced, but it is taken for granted that they will be held some time the present Winter. Both the Government and the Opposition are preparing for the contest by active campaigning, and the only element of uncertainty is whether Sir Wilfrid Laurier will appeal to the country before the date for the assembling of Parliament, in January or February next, or wait until after the close of a short session.

In past campaigns the tariff has been the one paramount plank on which party platforms in Canada have been constructed. High protective duties, which found their embodiment in the "National Policy," have been advocated by the Conservatives, and approximate free trade has been urged by the Liberals. Unrestricted reciprocity with the United States has also at times formed a part of the Liberal programme.

Had the Liberal Government introduced any sweeping alteration in the tariff which was in force when it came into power it is probable that it would not be disposed to claim the credit of having greatly bettered the condition of the people. But as the Conservatives themselves in their last year of office had very greatly lowered the scale of duties on imports, and as the Liberals did not materially reduce these duties an explanation has to be sought elsewhere.

The Liberals explain it in the better conduct of public affairs since the accession of Sir Wilfrid Laurier to power; in the reform of the various departments of the Government; the improvement of the transportation facilities of the country, a wiser railroad and canal policy, and the curtailment of unnecessary expeditures. The prevalence of an epoch of worldwide good times is also admitted.

The Conservatives ascribe the prosperous condition of affairs largely to the continuance of the protective tariff of which they were themselves the authors. They give the Liberals credit—that is how they put it—for having retained the protectionist element in the tariff, but claim that, as they were the originators of protection, they, and not the Government, are entitled to the credit for the prosperity. They explain that the only reason the Government has not ruined the country, as the Conservatives predicted, is simply because they did not reform the tariff as they proposed.

It thus comes about that the campaign now being conducted in Canada is on the elemental question of the record of the present Government since it has been in office.

While the tariff is therefore not a live question in Canada at present, so far as the two parties are concerned, it is not to be assumed that no further changes are likely to be made in it. The tariff will always be a chief matter in politics, but it seems unlikely to again figure prominently in party politics.

Unhurt by Seventy-five-Foot Fall.

Special to The New York Times.

BELLEFONTE, Penn., Dec. 5.—Harry Stover, a boilermaker, had an almost miraculous escape to-day while putting up a large stack at the Bellefonte furnace.

ster was a friend of Cornish, and that together they had been instrumental in getting him out of the Knickerbocker Athletic Club. He said that Harpster was a bad character, but that was no news to me, for I knew that myself, and disliked him quite as much as Molineux did. He also said that Cornish was a dirty loafer, and I said that I thought so, too.

"He said that Cornish had circulated a rumor about him that he had kept a disreputable house in Newark, and that this, coming before the Governors of the Knickerbocker Athletic Club, had led to his resignation. Molineux said to me that Cornish and Harpster were vile men, and would stoop to anything to gain a point, and I agreed with him."

DESTROYED REPLY TO LETTER.

The witness then went on to explain that he had looked up Harpster's record, and found out about his employment with Stearns, and had dictated the letter above quoted to the typewriter in the office of Jacobs & Co., by which firm he was employed. He said, he told Mr. Jacobs that he was making an investigation, and the latter signed the letter to oblige him.

A week later, the witness said, the reply came from Stearns. He went with it to Molineux, who said that he was then so busy that he had not time to attend to the matter. Mr. Heiles said he kept the reply for some time, and then, not having seen Molineux again, he destroyed it.

"How long did you keep the letter in reply?" asked Mr. Osborne.

"Several months."

"Did you destroy it after the death of Mrs. Adams and when you heard of Molineux's connection with the case?"

"Yes."

The Recorder then took up the examination of the witness. It was evident, that he had not heard the last part of Mr. Osborne's question, and it appeared to him that the witness had destroyed the answer from Stearns right after he heard of the death of Mrs. Adams.

"You say that you destroyed the letter in reply soon after the death of Mrs. Adams?" asked the Recorder.

"Yes."

"Why did you do that?"

"Because I did not want it brought up in connection with the case, and I heard that Harpster had lost his place."

"But what possible connection could you have seen between the death of Mrs. Adams and the letter?" persisted the Court.

"I said I did not destroy it until I read of Molineux's connection with the case," said the witness.

"When was that?"

"On Feb. 27," said Mr. Weeks. "That was the date of his arrest."

"Then you must have kept the letter over four months?" said the Recorder.

"About that. I think I destroyed it the first part of March."

"Did you read the proceedings at the inquest?" put in Mr. Osborne at this point.

"Yes."

"Do you not recall that a letter signed 'H. Cornish' was introduced there, alleged to have been written by Molineux to Frederick Stearns & Co., and asking practically the same information about Harpster?"

"I do."

"Was it not then that you destroyed the letter?"

"About that time. I had also heard then that Harpster had lost his place with the brewery, and I knew the letter was of no further use."

WAS THROWING AWAY A CLUE.

"Is it not a fact that you destroyed that letter because you knew you were destroying a clue?"

"Yes," Mr. Heiles replied.

"Is it not also a fact that you knew when you destroyed that letter that the man who had written the bogus Cornish letters to Frederick Stearns & Co. was this man accused of the crime?"

That concluded Mr. Osborne's examination of the witness. He had proved by what he called a hostile witness—a witness who avowed his friendship for Molineux and his dislike for Cornish and Harpster—that Molineux had professed such an enmity toward Harpster that he went to the extreme of trying to have him lose his position. He had paved the way for the introduction of expert evidence to prove that Molineux had written the bogus Cornish letter to Stearns, and had shown a motive for the writing of that letter.

The court adjourned before Mr. Weeks had a chance to cross-examine the witness, but it is understood that he will try to prove that, knowing the answer had come from Stearns on Oct. 24, 1898, there was no necessity for Molineux to write a letter to Stearns on Dec. 24, 1898, which is the date of the bogus Cornish letter.

The defense did not seem much disturbed over the testimony of Mr. Heiles, although it was admitted that it came in the nature of a surprise. Molineux, who throughout the day was graver in his demeanor than ever before, watched Heiles narrowly while he was on the stand, and laughed outright, several times at the testimony.

Mr. Weeks's continual objections made Mr. Osborne very nervous, and he seemed throughout fearful that the Recorder might rule against the admissibility of the evidence at this point. He seemed much relieved when he finally got it in. The Court cautioned Mr. McLaughlin and Mr. Heiles not to talk with any one about their evidence, and both promised to be in court today for cross-examination.

DR. HITCHCOCK'S TESTIMONY.

The only other witness of the day was Dr. E. F. Hitchcock, who attended Mrs. Adams at her death. He detailed again the story of his being called in, of his administering to the dying woman and to Cornish, who had also taken a dose of the poison.

The doctor said he examined the bromo-seltzer bottle, and smelled it, but could not determine the nature of its contents. He examined the pupils of the dead woman's eyes, and from that and other things came to the conclusion that the poison was not strychnine. He then told of how he tasted the stuff in the bottle, and that as soon as it touched his tongue he detected the odor of almonds and prussic acid, and knew he was in contact with the cyanic root, one of the most deadly poisons.

Dr. Hitchcock, in describing the bottle containing the stuff, said it was a little smaller and of a darker color than a bromo-seltzer bottle. The label was soiled and gave the bottle a second-hand appearance. Dr. Hitchcock identified the bottle when it was shown to him by Mr. Osborne, and it was offered in evidence.

The defense asked permission to see the bottle, and it was given. Mr. Weeks and Mr. Battle examined the bottle carefully, scrutinizing it it closely, and it then passed into the hands of Dr. Hamilton, the medical expert for the defense, who both weighed and measured it.

Dr. Hitchcock continued, and told that the bottleholder was handed to him by Cornish This was given to the witness for identification. He examined it carefully, and identified it positively as being the same he saw in the Adams flat. It was also passed to the defense for examination, and received the same close scrutiny and careful measurement that was given the bottle. It was then offered in evidence.

The wrapper which Cornish told Dr. Hitchcock was about the bottle was next offered the witness and identified by him. The wrapper bearing the handwriting which is to play so great a part in the trial was framed, under a heavy glass. It was examined by the defense. Mr. Weeks passed it back, saying: "I would ask the doctor to examine it carefully, to be certain that it was the same."

This was done by the witness, and the wrapper was offered in evidence. It was then passed around the jury box and examined by each juror, in turn. The defense then asked that Dr. Hitchcock should weigh the bottle and bottleholder. He did so. They were each passed about for the inspection of the jurors, during which time Mr. Osborne and Col. Gardiner held a whispered consultation.

DOCTOR BEGAN TO FEEL ILL.

Continuing, Dr. Hitchcock told of asking Cornish where he bought the bottle, and of being told that it was sent as a Christmas present. The witness asked Cornish if he knew anybody who spelled forty "fourty." Cornish said he did not. The doctor said he then began to feel ill himself, saying the "poison began to get in its fine work on me." He told of the conversation between himself and Cornish, and described his feelings. He said he kept Cornish on the move all the time, thus keeping him from becoming ill.

Mr. Weeks, who cross-examined, was told by the witness that he had made a most minute and careful examination of Mrs. Adams. Coming to the question of the bottle and bottle holder, the witness said he could not say that certain little blue marks on the wrapper were there when he examined the exhibits in the flat. He told Mr. Weeks he could not remember very distinctly, as he had paid no particular attention to the matter and had not studied the case.

Mr. Weeks called on the District Attorney for the production of the testimony taken before the Coroner at the inquest, and when he began to ask the witness if he did not answer so and so at the former examination, the Recorder ruled out the questions as inadmissible. Mr. Osborne seemed alarmed at this ruling, and asked the Court to allow Mr. Weeks to go on.

"It is entirely unnecessary for you to make any suggestions to the Court," said the Recorder, quietly, and Mr. Osborne sat down.

The witness testified before the Coroner that the patient had a peculiar "pallor." In his testimony yesterday he said a peculiar "bluish color." This was the subject of a short discussion and ruling by the Court. Continuing the examination, the witness stuck to his assertion that the woman's face was of a bluish tinge.

When asked if there was anything he had done at the flat that he had failed to tell in his direct examination, the matter came up as to the probability of the patient suffering from heart disease. The witness then told of thinking perhaps the woman had swallowed something and of putting his finger down her throat and finding a small plate of false teeth lying across the throat.

NOTIFYING OF THE AUTHORITIES.

Again the witness said he did not remember of having said at the inquest that "I had my reasons" for not notifying the Coroner's office and the police. He left it, he said, to a friend of his, who may have reported the case as one of suicide, though he did not know.

Dr. Hitchcock said Mrs. Rogers asked him if the matter could not "be kept quiet." He then told the story of the trip he and Cornish made to the undertaker's office. He said he took nothing until he reached there but "several kinds of whisky—perhaps three."

On the way to this office he and Cornish had a talk, and Dr. Hitchcock admitted saying to Cornish: "This is a golden opportunity for you. I am connected with the Health Department."

Mr. Weeks brought out from the witness that during all the time he worked over the patient he detected no sign of an odor of almonds such as he later detected in the poison in the bottle. Mr. Weeks then went into the question of what antidote the witness took, and what he gave Cornish. The witness admitted he took nothing but whisky, and in answer to another question said he had never heard of any poison for which whisky was an antidote.

All the things pertaining to the work done at the flat in endeavoring to restore Mrs. Adams, the conditions of the flat, the conversation with Cornish, the walk to the office of the undertaker, were all gone over in close detail by Mr. Weeks in his cross-examination. It seemed that it was the intention of the defense to break down the witness' testimony by establishing the premises that the doctor should have notified the Conorers' office and the Police Department at once and not gone away without so doing.

After Mr. Weeks closed his cross-examination, Mr. Osborne at once opened his redirect examination. He stated to the Court that Mr. Weeks had endeavored to establish the fact that Dr. Hitchcock had something to conceal and that his duty went further than to merely care for the patient as a physician, and notify Undertaker Brown that the woman was dead.

In his examination Mr. Osborne brought out the fact that Cornish telephoned to some one in the District Attorney's office, saying: "There was trouble in the flat," and that the witness heard him do so.

"I'm going to show," said Mr. Osborne, retorting to an objection by Mr. Weeks, "that it was not necessary or any part of Dr. Hitchcock's duty to notify the Coroner or the police." Mrs. Rogers, Mrs. Hovey, Cornish, Dr. Potter, who then had an office in the Criminal Court Building as a member of the Civil Service Board, and the colored hall boy, he said, knew of the woman's death. Dr. Hitchcock testified that he had no reason to conceal anything or to make any such attempt. He was then excused, after a few more questions.

DR. HAMILTON FIRST ON HAND.

The first man to appear in the courtroom yesterday morning was Dr. Allan McLane Hamilton, the medico-legal adviser for the defense. Dr. Hamilton was in his seat at counsel's table by 10 o'clock, and had spread before him a voluminous array of pamphlets, manuscripts, and calf-bound books.

A few moments later, Bartow S. Weeks and George Gordon Battle entered, being accompanied by the prisoner's father. The jury filed in singly, and at 10:30 o'clock all the jurors were in their seats, excepting Juror Billings.

The crowd that thronged the corridors in front of the courtroom Monday was not discouraged by not being admitted, and was on hand early again yesterday. The same rules prevailed, and none was admitted save those who had business in the courtroom.

Mr. Osborne and his associate counsel came in at 10:30 o'clock, and a moment later Recorder Goff entered and court was opened. The court crier at once called: "Roland B. Molineux," and the defendant entered. He wore the same composed and inscrutable expression as always, and greeted his father and counsel in the same affectionate and jovial manner.

District Attorney Gardiner entered the room while the jury was being polled. There was only one woman in court when it opened, and that was Mrs. Bellinger, who kept the house in West End Avenue where Blanche Chesebrough once lived, and who is supposed to know much about the young woman who is now the wife of the prisoner at the bar.

The court adjourned a little before the regular time at the request of a juror, one of whose business associates had died. The trial goes on to-day at 10:30 o'clock.

"CANE SPREE" AT COLUMBIA.

Freshmen Defeat Sophomores in Two Out of Three Contests.

Freshmen and sophomores matched strength yesterday afternoon in the annual "cane spree" at Columbia University. The contests were held in the gymnasium, and were witnessed by several hundred students and others. There were three bouts, with rounds of three minutes each and a minute to rest between times. Canes three and a half feet in length were used, the opponents wrestling until one could gain possession of the other's stick

In the lightweight bout, Earle, 1903, won from Jackson, 1902. Johnson, 1902, and Townsend, 1903, were the middleweights, and Johnson carried off the laurels after a violent struggle. In the heavyweight match, Allen, freshman, won from Duden, sophomore. The referee was Dr. Watson L. Savage.

A tug of war had been planned, but was postponed on account of the length of the other contests. It will take place to-morrow afternoon, each class having a team of seventy-five men, on the open ground between One Hundred and Fifteenth and One Hundred and Sixteenth Streets.

FOUR FRAME HOUSES BURNED.

Four frame dwellings, 1,985, 1,987, 1,991, and 1,993 Clinton Avenue, were destroyed last night by a fire which originated from an overheated range in a laundry conducted in the cellar of 1985.

That building was owned and tenanted by Henry Shapper. His loss is $3,000. Charles G. Locuyer, who lived in and owned 1,987, loses $3,000; William Henry, owner and occupant of 1,991, places his loss at $3,500. A Mr. Huntley, who owned and dwelt in 1,993, lost $2,500. Peter F. Cohen's home, at 1,995, was damaged by smoke and water to the extent of $50. The total loss was $12,050.

All the tenants got out in safety. Two alarms were sent in. A strong breeze blowing at the time caused the rapid spread of the fire.

MECHANICAL ENGINEERS MEET.

Admiral Melville Addresses the American Society.

The convention of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers held its regular annual session last evening at 12 West Thirty-first Street. The address was delivered by the President, Rear Admiral George W. Melville, and it was listened to by a large number of members.

During his address Admiral Melville said: "In the past engineering has been hampered at times in our navy on account of the subordinate position which its representatives held in the naval organization, but in the future, as the whole naval body will be engineers, we have every reason to anticipate an era of growth and proficiency."

Hugo Wesendonck Celebrates.

The fiftieth anniversary of the arrival in this country of Hugo Wesendonck was celebrated yesterday by a reception which Mr. Wesendonck gave to his friends at his residence, 10 West Eighty-eighth Street. Mr. Wesendonck founded the Germania Insurance Company in 1880, and was its President till January, 1898. He is still a member of the Germania's Board of Directors, and last night his fellow-Directors presented to him a handsome silver table centrepiece and an engrossed memorial, on which were sketched pen portraits of himself in 1849 and 1899.

QUEENS SCHOOL BOARD ANGRY.

Members Take Exception to Mayor Van Wyck's Remarks About Exceeding Appropriations.

The Queens School Board, at a meeting in Flushing yesterday, denounced Mayor Van Wyck, Commissioner Patrick J. White of Long Island City took exception to the Mayor's charge that the members of the board had rendered themselves criminally liable on the ground that they had exceeded their appropriation. He said he had not committed any crime, and he defied any one to prove that he had. He also said if Mayor Van Wyck had knowledge of a crime being committed he was rendering himself liable for not placing it before the proper authorities. The other members agreed with him.

Commissioner Frederick G. Pauly of College Point began the attack. He referred to Mr. Van Wyck's action at the meeting of the Board of Estimate and Apportionment last week, when the Mayor denounced the School Boards of Queens and Richmond and practically charged them with having committed a crime in exceeding their appropriations for the present year.

"I am tired of this, for one," said he, "and propose to set myself and the other members of this board right before the taxpayers and parents of this borough." He then presented for the consideration of the board a long report upon the actions of that body since it was first organized. The report reviewed the entire situation in detail.

It criticises the officials in control of the school affairs for failing to provide many things necessary for the successful conduct of the schools in Queens and of depriving the borough of proper supplies, as well as a sufficiency of funds to carry on the schools. According to the report, there are 6,000 children in half-time classes in the schools and 2,000 who cannot get into the schools. If the teaching force is reduced fifteen of the largest schools will have to be closed and the children attending them turned into the streets.

The report concludes by drawing a comparison between the average salaries paid teachers in the several boroughs, which are as follows: Manhattan, $985; Brooklyn, $876; Richmond, $877, and Queens, $613. The board voted to adopt the report in full, and a motion was made to have 10,000 copies printed at the expense of the Commissioners and given to the pupils in the schools to take home to their parents, so that they could become familiar with the exact condition of affairs and know who was responsible for them. A copy will also be sent to the Board of Estimate and Apportionment.

Commissioner White was of the opinion that the interests of the borough had suffered through the illness of President Simonson, depriving them of any representation in the Central Board. Then he switched off upon Mayor Van Wyck. "The Mayor refused to do anything to aid us," said he, "because he did not want to render himself liable to the law. I believe he renders himself liable to the law if he has knowledge of a crime having been committed and fails to submit it to the proper authorities. I for one do not propose to be accused in such manner. I have performed my duties as a school official with a deep appreciation of the responsibilities resting upon me. I have not violated any law and defy any one to prove that I have done anything illegal."

The Commissioners decided to wait upon Controller Coler in a body to see what can be done about the teachers' salaries.

MILLER IS STILL AT LARGE.

Report of Syndicate Man's Arrest in Canada Unfounded—Inquiry as to His Escape Resumed.

William F. Miller, who was the manager of the Franklin Syndicate of Brooklyn, is still at large. The published report from Chicago that he had been captured in Montreal by men of the Mooney & Boland Detective Agency proved to be unfounded. Robert J. Ferns, manager of the agency's New York branch, said that it probably arose from a misunderstanding. "Our men in Canada," said Mr. Ferns, "expect to arrest him soon."

Capt. McClusky, Chief of the Detective Service, also denied that Miller had been caught. He denied, too, all knowledge of Carrie Hatch, who is alleged to have visited Miller every day, and to have taken the syndicate's receipts.

Capt. Reynolds of the Brooklyn Detective Bureau, who has been away since Thursday, returned to his office yesterday. He would not talk about the case. At Police Headquarters in the afternoon he was closeted with Chief Devery, who was equally reticent.

The second box of letters and other papers seized at the Franklin Syndicate offices was taken to the Commissioners' offices at Police Headquarters yesterday. Later, behind closed doors, President York and Commissioners Abell and Sexton resumed the investigation into Miller's escape. Five Brooklyn detectives were examined.

It was asserted that Carrie Hatch, on the day of Miller's flight, entered the office of Robert A. Ammon, a lawyer, with Miller, where the latter turned the bulk of his money over to the woman. Mr. Ammon yesterday denied this assertion.

Louis J. Vorhaus of House, Grossman & Vorhaus, who were summoned to Mr. Ammon's office to consult with Miller in regard to the advisability of an assignment, yesterday said:

"The assignment was decided upon in order to prevent a run on the syndicate. The papers were signed by Miller, and then Mr. William Grossman and later Mr. House left Mr. Ammon's office."

The police are inclined to believe that Bernard Katscher, alias Charles De Lorme, of 306 East Ninth Street, who was arrested Monday night on complaint of his former employer, Patrick T. Wall, of 141 West Twenty-fourth Street, who accused him of larceny, was one of Miller's agents. An unaddressed circular of the Franklin Syndicate, bearing the date of Nov. 16, was found upon the man.

Katscher was arraigned before Magistrate Olmsted in the West Side Court yesterday, and held in $1,000 bail for examination to-morrow.

NATIONAL REFORMERS CONFER.

Bent on Maintaining the Civil Government's Christian Principles.

The annual convention for conference and action in maintaining the Christian principles of civil government, called under the auspices of the National Reform Association, assembled last evening in the Broadway Tabernacle, and will continue until to-morrow night. It is attended by ministers and laymen from many States. The Rev. Dr. S. F. Scovel of Wooster University, Ohio, President of the National Reform Association, presided last night.

The following Committee on Resolutions was elected: The Rev. Dr. R. C. Wylie and the Rev. Dr. M. J. T. McCrory of Pittsburg, Penn.; the Rev. Dr. J. P. Sankey of Rochester, N. Y.; the Rev. T. P. Stevenson of Philadelphia, and Mr. A. Alexander of this city.

Two addresses were delivered, the first by the Rev. Dr. Scovel on "Our National Religion as Foundation for Teaching in Our Schools," and the second, on "The Kingship of Christ," by the Rev. Dr. Stevenson.

Dr. Scovel vigorously advocated the objects of the society, which are to maintain existing Christian features in the American Government and obtain such an amendment to the Constitution as will indicate that this is a Christian Nation, and place all the Christian laws, institutions, and usages of the Government on an undeniably legal basis in the fundamental law of the land.

No man can de-Christianize America, he said, and those who are attempting to do so do not realize the inracination of the Christian religion in the National heart. The Christian religion, he insisted, has its place in our schools as indisputably as it has its place in the State, and it was the duty of the State to teach such Christian morality in the schools as would train the young to fulfill the highest and noblest duties of citizenship. The family, the Sabbath, and the public school were the three links between religion and the State, and the Bible should be recognized as the text book of ethics.

The Rev. Dr. Stevenson also held that Christian morals should govern the actions of the State as well as of individuals, and that the Ten Commandments were as binding on the former as on the latter.

To-day's session will begin at 9 o'clock this morning.

Croker's "Auto" Barred from the Park

President Clausen of the Park Board yesterday denied the application of Fire Chief Croker for a permit to run a gasoline automobile through the Park in the discharge of his official duties. Mr. Clausen objected to it on account of the noise, which he claims would have more of a tendency to frighten horses than an electric carriage. The Park Board granted a permit to Whitney Lyon of 317 West Eighty-eighth Street to run an electric carriage in the Park.

ROBERTS'S FATE IN COMMITTEE'S HANDS.

pointers. How is it, then, that I could be an open and defiant lawbreaker and yet escape the penalty of law?

"The gentleman's objection, then, is based not upon court record, but upon affidavits and papers that have been supplied him by the people.

"And now as to the manner in which these charges are made. It has been about fifteen months since they began, since the Representative from Utah was heralded throughout this land as a defiant lawbreaker. And yet I walked the streets of Salt Lake in open day, within easy reach of the law, and my faults lay open to the law if I were guilty of transgressing. Other men were arrested before the courts of Utah, and were fined for the very offense alleged against me, and yet no complaint was made against me.

"No, it did not suit the purpose of those who had this present agitation in hand to vindicate the law quietly and by the usual methods. They desired particularly to have this case upon which apparently to arouse the sentiment of the country. Not until my business called me East did they undertake to make any charges against me. But the moment, or shortly after my departure, they began this agitation, resulting in the present sentiment of the country now aroused against me.

"I call your attention next to the fact that the only charge against me, even by the proponents of this resolution, is that of a misdemeanor. They do not charge a felony. I understand that the members of Congress are granted certain privileges while in attendance upon this House. It would be impossible to arrest any one of the members upon the charge of a misdemeanor. And yet you would deny me the privilege of being sworn as a member of this House upon the allegation of existence of some charge or other that I was guilty of a misdemeanor.

"For the thing for which the law itself could not lay a hand on me while in attendance upon this House, you propose—I speak of the little coterie of men who have entered into this conspiracy to crowd this question to the front at this particular time, and for the reason that they are fearful that if the matter should go to a consideration under a resolution to expel the member from Utah, they could not marshal the necessary two-thirds vote to accomplish their purpose—to pass the present resolution.

DEMANDS PROTECTION.

"I understand, Sir, that these immunities are not given for the benefit of the individual members. They are given rather as a protection to his constituency, who are entitled to his services as their representative. And therefore I invoke the protection that is given to the constituency of a sovereign State against the proceedings that are instituted here to deprive me of the privilege of being sworn in as a member of this House.

"Privilege, did I say, Sir! I am not asking any privilege in this House. I am not asking any favor of the members of this House. Under the shadow of the Constitution of the United States, I merely demand for myself and for the people of my State the protection that is due to us, and it is a demand and it is asking no favor. [Applause on the Democratic side and in the galleries.]

Mr. Roberts next called attention to the precedent in the Forty-third Congress in the case of Mr. Cannon, adding:

"I can add nothing to the force of that gentleman's remarks except this, that in the case of Mr. Cannon the House was dealing with an ex-Delegate of a Territory, not the representative of the people of a sovereign State. They were dealing with a Delegate who was created by a statute passed by the Congress of the United States. And throughout the discussion it was alleged as a reason for taking exceptions to him that they could do so because he was unprotected by the provision of the Constitution. And yet, Sir, notwithstanding he was but a creation of law, still they admitted him as a member upon the floor of this House.

"It is to be remarked in this connection that, strange to say, the course of nature was not disturbed, notwithstanding an alleged polygamist was permitted by the vote of a Republican Congress to remain on the floor of this House. It did not transpire, as it is said it did transpire in ancient Rome, a little ere the mighty Julius fell. The graves stood not tenantless. The sheeted dead did not stand and gibber in the streets of Rome. Why, Sir, the sun was not darkened nor was the moon turned to blood. Actually, Sir, the rain continued to fall upon the just and the unjust alike. [Laughter and applause.]

"Gentlemen of the Democratic Party, some few of whom may perhaps tremble a little at the thunderous objection that has been presented as pretending to voice the sentiment of the country upon this subject, I want to call your attention to another thing, and that is that notwithstanding a Republican Congress seated this man, yet the Republican Party really survived its action. [Laughter.] Why, it is here to-day, and I believe, gentlemen of the majority, that it could survive even if it should seat the present Representative from the State of Utah."

Proceeding, he took up the charge that Utah had broken her compact with the United States by the election of an alleged polygamous representative. If that was true, then Utah had simply followed the illustrious example of the present National Administration.

"I affirm," said he, "that there is abundant evidence that objections similar to those in the present case were made to the President and the Senate against the appointment of certain Federal officials in Utah, but the objections were waived aside."

"Do you mean to say that polygamists were appointed to Federal office in Utah by the present Executive?" queried Mr. Hopkins, (Rep., Ill.)

"With the knowledge of the President," added Mr. Grosvenor quickly, amid some laughter on the Democratic side.

"When men were applicants for Federal offices in Utah," reiterated Mr. Roberts, "objections were made and affidavits were filed both with the President and the Senate, but nevertheless the appointments were made."

"That does not answer my question," observed Mr. Hopkins.

Mr. Roberts urged that the case ought to go to the Judiciary Committee, where it could be investigated. He warned the Republican side that this was a serious question. If the people of Utah were guilty of violating the compact with the Union, what of the President who had appointed to life positions in Utah men chargeable with the same offenses?

ROBERTS MAKES A CHARGE.

Mr. Roberts ridiculed the manner in which the petition favoring his expulsion had been procured. In concluding he denied that the members who voted to seat him would be voting for polygamy. The question of polygamy was settled.

"I hold it as an honor," said he, "that I will be quoted long in Utah as one who helped to settle that question on the floor of the Constitutional Convention. I am not defending polygamy. It is dead."

Mr. Roberts concluded by thanking Mr. Tayler and the House for their indulgence. He was given a round of applause as he took his seat.

Mr. Dinsmore (Dem., Ark.) briefly opposed the Tayler resolution. Mr. Grosvenor (Rep., Ohio.) denounced Mr. Roberts's statement concerning the appointment by the President of polygamists in Utah as a miserable subterfuge.

"I make the statement," said he, "and I defy contradiction, that the President never knowingly appointed a polygamist to office. As well might one charge that the President had plunged his stainless hands in human blood as to charge that he appointed to public office men guilty of the crime alleged against the gentlemen from Utah." [Great applause on the Republican side.]

"I charged and I reiterate it," said Mr. Roberts, "that men appointed to office in Utah were charged before the President and the Senate with the same misdemeanor of which it is charged I am guilty."

"Were they guilty?" inquired Mr. Dalzell.

"It does not appear whether they were guilty," answered Mr. Roberts, raising his voice and looking around the hall. "They were only charged as I am charged." [Applause on the Democratic side, in which many people in the gallery joined.]

TAYLER ANSWERS ROBERTS.

Mr. Tayler concluded the debate by saying:

"I am not unmindful of the importance of the question the House is about to decide," said Mr. Tayler; "it is unusual, but not unprecedented. We do not undertake to determine the right of the claimant to a seat, but only whether he shall be halted at the bar of the House and await the administration of the oath until the House shall determine the right.

"Mr. Speaker, Utah was admitted as a State into the Union on the fourth day of January, 1896. These are the alleged facts against the claimant: First, that he was indicted in February, 1887, for unlawful cohabitation under the Edmunds act, and pleaded guilty April 29, 1889, and was incarcerated on that account in the penitentiary for four months; second, that he has persistently from that time forward down to a recent date been guilty of the offenses of unlawful cohabitation, and also that he has continued from the date of his conviction and is now a polygamist.

"By the alleged facts these questions are raised: First, after he was convicted in 1889, did he not then become and ever afterward remain, by reason of Section 8, ineligible to be a member of Congress unless he was pardoned? If he was guilty of polygamous cohabitation between Nov. 1, 1890, and the date of the Harrison proclamation, he was not pardoned by that proclamation.

"This situation, assuming the fact to be as alleged, raises several questions. First, if Roberts was convicted as stated, is the burden on him to affirmatively bring himself within the embrace of the amnesty proclamation?

"Second, if he was guilty of polygamous cohabitation after Nov. 1, 1890, is he not without the benefit of the proclamation?

"Third, if he continued to be the head of more than one family under his original polygamous marriage contract after November, 1890, and without polygamous cohabitation, then is he not a polygamist under the definition of the Supreme Court in the case of Murphy vs. Ramsay?

"Fourth, may not the facts, if established and independent of any law creating ineligibility, justify the House in refusing admission to Roberts?

"Fifth, does not the compact created between the United States and the State of Utah by the proclamation, Enabling act, and Constitution justify the House in refusing to admit a Representative from that State who is to-day under the definition of the Supreme Court a polygamist?

"Sixth, may it not be that upon a careful examination of the law it will be found that the claimant is not a citizen of the United States, and, if not, of course, ineligible?

"Seventh, is it wise, if the facts be as alleged, unless we are absolutely without power to keep Roberts out, to subject his case to the doubtful process of expulsion?

THE POWERS OF CONGRESS.

"Doubtless for two reasons: First, because it requires the concurrence of two-thirds to expel him. Second, because very eminent lawyers from the beginning of the Government down to the present time have taken the position that the House has no right to expel, except for some misconduct while a member, and relating to his office as a member. In the Thirty-fifth Congress, in the Mattison case, a committee by an all but unanimous voice reported that the House had no power, mean and low and vile as the character of that man was, as exhibited by his conduct before that time, to expel him, because it had no right to expel a man for that which had occurred prior to his election to Congress."

Mr. Tayler then went into a legal argument in support of the proposition that Congress had the right to hold Mr. Roberts ineligible to sit as a member of Congress. He contended that the language of the Constitution with respect to the qualifications of members of the House was negative in its character, and that with Congress was left the right to add to those qualifications. He then cited as precedents for the present course the cases of Proctor Knott, Boyd Winchester, and John M. Rice of Kentucky, who were charged with disloyalty after the war, and concluded as follows:

"Mr. Speaker, we are told that this will make an unhappy precedent. Precedent! Why, what we do here we do before the open and gazing eyes of the world, and we are at once dragged to the bar of history to answer for our deeds. We are in no cloister court. We are no statute-bound tribunal. We are the servants of the people, empowered, thank God, under the Constitution, to do the right as we see the right. That is the law to us. The public eye is on us, the public conscience quickens us. In that presence, and before such a judge we can do no wrong if we but obey it." [Applause on Republican side.]

The vote was then taken, first on the substitute, which was defeated—59 to 247.

The vote then recurred upon the adoption of Mr. Tayler's resolution, the roll being called upon the demand of the Republicans.

The resolution was adopted by a vote of 302 to 30. Those who voted in the negative were:

Democrats—Messrs. Adamson, (Ga.,) Allen, (Miss.,) Bailey, (Texas,) Ball, (Texas,) Brewer, (Ala.,) Burleson, (Texas,) Carmack, (Tenn.,) Cooper, (Texas,) Davey, (La.,) De Graafenreid, (Texas,) Dinsmore, (Ark.,) Fitzpatrick, (Ky.,) Fleming, (Ga.,) Kitchin, (N. C.,) Lester, (Ga.,) Lewis, (Ga.,) McClellan, (N. Y.,) McCulloch, (Ark.,) Maddox, (Ga.,) Norton, (S. C.,) Rhea, (Ky.,) Richardson, (Tenn.,) Robbins, (Ala.,) Slayden, (Texas,) Small, (N. C.,) Snodgrass, (Tenn.,) Stephens, (Texas,) Turner, (Ky.)

Silver—Mr. Newlands, (Nev.)

Republican—Mr. Loud, (Cal.)

The Speaker immediately upon the announcement of the vote appointed the special committee provided for in the resolution.

The death of Representative Settle of Kentucky was then announced, and at 6:25 o'clock, as a further mark of respect, the House adjourned until Thursday.

ANTI-ROBERTS MASS MEETING.

Miss Helen Gould Congratulated by the Speakers at Tarrytown.

TARRYTOWN, N. Y., Dec. 5.—An anti-polygamy meeting was held in the Tarrytown Music Hall to-night. The speakers were Dr. C. R. Greegan, Mrs. Darwin R. James, and Dr. D. J. McMillan. Resolutions were adopted condemning polygamy and favoring the expulsion of Mr. Roberts from Congress. They will be forwarded to Congressman John G. Underhill of this district and Congressman Tayler of Ohio.

The Rev. Dr. J. Knox Allen was Chairman of the meeting. Miss Helen Gould was present and was congratulated by the speakers upon her work against Mr. Roberts.

PRISONER USED FRIEND'S NAME.

Young John Sheehan Convicted of Larceny as Joseph Peyton.

Charles F. Peyton of 500 West Forty-ninth Street was surprised a week ago last Sunday to read in the newspapers that his son, Joseph Peyton, had been convicted in the Court of Special Sessions of petit larceny, and sent to the Catholic Protectory. It was at once apparent that a gross error had been committed, since the young man named was at home, an employe of a large down-town store, and had never in any way been connected with wrongdoing.

On looking into the matter it developed that John Sheehan, fifteen years old, of 518 West Forty-ninth Street, was the person who had given the name upon his arrest for theft. Sheehan, who was a friend of young Peyton, said he used his name as a joke. It has been discovered, however, that on a former occasion, when he was arrested and confined in the Protectory, he gave Peyton's name.

Mr. Peyton at first did not pay any attention to it, thinking that Sheehan's mother would make the correction. As she made no movement in that direction Mr. Peyton went yesterday to the Protectory and got Sheehan to confess his identity.

Parker Assault Case Dismissed.

Lyons of 161 West Forty-sixth Street, charging him with committing an assault upon him in the hotel on the night of Dec. 2, was discharged yesterday after examination by Magistrate Deuel in Jefferson Market Police Court.

FIRE AT THE MARLBOROUGH.

When the news was spread about the city between noon and 1 o'clock yesterday that the Hotel Marlborough was on fire, the thoughts of everybody who heard it reverted to the Windsor catastrophe. A throng of people speedily gathered in the vicinity of the hotel, and in response to two alarms eight fire engines and two hook and ladder trucks were rushed to the scene, with Deputy Chief Purroy in command. The general feeling of alarm awakened by the first reports was soon found to be groundless, and, as most of the attachés and guests of the hotel acted with coolness under the circumstances, there was no panic and nobody was the worse for the few moments of excitement.

The fire, which was discovered at 12:35 o'clock by Charles E. Miller, an employe of the house, had started in a wooden structure which was being erected on the northeast corner of the roof for laundry and kindred purposes. The carpenters stopped work at noon to go to dinner and the flames burst out in their absence. They originated from a small dynamo used to operate an exhaust fan.

About the time that Miller saw the fire and informed the hotel office, the same discovery was made by several other persons. Alderman Waite, who was in the vicinity, and Policemen Walsh, Pantzer, Burns, and Deyo were among those who rushed into the hotel with the news that there was a fire on the roof. Policeman Walsh sent in the first alarm, and he and the other officers then went about among the guests, many of whom were already hurrying down stairs. These persons were assured that there was no danger, and at the same time Louis L. Todd, the proprietor, sent bellboys to visit all the rooms and inform the occupants that there was no occasion for alarm, but that it would be best for them to come down stairs.

The two passenger elevators and the freight elevator made several hurried trips apiece, crowded with passengers, while many of the guests made their way to the office by the stairways.

Alfred E. Aarons, the theatrical man, looked out for the safety of Mrs. Stiner, wife of Civil Justice Joseph H. Stiner, who lives in the hotel. He ran into the hotel and saw her safely seated in one of the parlors and then telephoned Justice Stiner. The latter adjourned court and hastened to the hotel, but the fire was out long before he arrived.

While the excitement was at its height Proprietor Todd ordered all who were not guests to leave the house. On the main floor was a colored woman, a domestic in the employ of E. Lesche of New Orleans, a guest. Mr. Todd considered her an intruder and ordered her out. Her reply, "I belong here," did not satisfy Mr. Todd, who grasped her by the shoulders.

"Don't you touch any of my servants," shouted Mr. Lesche, and, squaring off, he hit Mr. Todd rapidly three times in succession, knocking him down. Matters were speedily expl

BOERS' AWFUL RIFLE FIRE

Said to be the Most Murderous Ever Known in Battle.

UPSETS OLD THEORIES OF WAR

Effective Up to a Distance of 1,600 Yards, but Not Severe Upon Men Lying Prone on the Ground.

LONDON, Dec. 6.—According to the latest accounts of the battle of Modder River, the Boer fire was the hottest on record, and will revolutionize existing theories. It was effective up to 1,600 yards; but the casualties among the prone troops were trifling. It was found impossible to bring the British ammunition reserves to the firing line. Many Boers wearing Red Cross badges were actually employed in serving out ammunition.

In connection with the many accusations against the Boer indifference to the laws of war, a letter published in Cape Town asserts that before the Transvaal ultimatum was sent the Boer leaders discussed the policy of using the white flag, when driven into a corner, in order to deceive the British commanders, and this policy was generally approved.

It is reported that the mobilization of a seventh division will be ordered at Aldershot, as a preparation for emergencies.

The Morning Post complains that there are plenty of cavalrymen available at home, but that parsimony prevents their being sent to South Africa where they are urgently needed.

A Modder River special, dated Thursday, Nov. 30, says:

"The Boers occupy a strong ridge about six miles north of this point. To-day the Lancers came in contact with them."

A special dispatch from Estcourt censures Rear Admiral Sir Robert Harris, Commander in Chief of the Cape of Good Hope and West African Squadrons, for his delay in sending Capt. Scott and Capt. Lambton, with guns, to Ladysmith.

"It is notorious," says the correspondent, "that at the last moment, on Oct. 30, while a decisive action was pending, did Capt. Lambton of the Powerful arrive at Ladysmith. A week, a day, a few hours, might, and I doubt not would, have saved the situation and delayed the investment, if it had not ended the Boer attempt."

The Daily Mail has a dispatch from Mafeking, dated Tuesday, Nov. 28, which says "All well."

Although the repairing of the cable between Aden and Zanzibar has restored the route via Aden to South Africa, and thereby relieved quite a budget of belated dispatches, there is nothing throwing light on Gen. Buller's preparations for the relief of Ladysmith or the movements of the other British columns.

News from Ladysmith has been received up to the night of Wednesday, Nov. 29, when all was well, provisions were plentiful, and the bombardment was ineffective. Dispatches from the Boer headquarters of the same date refer to the renewal of a heavy bombardment with a fourth seige gun, christened "Franchise," which had just arrived from Pretoria, and a lifeless response from the garrison.

A special dispatch from Durban says the Boers lost 1,800 men at what has been popularly known as the battle of Glencoe. It is also said that scurvy and dysentery are rampant among the Burghers who are beleaguering Ladysmith.

A dispatch from Pretoria mentions an unimportant sortie from Kimberley Nov. 27 and says:

"The British prisoners are well. The Government has permitted them to subscribe to the State Library and also allows them to purchase beer and newspapers."

The reports of the abandonment of the siege of Mafeking, although coming from various quarters, are not confirmed. Apparently, Gen. Cronje left there a force sufficient to hold the garrison in check.

MANY DEAD BOERS ARE FOUND.

Modder River Gives Up the Bodies of Twenty-seven Burghers.

LONDON, Dec. 5.—The War Office to-day received the following dispatch from Gen. Forestier-Walker, under date of Dec. 5:

"Gen. Methuen reports that at Modder River he found twenty-three bodies, and that twenty-seven bodies have since floated to the surface of the river. The people say that some bodies were buried, and that others were taken on mules to Jacobsdal, where the Enslin wounded were also taken. Commandant Albrecht's w gon, perfectly fitted up as a pharmacy and surgery, was captured. The enemy's loss was more than ours, and their morale has been much shaken."

DIAMOND MINES BEING RUINED.

Damage at Kimberley Said to Represent $50,000 a Day.

PRETORIA, Dec. 1.—The Standard and Diggers' News says that Wednesday last Cecil Rhodes's dispatches, intercepted near Kimberley, said the De Beers Mines were filling with water, and that Mr. Rhodes estimated the damage at $50,000 per day.

BOER STORY OF MODDER RIVER.

Asserted that the Burghers Checked the British Advance.

LONDON, Dec. 5.—The following is a Boer version of the battle of Modder River:

"PRETORIA, Nov. 29.—Delarey's official report states that a large force of British yesterday morning attacked his commando at Modder River. Heavy fighting lasted for hours. Cronje and Delarey took up strong positions, the Free Staters being reinforced. Delarey had seventeen killed and wounded, including his eldest son. The Free Staters' losses are unknown. At dark the Boers retired slowly to their positions, having prevented the British from forcing their way to Kimberley."

JOUBERT DESTROYS A BRIDGE.

Boer Commander Cuts Off the British Advance to Ladysmith.

LORENZO MARQUEZ, Delagoa Bay, Nov. 29.—The following dispatch has been received here:

"HEAD LAAGER, (Undated.)—Gen. Joubert has retired from Estcourt and is now blowing up Colenso Bridge. He brings a large herd of cattle and intends concentrating around Ladysmith."

German Steamer Under Surveillance.

LAS PALMAS, Canary Islands, Dec. 5.—The British second-class cruiser Arethusa has been closely watching the German steamer Ella Woerman, which sailed from Hamburg Nov. 18 for the West Coast of Africa. On the demand of the British Government, the Spanish authorities searched the vessel on her arrival here, but found no guns or cartridges on board of her. The steamer then proceeded.

Rubber Tire Plant Changes Hands.

NEW BRUNSWICK, Dec. 5.—The plant, stock, and good will of the tire factory of the New Brunswick Rubber Company have passed under the control of the Rubber Goods Manufacturing Company, a corporation organized under the laws of New Jersey. The new owners will install new machinery that will double the output of the factory. Tires will be made for wagons as well as bicycles. As Charles R. Flint, President of the United States Rubber Company, and Mr. Ivins, also of that company, are interested in the new concern, it is thought the factory will not be a competitor of the Rubber Trust.

Gen. Yule in Broken Health.

LONDON, Dec. 6.—The Daily Mail announces that Col. W. A. Yule, who succeeded Gen. Sir William Symons in command of the British troops in Natal after that officer was wounded in the battle of Talana Hill, and who was promoted from the rank of Substantive Lieutenant Colonel in the Army to that of Major General on the staff, to command the Eighth Brigade of the South African field force, with the substantive rank of Colonel in the Army, is on his way to England, being in broken health.

TAX MEN AT NEWPORT.

New York Assessors Examining Wills Filed at That Place.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWPORT, R. I., Dec. 5.—The tax authorities of New York have begun an investigation of some estates of persons who live there but claimed a legal residence in Newport, to ascertain if there are not some taxes due from these estates to the City of New York. E. T. Taggart of the New York Board of Tax Assessors was here to-day looking over the wills of Augustus Whiting, Robert Goelet, Sarah Swan Whiting, Martha Maria Anderson, William F. Burden, and Robert S. Hone.

All those named left large properties, which the Assessors think may be taxable in New York, notwithstanding a residence claimed in Newport, where the wills are filed. Each of these persons, except Mrs. Anderson, was duly taxed in Newport. Mrs. Anderson's will shows her to have been the possessor of a large personal estate, which does not appear to have been taxed anywhere. She lived in New York, but claimed a residence in Newport. The Tax Assessors of New York will make an effort to collect a tax on this estate. The Assessors of Newport will do likewise.

BOTH JUDGE AND WITNESS.

Justice Truax Plays a Double Role in a Forged Deed Case.

Justice Truax of the Supreme Court yesterday declared void a mortgage on a forged deed to a piece of property owned by Agnes Ryold, and during the proceedings which led to his decision he became a witness in the case. David N. Carvalho, a handwriting expert who figures in the Molineux case, was called as a witness to show that the paper had been tampered with. He took from his pocket a small vial of chemical, and applying the fluid to a piece of cotton touched the paper where the writing had been changed. He then handed it to the Judge, and as the latter looked at it he saw the original writing gradually reappear under the forged penmarks. Justice Trbax testified to what he saw, and the stenographer took down his remarks as he would those of a witness. Justice Truax then declared the deed a forgery and the mortgage on the property void. The forger was F. S. Jarmusz, son-in-law of Mrs. Ryold, who is now serving a term in prison for his crime. He borrowed $2,000 on the property.

STRANAHAN WILL EXPLAINED.

Mrs. Stranahan Received $125,000 and Agreed Not to Contest.

The filing of the inventory of the estate of J. S. T. Stranahan of Brooklyn yesterday made clear a provision of his will which had excited considerable comment. By the will it appeared that Mrs. Sranahan had inherited only $50,000 and an income of $10,000. This led to gossip among friends of the family.

It appears now, however, that an agreement was made between Mrs. Stranahan and her husband, whereby she received $125,000 worth of Government and other bonds bearing interest at 4 per cent. On account of this she was not to contest the will in the event of her outliving her husband.

The executors state in the inventory: "No property has been set aside for the widow of the deceased as exempt, for the reason that, pursuant to an agreement made between the parties March 20, 1897, the widow agreed to accept the provisions of the will in her favor, together with securities named." The signed agreement follows.

The whole property, personal and real, is inventoried at $796,130.53.

FUNERAL OF JOHN I. BLAIR.

Two College Presidents Took Part in the Simple Services.

Special to The New York Times.

BLAIRSTOWN, N. J., Dec. 5.—The funeral of John Insley Blair was held here this afternoon and all kinds of business were suspended while it was in progress. Many business places were closed throughout the day.

A number of relatives and friends came from out of town to attend the funeral. James A. Blair, a nephew of the dead man, was in charge of a special train which bore one party from New York to Blairstown and back. Those from out of town included President Francis L. Patton of Princeton University and President Ethelbert D. Warfield of Lafayette College. The relatives and visitors met at the old Blair homestead and about 2:30 o'clock filed out of the house and made their way to the First Presbyterian Church, whose minister, the Rev. Dr. Henry S. Butler, also Mr. Blair's pastor, conducted the services.

The church, which is but a few rods from the house, and accommodates about 400 persons, was filled to its capacity. The casket, plain, black, and cloth-covered, with silver handles, was placed before the pulpit, white roses, violets, and palms lying over the head, and a fine wreath of violets tied with purple ribbon near the foot. The mourners, sitting near the front, included Mr. and Mrs. E. C. Blair, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Larned, Mr. and Mrs. Clarence B. Mitchell, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Scribner, and Mr. and Mrs. Carter H. FitzHugh. In the pulpit, besides Dr. Butler and Presidents Patton and Warfield, were the Rev. J. De Hart Bruen of Belvidere and the Rev. E. C. Cline of Phillipsburg.

The church organist played Chopin's "Funeral March" as a prelude. The services which followed were very simple. Dr. Butler told of the dead man's liberality and public spirit, President Warfield read a chapter from the Bible, and President Patton offered prayer. The congregation, led by the church choir, sang two hymns, "Rock of Ages," which was Mr. Blair's favorite, and "There is a Land of Pure Delight."

The funeral party went from the church directly to the cemetery, and when the casket had been lowered into the grave Dr. Butler spoke a few words more and the Rev. Mr. Bruen followed with prayer and benediction.

WIND AND SNOW AT BUFFALO.

Street Car Traffic Almost at a Standstill—Railways Delayed.

BUFFALO, Dec. 5.—A heavy snowstorm has prevailed here all day, accompanied by high winds, which reached a velocity of fifty-four miles per hour this afternoon. Street car traffic has been badly delayed, but not entirely interrupted. The storm had not interfered with the steam roads centring here up to 4 o'clock.

Snow continued to fall heavily to-night, and toward midnight the high wind had piled up big drifts on many of the streets. Street car traffic was almost at a standstill after 10 o'clock, and reports of delays to railroad trains are beginning to be posted at the different stations.

Dr. William McLeod Barbour Dead.

BOSTON, Dec. 5.—Rev. Dr. William McLeod Barbour, at one time widely known, died at his home in Malden today, aged seventy-two years. He was a native of Scotland, and was graduated at Oberlin College in 1859. He was ordained at Andover in 1861, in which year he settled in Danvers, Mass. In the same year he was appointed professor in the Bangor Theological Semiary, where he remained until 1870. In 1877 he went to Yale College to a professorship, which he held for ten years, resigning to become principal of the Congregational College of British North America in Montreal. In 1897 he retired, and removed to Malden.

THE HOUSE CURRENCY BILL

Framers Plan to Have It Taken Up for Consideration Dec. 14.

ARE SURE OF ITS PASSAGE

New York Democrats May Help—Some of Them Pledged Against Silver with Mr. Croker's Approval.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 5.—A week from next Thursday, according to the plan of the Republican framers of the House Financial bill, it is the purpose to take up and dispose of the Currency bill prepared by the committee that was at work during the interval between the Fifty-fifth and the Fifty-sixth Congresses, and it is confidently expected that the bill will be passed.

The inquiries made by the Republicans have caused them to believe that there will be no difficulty in getting the solid Republican vote, and they hope to obtain enough sound-money Democratic votes to give the bill a good majority—certainly a majority larger than the normal Republican excess in the House division.

This indicates a departure by some Democrats from the declarations of the Chicago platform on the money question. The indication is, in a measure, correct. The sound-money members of the Democratic delegation from New York say that there are fourteen members who are opposed to the 16 to 1 ratio, and some of the fourteen who are not averse to voting for a gold standard.

The number who have decided to vote that way is not fourteen. But a paper is in possession of a member of the delegation that pledges its signers not to vote for a free-silver proposition at any ratio. This paper, it is asserted by trustworthy authority, was seen by Mr. Croker before his departure for Europe, and received his approval. The imperfect knowledge of what it contained and of the number of Democrats who have signed it, led to the report that the New York delegation is pledged to the gold standard.

The four members who are reluctant to sign the pledge to support only a sound-money bill are understood to be Fitzgerald, May, McClellan, and Sulzer. Mr. McClellan is not satisfied with the Republican caucus bill, which seems to him to contract the currency without furnishing any remedy for the forced reduction. The reasons of the other members, except Mr. Sulzer, are not given.

The talk about the intention of the New York Democrats to vote almost as a unit against free silver has brought out a controversy about an alleged determination of the delegation to be bound in all things by the operation of the unit rule. It has been asserted here that at a dinner at the Democratic Club, at which all the Democratic members from New York were present, it was decided that the delegation would vote as one, not only to put Mr. Sulzer in the place of leader of the party in the House, but on all legislative propositions.

From a member who was present at that dinner it is learned that there was no such understanding. The only decision reached which could have justified or caused a report was one that Mr. Sulzer, as the only member qualified by experience for leadership, should be voted for in caucus for the office of Speaker. The agreement went no further; if it had, there would be no occasion now for circulating a pledge of action on currency legislation, for a majority could compel Mr. Sulzer's vote, with the knowledge that he would not willingly vote for the gold standard.

The Republican majority may be swelled to impressive proportions by the independent vote of the other members, scattered throughout the country. The wonder of the Democrats is that after Mr. Croker's reported surrender to Bryan he would permit the delegation to proceed in a way that is diametrically in opposition to his pet financial theory.

Until the organization of the Senate, which is to be made at once, no day will be fixed to begin consideration of the Senate financial bill. The members of the Senate who have made the finance bill declare that they consider their measure better than that of the House, and will expect to see the final law look more like the Senate bill than the bill of the House. A member of the Senate committee said to-night:

"The Senate bill has this advantage, that you can understand it when you read it. To understand the House bill it is necessary to have a member of the committee to construe some of its passages.

"We cannot take it up in the Senate until we have a committee that will report it. The Finance Committee, as now constituted, never will report the bill. Until the Republican caucus has met and determined the membership of the committee, it will be useless to talk of making a day to begin the discussion of the measure, but it will be passed. I expect to see a law put on the books in the better language of the Senate, but embodying some of the ideas of the House bill."

At caucus of Republican members was held to-night to consider plans for advancing the House Financial bill. About 160 members, including Speaker Henderson and all of the important leaders on the Republican side, were present. Mr. Overstreet, Indiana, who presented the bill, explained it section by section.

The caucus adjourned until 2 o'clock P. M. to-morrow. This was to permit further debate, and was not regarded as unfavorable to the bill, as the discussion had been uniformly favorable.

THE SENATE CURRENCY BILL.

Bankers Indorse the Refunding and Gold Reserve Features of the Measure.

Few bankers in the Wall Street district cared yesterday to be quoted in regard to the Senate Currency bill. Their plea was that they had not given the measure enough study to warrant them in discussing its features. The consensus of opinion appeared to be that the refunding proposition was sound, and that a gold reserve of $150,000,000 would fortify National credit. Among the expressions of opinion obtained were the following:

Charles H. Stout, Cashier of the National Bank of the Republic—Generally, I should think it ought to be accepted as a better bill than the House measure. The provision in relation to the tax on circulation would certainly be more beneficial to banks having a large circulation.

A. Barton Hepburn, Vice President of the Chase National Bank—I approve of all the provisions of the Senate bill thoroughly, but they ought to go further and provide for a bureau of issue and redemption.

J. Edward Simmons, President of the Fourth National Bank—I have read an epitome of the bill, and think it a good one. The refunding scheme is a wise one. I trust it may be carried out. A low interest-bearing bond that would sell in the neighborhood of par would be availed of by banks for circulation purposes. A $150,000,000 gold reserve would be conservative and proper. I may add that I consider President McKinley's ideas on trusts excellent. They meet the situation.

Warner Van Norden, President of the National Bank of North America—The bill seems to be a good one. The refunding plan for the National debt is a good thing to do at 2 per cent. Of the other provisions, those in regard to gold payments and the deposit of bonds at par on account of circulation will be popular banking items. Another good feature is the $150,000,000 gold reserve. It will make the National credit safe and strong. To give other opinions, I would have to study the bill more closely than I have.

William C. Duvall, cashier of the National Bank of Commerce—Any expression of opinion that I make must be gauged by the fact that I have only just glanced over the bill. Of its general provisions I consider the refunding scheme an important one. As I understand it, it is contemplated to refund the 3s, 4s, and 5s into 2 per cent. bonds on the basis of 2½ per cent. The fact that the provisions of the bill include the issuing of par of circulation for deposits makes it look as if such bonds were going to hold at par. In such case, the question of premium not being involved, the new bonds will be valuable to banks as security against circulation. The provisions for a gold reserve of $150,000,000 and for the redemption of United States notes—greenbacks—seem to be wise. Such a gold reserve would affirm the stability of the National credit. I cannot say that, so far as I have seen, from a banking standpoint, a single objectionable feature in the bill, while I repeat that I have not closely studied it.

A Gavel for Speaker Henderson.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 5.—At the Republican House caucus to-night, Mr. Dolliver, in behalf of the Iowa delegation, presented Gen. Henderson with a gavel made of wood from one of the ships sunk by Dewey at Manila, and mounted with solid gold, highly wrought with representations of Iowa's industry and products.

FILIPINOS REFUSE TO FIGHT.

MANILA, Dec. 5.—Gen. Hughes now occupies Santa Barbara and Cabutuan, Island of Panay, his lines extending thirty-five miles north of Iloilo. He has occupied twenty towns. The inhabitants are returning with white flags, their fear of the Americans diminishing as they learn that they will be well treated.

It is impossible to get the insurgents to fight. They are retreating to the mountains, and no more organized resistance is expected.

The artillery wagon mules are being used for packing. Water buffaloes are also being used for this purpose.

Gen. Hughes continues advancing north and spreading his lines.

THOUGHT THEY HAD AGUINALDO.

VANCOUVER, Dec. 5.—This city was thrown into a state of tremendous excitement by the detention at police headquarters of a man supposed to be Aguinaldo.

H. W. Treat of New York informed the American Consul that a suspicious-looking stranger bearing a marked resemblance to Aguinaldo had come over from Victoria. It finally developed that the stranger, who is a Hindoo, had been under suspicion in various American cities.

The prisoner, however, proved an alibi and was liberated.

Major Armstrong Dies at Manila.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 5.—Gen. Otis has informed the War Department of the death of Major Samuel T. Armstrong, Surgeon of the Thirty-second Infantry, which occurred yesterday at Manila. The cause of death is given as leukemia.

Major Armstrong was a native of Ohio, and was appointed Brigade Surgeon in the volunteer service from New York, June 4, 1898.

WANT THE CONVENTIONS HERE.

The Board of Trade and Democratic Club Take Action.

The committee of citizens recently appointed to urge the meeting of the National political conventions in this city met yesterday in connection with the committee of the Board of Trade and Transportation, and it was decided to appoint four working committees which will direct a concentrated effort toward bringing the Republican Convention here. It was decided that the city must guarantee at least $100,000, and many of those present were in favor of capturing the convention by outbidding any other city in the country. A letter was read from Senator Platt expressing sympathy with the movement and saying he would co-operate with the committees.

The newly elected Board of Governors of the Democratic Club met last night, with Charities Commissioner John W. Keller, the new President, in the chair. A resolution expressing the sympathy of the club with the movement to bring the Democratic National Convention here next year was adopted, and a copy was ordered to be sent to the Secretary of the Democratic National Committee. A committee was appointed to draft resolutions thanking Perry Belmont, the retiring President, for the interest he has manifested in the club's affairs.

PARTY LEADERS FAVOR NEW YORK.

Mr. Johnson Says Tammany Will Pay the Convention Expenses.

CHICAGO, Dec. 5.—The Tribune to-morrow will say:

"According to J. G. Johnson of the Democratic Executive Committee New York wants the Democratic National Convention and will make a strong effort to secure it. His information shows, too, that there is considerable sentiment among party leaders throughout the country in favor of going to that city. They are impressed with the claims of Eastern Democrats that it would be a good move. It is said that only a few of the Westerners who will be elected delegates have ever seen New York, and for that reason they would like to go there.

"Furthermore, it is stated that Tammany Hall not only will pay the expenses, but will contribute a much larger amount to the campaign fund than Milwaukee, Kansas City, or any other Western town can afford to give."

PLAINFIELD REPUBLICANS WIN.

First Charter Election on Party Lines in the City's History.

PLAINFIELD, N. J., Dec. 5.—A charter election was held here to-day, and for the first time in the history of the city it was fought out on party lines. The city is always Republican, but usually there has been a citizens' ticket in opposition to the Republican ticket, and both tickets have contained the names of men of both parties. This year the Republicans placed a straight party ticket in the field, and the Democrats did the same.

Three Aldermen at Large, two Freeholders at Large, a School Trustee, and one Alderman from each of the four wards and minor officers were elected. The Republicans won, electing the head of the ticket by about 800 majority. One Democrat was elected Constable in the Second Ward, where the Republicans failed to make a nomination.

STEAMER AT SEA UNDER SAIL.

The Costello of the Wilson Line Lost Her Propeller.

The Hamburg-American liner Auguste Victoria, which came in yesterday, reported that on Thursday evening, Nov. 30, in latitude 40.31 and longitude 34.56, she fell in with the Wilson Line steamer Costello, Capt. Gresham, from Hull, bound for New Orleans, which had lost her propeller and part of the shaft, which had dropped into the sea. The sea was quite rough, and the Costello was under sail.

The Costello asked Capt. Kaempff of the Auguste Victoria if he would tow her west, but he was compelled to refuse, as the rules of the company forbid the saving of property, but he volunteered to take off the crew or supply the craft with provisions. The Captain of the Costello declined these offers and the vessels parted company.

FREE RAILWAY PASS DECISION.

Southern Railway Company Must Pay $1,000 Fine for Giving One.

RALEIGH, N. C., Dec. 5.—An opinion was handed down by the North Carolina Supreme Court to-day holding the Southern Railway liable to the law imposing a fine of $1,000 for issuing a free pass in this State.

The case was sent up on appeal from Burke County, the Southern Railway being there indicted for giving a free pass to T. N. Hallyburton while he was doorkeeper of the House of the North Carolina Legislature in 1897.

The Southern Railway has once before had to pay a similar fine for this same offense.

There was a larger attendance at Madison Square Garden on the second day of the six-day international bicycle race under the auspices of the American Cycle Racing Association than on Monday. There were few vacant seats last night outside of the reserved front rows, and before midnight these, too, were well filled.

Every hour demonstrates that the Collins law requiring that no rider shall be on the track more than twelve hours in each day, and under which the present race is held, is likely to make six-day contests more popular than they have been. So far at least the present event is free from any of the painful spectacles of men tortured by lack of proper sleep and food which have attended former individual struggles.

The racers look almost as fresh as when they started, and the principal indication of weariness yet noticeable is that as a general thing they do not run quite so high up on the inclines at the turns as they were won't to do during the earlier hours of their long struggle. This relay system of riding will naturally result in much greater mileage than has ever been made in a six-day match.

The principal event of the day was the with

The Wanamaker Store

Christmas Times and Other Times

VERY many thousand people will come to see the Wanamaker Christmas Store who have not known it as An Every-Day Store.

Will you learn it now? We have no special holiday manners—you will be as welcome all the time as you are now. And the store is always beautiful. We have no patience with the storekeeping that could exist simply because the building was in the track of trade; that could find new customers as fast as disgruntled ones left.

We owe the public something in exchange for the confidence that begets its first purchase here. We squeeze more than usual ethics into business—we ask you to expect more from us, and to hold us to the strictest accountability.

If this had not been an odd, different store, what earthly use could New York have had for it?

As a Christmas Store, bright and beautiful as it is, we shall make mistakes—a good many hundred people have come newly into the store life and have had only time to grasp its sterner principles of good service. But, remember, we don't want the money of a dissatisfied customer; we have more in business life than simply selling present Christmas stocks.

Three years of service growing toward our ideals, but still short of them, have made this the busiest careful store New York ever had. If its methods and its unalterably fair prices have made it good for our every-day friends why should they not make every-day friends of all who drop in now? We intend that they shall.

Seventeen Tableaux of Christmas

surround the Rotunda—part paint (the work of New York's best scenic artists), part still more real. The flight of angels is very beautiful. Santa Claus' dream is closely followed by his sleigh and the wonderful deer; the soldier in the Philippines dreams of home and loved ones; Jack Tar sees his ideal Christmas. John Bull and Uncle Sam each overlook typical happiness. Grandmother's dream of younger days and the sleigh-ride is tender and pretty; the child's dream is rosy, of course, while the "Dream of Old Days" takes the dreamer back to Ole Virginny and seats him at a table of wondrous bounty. Next the Knight of ye olden days—days of chivalry.

Just for your pleasure.

Rich Cut Glass

American cut glass has no equal in brilliancy—nor do the workers in any land equal our own cutters. As in a good many other things America leads beyond all possible doubt.

And, thanks to your appreciation, we are largest buyers and collectors of American Cut Glass for retail distribution. And naturally we charge least prices for any given elaborateness of cutting.

The simplest cut glass Tumblers are only $2.25 dozen. The richest are $24. Both very real and worthy.

Ulsters for Men's Stormy-Day Wear

We are willing to have any New York man judge this clothing store by these all-wool frieze Ulsters at $12. Lining good-looking, firm and durable; sleeve lining smooth, slick and strong; and the whole garment, where facing and lining meet, is finished with rows of satin piping. There is warmth and durability—and good looks, too.

Now then, we've not skipped the wants of any man within reach of this store, for a tailoring organization that can produce these garments can produce, and is producing, as elegant overcoats as money can buy.

The Montagnac Overcoats to order are $80.

Women's Suits A fashion authority was very free to say to a third party that he came to Wanamaker's for the finest and most lady-like ideas in dress.

We accept the responsibility that such statements bring—the store has lived and will live up to the expectation of its friends.

But did it ever occur to you that it is more costly for a store to be stylish than it is for an individual—and that the store run simply and sordidly for gain will not always have stylish things? It's true.

Even the most staple styles of dresses must not stay here over a month or six weeks, though they are good for half year's wear. We must be creative, alert.

Hence, we necessarily take losses of profit and more, every few days to send out the last of straggling lots—no matter how fine. To-day—for suits from $30, $36, and even $42 lots. Second floor.

Silk Handkerchiefs Busier and busier — another counter section added to-day to the Christmas Handkerchief Store. This just to hold the silk mufflers and 'kerchiefs.

By the way, we've just got hold of thirty-six hundred Japanese Silk Handkerchiefs; hand-embroidered, mind you, to sell at fifteen cents

—though finest of them are quite full half-dollar values. And all are both pretty and good.

The piles will melt like snow under a jealous sun.

Every other handkerchief here is of pure linen—a thing you can only be sure of in three American stores, and two of them are ours.

Carpets for Gifts

Absurd idea, isn't it? Everybody thought the same when dress goods were proposed, not so many years ago. Think a minute—the average carpet is made rug fashion now-a-days—it's the only sensible way unless one owns the house or has a long lease on one's abode.

Rug fashion means "just about"—you can guess sizes safely.

This special lot besides—

Tapestry carpet, or tapestry brussels, as almost all of you call it—9,500 yards in thirty styles—For rooms and halls and stairs—

65c a yard

Some were 75c., some 85c—and the styles and colorings are all you'd ask. Third floor.

Rain Garments for Gifts Women and girls don't stay indoors now-a-days when it's stormy—so the Christmas gift may well be a mackintosh or some of the other forms of rain-proof wrap.

Women's, $4 to $24.
Girls', $3.75 to $5.

If for a gift, say so—we pack gifts in pretty boxes. A word of detail—

At $4— Women's serge rain-garments—navy blue, black, brown or garnet—double texture; with double cape. And we guarantee them to be waterproof and in every way right.

If that is obtainable for $4, you may take the finer sorts for granted. Second floor.

Book News for December The Christmas number is unusually large — about 170 pages—interesting and handsome. It is very liberally illustrated. This month's portrait is of Sara Y. Stevenson, author of "Maximilian in Mexico." Book News is a vast fund of information concerning new publications and authors—all that is worth knowing about any book worth reading is entertainingly told of in its pages.

At our book counters to-day. 5c a copy. Subscribe for a year—50c.

Silk Petticoats Two approved late styles. Taffeta is of good quality, solid colors and black. One kind is made with corded umbrella ruffle and dust ruffle. The other has deep flounce with small ruffle and cording above, also pinked dust ruffle. $5 for choice among all good $6 and $6.50 values.

Flannelette Gowns Night gowns really, but not unsuitable for room wear. Especially cozy and grateful on arising chilly mornings. Made and trimmed in various pretty styles—all of striped flannelette. Not expensive. 75c and $2.75 are the two extremes—half dozen styles between. Second floor, Fourth avenue.

Knitted Corset Covers There is greater demand than ever for the ribbed corset covers. Warmth? Maybe; but they help to smoother fit of the outer dress. 38c to $8.

At 50c—Heavier; long or short sleeves.
At 75c—Of merino; white; long or short sleeves. Some of fine cotton, long sleeves, same price.
At $1.25—Silk-and-wool, or "silk-plated" as they are known. Short sleeves. Long sleeves, 25c more.
At $2—of spun silk—white or black. Long sleeves, 50c extra.

Women's Felt Hats Felt hats—lots of them imported—finest have been $7 apiece till now. But it's time you had them, and room is precious here. So, while not one was less than a dollar, and the finest, as we've said, were $7, we mark them

50c to $3

Second Floor, Broadway.

Leather—Bags and Baskets. Dog-Carriers If there is a handiness for travelers we've forgot to get, please tell us. Many of these things we gathered in Europe. And everything in this Fifth-floor Leather Store is suitable for giving.

Most wonderful Lunch Baskets, with everything from knives, forks and plates to receptacles for condiments They're for campers, but being new and newly here we've sold half the lot for gifts. $12 to $48.

Traveling Bags, imported; furnished with everything we could think of for toilet use. $20 to $125—the finest has brushes and other articles with real ivory backs and solid silver mountings.

Did you ever see a satchel hold a dog? Cute, and ventilated. Three sizes—either at $5.50.

Then there are wraps to hold shawls and what-not, and all sorts of handy leather things. Fifth Floor.

A Good Food Chopper The man that invented this chopper had little money but lots of spunk. He can't build a big factory—we need to wait and wait for supplies; but "it's mine, all mine," as the song goes. Plenty just now—No. 1 at $1.35; No. 2 at $1.75 and No. 3 at $2.25.

All do the same things—grate crackers, horseradish, chop potatoes, carrots, citron; grind little lots of pork for sausage, beef for Hamburg steaks; meats for croquettes—but the large size cuts meats in best forms for salads.

And this is mince-pie time, too.

No trouble—any child will consider it fun to help. Basement.

Bath Robes Terry—fine colorings; some cotton, some linen, but in a bath robe don't bother much about that—it's the effect (especially if the robe is for giving). We chose these styles in Germany and had the robes made very liberal in size. Just here. Will you get one or two? $3.50, $5, $6, $7.50 and $8. Men's Store, Ninth st.

The Christmas Toy Store

is the brightest, jolliest half acre in New York. Why, think of it, we had careful men at work for weeks and weeks gathering the nicest sort of things in Germany and France.

Here it all is—except the third of it you've bought and hid away till the jolly, happy right arrives.

You ask the charm of buying at Wanamaker's? This: Choosing from the biggest assortments and being sure that whatever you buy is the best of its kind. There is nothing meretricious about the goods we sell. And so, whether the expenditure is to be pennies, dimes or dollars, you do best at this old Broadway store.

MURDER FOR PALTRY GAIN

SEARCH FOR HIS COMPANION

Young Man Who Volunteered to Walk Home with Him Suspected of Firing the Fatal Shot.

SCARSDALE, N. Y., Dec. 5.—Herbert B. Fellows, the Postmaster here and also the local station agent of the Harlem Division of the New York Central and Hudson River Railroad, was murdered last night while on his way from the railroad station to his house, which is about half a mile south of the station and near the railroad tracks. The Post Office is in the railroad station, and Mr. Fellows was also the agent of the American Express Company, thus combining three positions in which he handled money. He was in the habit of going home about 8:30 o'clock every evening, and, as there is no safe in the station, he always packed all the money he had received during the day into a little satchel, which he carried home with him.

Last night he went home about 8 o'clock and while eating supper told his wife he had to return to the station, as he had four cows for the Dederers, who keep a dairy farm a short distance away, for which he expected the owners to call. He returned to the station, and on his arrival found Samuel, Harry, and Dyke Dederer there ready to take charge of the cows. They paid the freight, which amounted to $12, and the cows were turned over to them

When this business had been transacted, Mr. Fellows said he would start for home. A young man who was standing in the station said he would accompany him, as he was going in the same direction. According to the Dederers, Mr. Fellows and this young man appeared to be well acquainted, and on friendly terms. The young man is described by Samuel Dederer as being about seventeen years old and five feet seven inches in height. He wore a light-colored mackintosh and smoked cigarettes incessantly.

About 11 o'clock Mrs. Fellows, who up to that time had supposed her husband was waiting for the owners of the cows, became alarmed at his prolonged absence. She asked Alfred Graff, a neighbor, to look for him. Mr. Graff, after a search along the roadway, found Mr. Fellows lying unconscious by the roadside at the top of a little hill which runs down to the railroad tracks. Mr. Graff summoned a couple of Italians from a house near by and they carried Mr. Fellows to his home, where he died at 10 o'clock this morning without recovering consciousness. The cause of his death was a bullet wound behind the left ear.

Detectives have been scouring the country to-day trying to find some trace of the young man who walked away from the station with Mr. Fellows. Detective William Knapp thinks the description given of the young man answers that of a young man who is reported to have boarded a south-bound train at Tuckahoe, three miles south of Scarsdale, about 11:30 o'clock last night. The man would have had ample time to walk there from this place, and is supposed to have made his way to New York.

The description of the young man tallies with the appearance of Edward Burnz, whose parents, Mr. and Mrs. C. Burnz, live about two miles from here. His mother was found at home this afternoon, and she said that her son went away from home about a week ago, after a quarrel with his father. The boy came home unexpectedly last evening, and after a little while left, as he said, to take the 8 o'clock train to New York. That would have accounted for his presence in the railroad station. The police are now exerting all their energies to the capture of young Burnz, who is supposed to be in New York.

The satchel which Mr. Fellows carried was found to-day in the garden of Mrs. Corrigan, back of the Tuckahoe railroad station. It contained a quantity of papers, but the money was missing. It is thought that the murderer did not obtain more than $20, including the $12 paid to Mr. Fellows by the Dederers.

Mr. Fellows was thirty-eight years old, and had lived here five years. Besides his wife, he leaves a nine-year old son.

Edward Burnz, suspected of murdering Postmaster Herbert D. Fellows, at Scarsdale, was arrested early this morning at the main entrance to Madison Square Garden, where he was going with a woman to see the bicycle race.

HAVANA REJECTS DADY'S BID.

Objections Made to Plans for City Sewers and Repaving.

HAVANA, Dec. 5.—The municipality has rejected Mr. Michael J. Dady's bid for sewering and paving Havana by 12 votes against 3. It was argued against acceptance that any such contract should be approved by an elected Municipal Council, and not by one nominated. It was also pointed out that Mr. Dady's scheme did not include the suburbs of Vedado, Jesus del Monte, and Cerro, and was not in other respects complete.

The opponents of acceptance contended that Havana, although badly needing a good system of paving and sewerage, had gotten along with the present system, and should therefore wait until some thoroughly satisfactory scheme had been propounded, instead of accepting Mr. Dady's contract, which, aside from alleged imperfections, would prove far too costly. Mayor Lacoste's special report against acceptance was very strong.

EPISCOPALIAN NEEDS IN CUBA.

Bishop Whitaker Will Study Conditions in the Island.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 5.—The Right Rev. Ozi W. Whitaker, Protestant Episcopal Bishop of the Diocese of Pennsylvania and Bishop in charge of the Episcopal Church in Cuba, will make an ecclesiastical tour of the greater part of the Island of Cuba next month.

Bishop Whitaker's purpose in visiting the island is to study the interests and needs of the Church in that jurisdiction. The Bishop will, in all probability, be accompanied by the Rev. Dr. Powers, the general missionary. The tour will consume about one month.

Although Cuba has been a very difficult field in which to carry on the work of the Church, much good has been accomplished by the missions, which are firmly established in Matanzas and in Havana.

TROOPS IN CUBA RECALLED.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 5.—Formal orders were issued from the War Department to-day to give effect to the recently announced decision of Secretary Root to reduce the force of United States troops in Cuba. The headquarters and eight companies of the Fifteenth Infantry, now in Santiago and Puerto Principe Province, Cuba, are ordered home. Of these, the headquarters and four companies go to Plattsburg Barracks, and the remaining battalion to Governors Island, N. Y. The latter will relieve the present battery of the Fifth Artillery, at present stationed at Governors Island, making it available for service at some other point on the coast.

One squadron of the Eighth Cavalry, also stationed at Puerto Principe, is ordered to Fort Riley, Kan. This will leave eight troops of the Eighth Cavalry in Puerto Principe and one squadron of the Tenth Cavalry, the other squadrons of the latter being ordered to Texas, from which State they were originally drawn. They will relieve three troops of the Ninth Cavalry, now in Texas, who in turn will be sent back to the Department of Colorado, to such points as may be designated by the commanding General of that department. One company of the Seventh Infantry, now at Plattsburg Barracks, is ordered to Fort Wayne, near Detroit, Mich. This is the headquarters of that regiment, and it is the intention to gradually concentrate there the various detachments of the Seventh, now scattered over the United States.

MEMORIAL TABLETS ERECTED.

Two at West Point Are in Memory of Soldiers and Sailors.

WEST POINT, Dec. 5.—Two marble tablets presented by the Daughters of the Revolution of the State of New York, and erected in memory of the soldiers and sailors of the War of Independence and of the officers and enlisted men who lost their lives in the Spanish-American war, were unveiled this afternoon in the Cadet Chapel of the United States Military Academy. The programme included a presentation address by the State Regent, Mrs. Charles Francis Roe, wife of Major Gen. Roe; the acceptance of the tablets by Col. Albert L. Mills, Superintendent of the Military Academy, and an address by Prof. Peter S. Michie.

The exercises were held in the Cadet Chapel. Among those present were Mrs. Henry Sanger Snow, President of the Daughters of the Revolution; Prof. and Mrs. Bash of New York, several representatives of the Society of Foreign Wars, and all the officers and members of the post, and Mrs. Holbrook of the Holland Dames, Capt. Andrews of the Colonial Wars, Mr. Valentine, Mr. Dayton, Mr. D. C. Carr, and Gen. Roe of the Indian Wars, and Mrs. Jacobs of the Mayflower Society.

LEGAL NOTES.

THE ELECTION LAW.—Frank A. McShane, who, after having been arrested on a charge of false registration and illegal voting, on the ground that he had not acquired a legal residence in the election district in which he registered and voted, and brought before Justice Bookstaver on a writ of certiorari, was yesterday ordered to be discharged. During the last few years McShane, who is twenty-four years old, had worked in various places about the city, but had never been prosperous. About a year ago he was told he could not get steady employment at Bellevue Hospital, but was engaged and set at work in the laundry of that institution, under an agreement that he should receive board, lodging, and clothes in return for his services. He was not engaged for any definite period, but was subject to discharge at any time. He had not, however, any intention of returning to his former residence, which was at the house of an aunt, in another election district. Justice Bookstaver, in directing McShane's discharge, said the only question in the case was whether he was "kept" in the institution in the sense in which that word was used in the section of the Constitution providing that, for the purpose of voting, no person should be deemed to have gained or lost a residence by reason of his presence or absence while kept at any almshouse or other asylum or institution wholly or partly supported at public expense or by charity. There are employed at Bellevue 119 paid employes and 155 "unpaid laborers," to which class McShane belonged. No attempt was made, Justice Bookstaver said, to show that this latter number was unnecessarily large, nor that it would be for the best interests of the institution and the public to have it diminished. It might well be that a large portion of the services necessary in such an establishment could be more economically procured by engaging persons to perform them for board, lodging, and clothes than would be the case if money were paid. Whether or to what extent that was true in this case did not appear, the Court said, and would not be decisive of the application if it did. That was a question of the management of the institution rather than of the position of the defendant. The test that determined his rights was whether he received more than his services were worth. If he did not, he could not be said to have been "kept," even partially, at the institution. No attempt was made to show that he did not, and certainly no presumption could be made against him.

NEGLIGENTLY SETTING FIRE TO INFLAMMABLE MATERIAL.—Wilhelmina Hoffman recovered judgment on a verdict in her favor in a suit to recover damages from John King and John McCullough, who were then receivers of the New York, Lake Erie and Western Railroad, for damages claimed to have been occasioned by a fire negligently set by the railroad's employes. It appeared that during a dry time, and when a high wind was blowing, a fire was started alongside the tracks of the road by sparks from a locomotive, and that this fire spread in a continuous and direct line over woodlands belonging to several proprietors for a distance of about two miles, and there destroyed fences and standing timber belonging to Mrs. Hoffman worth $75. All the lands burned over were forest lands, except those of the railroad, which consisted simply of the usual strip for a right of way. A judgment of the Third Appellate Division affirming that of the trial court has now been reversed by the Court of Appeals. Judge Haight, giving the opinion, which is concurred in by Judges Gray, O'Brien, Bartlett, and Martin, holds that the rule of liability for fires, negligently set, is the same whether they occur in the country or in a city or village. The damage must be the proximate result of the negligent act, and it must be such as the ordinary mind would reasonably expect as a probable result of the act; otherwise no liability exists. It was held to be the duty of the railroad company in times of drought to keep its right of way free from combustible material liable to be ignited by sparks from its locomotives, and if such inflammable material upon its own land was negligently ignited and it communicated with adjoining property and loss resulted, the company was liable for its neighbor's injury; but the liability extended no further, and if the fire was communicated from the neighbor's property to other property beyond, the further loss must be borne by the owner, for it was not the proximate result of the negligence. Judge Vann gave a dissenting opinion, which was concurred in by Chief Judge Parker, holding that it was a question which the trial Judge properly left to the jury whether the destruction of the plaintiff's property was the natural and direct effect of negligence on the part of the defendants; that it was for the jury to take into account all the circumstances, including the distance the fire ran before it reached her property, and decide whether it was the proximate cause of the injury.

PHYSICIAN AND PATIENT.—Benjamin De Jong, who was injured while attempting to drive his horse and wagon across the Erie Railroad near Sparkill, in Rockland County, brought an action against the Erie Railroad Company for damages. Within an hour or two after the accident Dr. William C. McKeebee, a surgeon employed by the company, called upon Mr. De Jong and began to treat him for his injuries. This treatment was continued for about four weeks, with the patient's consent, notwithstanding he was informed that he was entitled to his own physician. While attending him the doctor conversed with him in regard to the circumstances of the accident, and obtained his signature to a written statement concerning the manner in which the collision occurred. When the doctor was called on the trial to testify on behalf of the defendant, an objection to the question whether the plaintiff said to him that he had not observed the train until he was struck, because it was incompetent, as being a privileged communication between physician and patient, was sustained. A judgment given on a verdict in favor of the plaintiff has been reversed by the Second Appellate Division, in an opinion by Justice Willard Bartlett. The Court holds that the prohibition in Section 834 of the Code of Civil Procedure relating to communications between physicians and patients extends only to such communications as are necessary to enable the physician to act in his professional capacity, and does not extend to admissions made by the patient of facts which have no possible relation to the professional conduct of the physician, and the surgeon in this case might testify that during his visits to the plaintiff the latter informed him that he did not observe the train until he was struck.

FIRE INSURANCE.—A judgment recovered by George Solomon, as assignee for creditors of Henry Thoesen, in his suit to recover upon a fire insurance policy issued by the Continental Fire Insurance Company of the City of New York to Thoesen, and with its consent transferred to the plaintiff, which judgment was sustained by the First Appellate Division, was recently affirmed by the Court of Appeals. The policy in question required the insured to give "immediate notice" of any loss to the insurer, and prohibited any suit for recovery until after full compliance with this condition. The Court of Appeals, Judge Martin giving the opinion, holds that this provision does not mean that instant notice must be given, but that notice shall be given within a reasonable time, under all the circumstances; that it could not, therefore, be held, as a matter of law, that the service of a notice of loss was not within a reasonable time, or that the referee was not justified in finding that the defendant received sufficient notice of the plaintiff's loss, under the conditions of the policy, where a notice was given about fifty-three days after the fire occurred, it appearing that the insured assignee was not acquainted with the terms of the policy, and that the delay in informing himself of its conditions, and in giving notice to the company, was due principally to the fact that the policy, at the time of the fire, was contained in a safe in the building which was destroyed. Judge Vann gave a dissenting opinion, which was concurred in by Judge Gray, holding that the plaintiff had not met the burden of excusing his delay in giving notice, by sufficient evidence of diligence. Instead of doing his best, plaintiff did virtually nothing, and his default was held to stand wholly without excuse.

An Interesting Experiment

Interesting because it teaches a useful lesson.

Draw a glass full of water from a faucet. Place it on a level table. Add as much more water to it, drop by drop, as you possibly can. Do this until the water stands above the brim of the glass and one drop more would cause it to overflow.

It would seem that nothing more could be put into that glass, yet if you take some substance that is readily dissolved, such as common table salt, you will be surprised at the really enormous amount that you can add to that completely full glass of water without causing it to overflow.

You will be more than surprised to see how much more salt will be dissolved by the Londonderry water.

Just consider the reason for this.

It is apparent that Londonderry is a wonderfully absorbent water.

The reason Londonderry is so marvelously absorbent is because it is absolutely pure.

Those who drink Londonderry enjoy good health because this water permeates the entire system and absorbs all of the poisonous secretions that have collected in the body.

Wherever Londonderry Water is used there is no danger of stones in the kidneys or bladder, for it dissolves all calculus matter.

Londonderry Lithia Water also neutralizes other poisons, such as uric acid, which causes rheumatism and gout.

PHILIPPINES TO BE HELD

Pledge Made by Congress to Cuba a Sacred Trust.

PACIFIC CABLE NEEDED

Legislation for Isthmian Canal, Navy, and Army Urged—Foreign Relations, Pensions, and New Possessions Discussed.

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

At the threshold of your deliberations you are called to mourn with your countrymen the death of Vice President Hobart, who passed from this life on the morning of Nov. 21 last. His great soul now rests in eternal peace. His private life was pure and elevated, while his public career was ever distinguished by large capacity, stainless integrity, and exalted motives. He has been removed from the high office which he honored and dignified, but his lofty character, his devotion to duty, his honesty of purpose, and noble virtues remain with us as a priceless legacy and example.

PROSPERITY OF THE PEOPLE.

The Fifty-sixth Congress convenes in its first regular session with the country in a condition of unusual prosperity, of universal good will among the people at home, and in relations of peace and friendship with every Government of the world. Our foreign commerce has shown great increase in volume and value. The combined imports and exports for the year are the largest ever shown by a single year in all our history. Our exports for 1899 alone exceeded by more than a billion dollars our imports and exports combined in 1870. The imports per capita are 20 per cent. less than in 1870, while the exports per capita are 58 per cent. more than in 1870, showing the enlarged capacity of the United States to satisfy the wants of its own increasing population, as well as to contribute to those of the peoples of other nations.

Exports of agricultural products were $784,776,142. Of manufactured products we exported in value $339,592,148, being larger than any previous year. It is a noteworthy fact that the only years in all our history when the products of our manufactories sold abroad exceeded those bought abroad were 1898 and 1899.

Government receipts from all sources for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1899, including $11,708,314.14, part payment of the Central Pacific Railroad indebtedness, aggregated $610,982,094.35. Customs receipts were $206,128,481.75 and those from internal revenue $273,437,161.51.

For the fiscal year the expenditures were $700,093,564.02, leaving a deficit of $89,111,559.67.

The Secretary of the Treasury estimates that the receipts for the current fiscal year will aggregate $640,958,112, and, upon the basis of present appropriations, the expenditures will aggregate $600,958,112, leaving a surplus of $40,000,000.

For the fiscal year ended June 30, 1899, the internal revenue receipts were increased about $100,000,000.

The present gratifying strength of the Treasury is shown by the fact that on Dec. 1, 1899, the available cash balance was $278,004,877.72, of which $229,744,905.36 was in gold coin and bullion. The conditions of confidence which prevail throughout the country have brought gold into more general use, and customs receipts are now almost entirely paid in that coin.

The strong position of the Treasury with respect to cash on hand and the favorable showing made by the revenues have made it possible for the Secretary of the Treasury to take action under the provisions of Section 3,694, Revised Statutes, relating to the sinking fund. Receipts exceeded expenditures for the first five months of the current fiscal year by $13,413,380.91, and, as mentioned above, the Secretary of the Treasury estimates that there will be a surplus of approximately $40,000,000 at the end of the year. Under such conditions, it was deemed advisable and proper to resume compliance with the provisions of the sinking fund law, which for two years has not been done because of deficiencies in the revenues. The Treasury Department therefore offered to purchase during November $25,000,000 of the 5 per cent. loan of 1904 or the 4 per cent. funded loan of 1907, at the current market price. The amount offered and purchased during November was $18,408,600. The premium paid by the Government on such purchases was $2,263,521 and the net saving in interest was about $2,885,000. The success of this operation was sufficient to induce the Government to continue the offer to purchase bonds to and including the 23d day of December, instant, unless the remainder of the $25,000,000 called for should be presented in the meantime for redemption.

Increased activity in industry, with its welcome attendant—a larger employment for labor at higher wages—gives to the body of the people a larger power to absorb the circulating medium. It is further true that year by year, with larger areas of land under cultivation, the increasing volume of agricultural products, cotton, corn, and wheat, calls for a larger volume of money supply. This is especially noticeable at the crop-harvesting and crop-moving period.

EXISTING BANKING LAWS.

In its earlier history the National Banking act seemed to prove a reasonable avenue through which needful additions to the circulation could from time to time be made. Changing conditions have apparently rendered it inoperative to that end. The high margin in bond securities required, resulting from large premiums which Government bonds command in the market, or the tax on note issues, or both operating together, appear to be the influences which impair its public utility.

The attention of Congress is respectfully invited to this important matter, with the view of ascertaining whether or not such reasonable modifications can be made in the National Banking act as will render its service in the particulars here referred to more responsive to the people's needs. I again urge that National banks be authorized to organize with a capital of $25,000.

POWER TO SELL BONDS.

I urgently recommend that to support the existing gold standard, and to maintain "the parity in value of the coins of the two metals (gold and silver) and the equal power of every dollar at all times in the market and in the payment of debts," the Secretary of the Treasury be given additional power and charged with the duty to sell United States bonds and to employ such other effective means as may be necessary to those ends. The authority should include the power to sell bonds on long and short time, as conditions may require, and should not be limited nor the rate of interest lower than that fixed by the act of Jan. 14, 1875. While there is now no commercial fright which withdraws gold from the Government, but, on the contrary, such widespread confidence that gold seeks the Treasury, demanding paper money in exchange, yet the very situation points to the present as the most fitting time to make adequate provision to insure the continuance of the gold standard and of public confidence in the ability and purpose of the Government to meet all its obligations in the money which the civilized world recognizes as the best. The financial transactions of the Government are conducted upon a gold basis. We receive gold when we sell United States bonds and use gold for their payment. We are maintaining the parity of all the money issued or coined by authority of the Government. We are doing these things with the means at hand.

Happily, at the present time we are not compelled to resort to loans to supply gold. It has been done in the past, however, and may have to be done in the future. It behooves us, therefore, to provide at once the best means to meet the emergency when it arises, and the best means are those which are the most certain and economical. Those now authorized have the virtue neither of directness nor economy. We have already eliminated one of the causes of our financial plight and embarrassment during the years 1893, 1894, 1895, and 1896. Our receipts now equal our expenditures; deficient revenues no longer create alarm. Let us remove the only remaining cause by conferring the full and necessary power on the Secretary of the Treasury, and impose upon him the duty to uphold the present gold standard and preserve the coins of the two metals on a parity with each other, which is the repeatedly declared policy of the United States.

In this connection I repeat my former recommendations, that a portion of the gold holdings shall be placed in a trust fund, from which greenbacks shall be redeemed upon presentation, but when once redeemed shall not thereafter be paid out except for gold.

AMERICAN MERCHANT MARINE.

The value of an American merchant marine to the extension of our commercial trade and the strengthening of our power upon the sea invites the immediate action of the Congress. Our National development will be one-sided and unsatisfactory so long as the remarkable growth of our inland industries remains unaccompanied by progress on the seas. There is no lack of Constitutional authority for legislation which shall give to the country maritime strength commensurate with its industrial achievements and with its rank among the nations of the earth.

The past year has recorded exceptional activity in our shipyards, and the promises of continual prosperity in shipbuilding are abundant. Advanced legislation for the protection of our seamen has been enacted. Our coast trade, under regulations wisely framed at the beginning of the Government and since, shows results for the past fiscal year unequaled in our records or those of any other power. We shall fail to realize our opportunities, however, if we complacently regard only matters at home, and blind ourselves to the necessity of securing our share in the valuable carrying trade of the world.

Last year American vessels transported a smaller share of our exports and imports than during any former year in all our history, and the measure of our dependence upon foreign shipping was painfully manifested to our people. Without any choice of our own, but from necessity, the departments of the Government charged with military and naval operations in the East and West Indies had to obtain from foreign flags merchant vessels essential for those operations.

The other great nations have not hesitated to adopt the required means to develop their shipping as a factor in national defense, and as one of the surest and speediest means of obtaining for their producers a share in foreign markets. Like vigilance and effort on our part cannot fail to improve our situation, which is regarded with humiliation at home and with surprise abroad. Even the seeming sacrifices, which at the beginning may be involved, will be offset later by more than equivalent gains.

The expense is as nothing compared to the advantage to be achieved. The re-establishment of our merchant marine involves in a large measure our continued industrial progress and the extension of our commercial triumphs. I am satisfied the judgment of the country favors the policy of aid to our merchant marine, which will broaden our commerce and markets and upbuild our sea-carrying capacity for the products of agriculture and manufacture; which, with the increase of our navy, means more work and wages to our countrymen, as well as a safeguard to American interests in every part of the world.

TRUST LEGISLATION WANTED.

Combinations of capital organized into trusts to control the conditions of trade among our citizens, to stifle competition, limit production, and determine the prices of products used and consumed by the people, are justly provoking public discussion, and should early claim the attention of the Congress.

The Industrial Commission, created by the act of the Congress of June 18, 1898, has been engaged in extended hearings upon the disputed questions involved in the subject of combinations in restraint of trade and competition. They have not yet completed their investigation of this subject, and the conclusions and recommendations at which they may arrive are undetermined. The subject is one giving rise to many divergent views as to the nature and variety or cause and extent of the injuries to the public which may result from large combinations concentrating more or less numerous enterprises and establishments which previously to the formation of the combination were carried on separately.

It is universally conceded that combinations which engross or control the market of any particular kind of merchandise or commodity necessary to the general community, by suppressing natural and ordinary competition, whereby prices are unduly enhanced to the general consumer, are obnoxious not only to the common law but also the public welfare. There must be a remedy for the evils involved in such organization. If the present law can be extended more certainly to control or check these monopolies or trusts it should be done without delay. Whatever power the Congress possesses over this most important subject should be promptly ascertained and asserted.

President Harrison in his annual message of Dec. 3, 1889, says:

"Earnest attention should be given by Congress to a consideration of the question how far the restraint of those combinations of capital commonly called 'trusts' is matter of Federal jurisdiction. When organized, as they often are, to crush out all healthy competition and to monopolize the production or sale of an article of commerce and of general use, they are dangerous conspiracies against the public good, and should be made the subject of prohibitory and even penal legislation."

An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies was passed by Congress on the 2d of July, 1890. The provisions of this statute are comprehensive and stringent. It declares every contract or combination in the form of a trust or otherwise, or conspiracy in the restraint of trade or commerce among the several States or with foreign nations, to be unlawful. To denominate as a criminal every person who makes any such contract or engages in any such combination or conspiracy, and provides a punishment by fine or imprisonment. It invests the several Circuit Courts of the United States with jurisdiction to prevent and restrain violations of the act, and makes it the duty of the several United States District Attorneys, under the direction of the Attorney General, to institute proceedings in equity to prevent and restrain such violations. It further confers upon any person who shall be injured in his business or property by any other person or corporation by reason of anything forbidden or declared to be unlawful by the act the power to sue therefor in any Circuit Court of the United States without respect to the amount in controversy, and to recover threefold the damages by him sustained and the costs of the suit, including reasonable attorney fees. It will be perceived that the act is aimed at every kind of combination in the nature of a trust or monopoly in restraint of interState or international commerce.

The prosecution by the United States of offenses under the act of 1890 has been frequently resorted to in the Federal courts, and notable efforts in the restraint of interState commerce, such as the Trans-Missouri Freight Association and the Joint Traffic Association, have been successfully opposed and suppressed.

President Cleveland, in his annual message of Dec. 7, 1896—more than six years subsequent to the enactment of this law—after stating the evils of these trust combinations, says:

"Though Congress has attempted to deal with this matter by legislation, the laws passed for that purpose thus far have proved ineffective, not because of any lack of disposition or attempt to enforce them, but simply because the laws themselves as interpreted by the courts do not reach the difficulty. The insufficiencies of existing laws can be remedied by further legislation it should be done. The fact must be recognized, however, that all Federal legislation on this subject may fall short of its purpose because of inherent obstacles, and also because of the complex character of our governmental system, which, while making the Federal authority supreme within its sphere, has carefully limited that sphere by metes and bounds which cannot be transgressed. The decision of our highest court on this precise question renders it quite doubtful whether the evils of trusts and monopolies can be adequately treated through Federal action unless they seek directly and purposely to include in their objects transportation or intercourse between States or between the United States and foreign countries.

"It does not follow, however, that this is the limit of the remedy that may be applied. Even though it may be found that Federal authority is not broad enough to fully reach the case, there can be no doubt of the power of the several States to act effectively in the premises, and there should be no reason to doubt their willingness to judiciously exercise such power."

The State legislation to which President Cleveland looked for relief from the evils of trusts has failed to accomplish fully that object. This is probably due to a great extent to the fact that different States take different views as to the proper way to discriminate between evil and injurious combinations and those associations which are beneficial and necessary to the business prosperity of the country. The great diversity of treatment in different States arising from this cause and the intimate relations of all parts of the country to each other without regarding State lines in the conduct of business have made the enforcement of State laws difficult.

It is apparent that uniformity of legislation upon this subject in the several States is much to be desired. It is to be hoped that such uniformity, founded in a wise and just discrimination between what is injurious and what is useful and necessary in business operations, may be obtained, and that means may be found for the Congress within the limitations of its Constitutional power to so supplement an effective code of State legislation as to make a complete system of laws throughout the United States adequate to compel a general observance of the salutary rules to which I have referred.

The whole question is so important and far-reaching that I am sure no part of it will be lightly considered, but every phase of it will have the studied deliberation of the Congress, resulting in wise and judicious action.

FOREIGN RELATIONS DISCUSSED.

A review of our relations with foreign States is presented, with such recommendations as are deemed appropriate.

The long-pending boundary dispute between the Argentine Republic and Chile was settled in March last by the award of an arbitral commission, on which the United States Minister at Buenos Ayres served as umpire.

Progress has been made toward the conclusion of a convention of extradition with the Argentine Republic. Having been advised and consented to by the United States Senate and ratified by Argentina, it only awaits the adjustment of some slight changes in the text before exchange.

In my last annual message I adverted to the claim of the Austro-Hungarian Government for indemnity for the killing of certain Austrian and Hungarian subjects by the authorities of the State of Pennsylvania, at Lattimer, while suppressing an unlawful tumult of miners, Sept. 10, 1897. In view of the verdict of acquittal rendered by the court before which the Sheriff and his deputies were tried for murder, and following the established doctrine that the Government may not be held accountable for injuries suffered by individuals at the hands of the public authorities while acting in the line of duty in suppressing disturbance of the pubic peace, this Government, after due consideration of the claim advanced by the Austro-Hungarian Government, was constrained to decline liability to indemnify the sufferers.

It is gratifying to be able to announce that the Belgian Government has mitigated the restrictions on the importation of cattle from the United States, to which I referred in my last annual message.

Having been invited by Belgium to participate in a congress held at Brussels to revise the provisions of the general act of July 2, 1890, for the repression of the African slave trade, to which the United States was a signatory party, this Government preferred not to be represented by a plenipotentiary, but reserved the right of accession to the results. Notable changes were made, those especially concerning this country being in the line of the increased restriction of the deleterious trade in spirituous liquors with the native tribes, which this Government has from the outset urgently advocated. The amended general act will be laid before the Senate, with a view to its advice and consent.

Early in the year the peace of Bolivia was disturbed by a successful insurrection. The United States Minister remained at his post, attending to the American interests in that quarter, and using besides his good offices for the protection of the interests of British subjects in the absence of their national representative. On the establishment of the new Government our Minister was directed to enter into relations therewith.

Gen. Pando was elected President of Bolivia on Oct. 23.

Our representative has been instructed to use all permissible friendly endeavors to induce the Government of Bolivia to amend its marriage laws so as to give legal status to the non-Catholic and civil marriages of aliens within its jurisdiction, and strong hopes are entertained that the Bolivian law in this regard will be brought, as was that of Peru some years ago, into harmony with the general practice of modern States.

A convention of extradition with Brazil, signed May 14, 1897, has been ratified by the Brazilian Legislature.

During the past Summer two National ships of the United States have visited Brazilian ports on a friendly mission and been cordially received. The voyage of the Wilmington up the Amazon River gave rise to a passing misunderstanding, owing to confusion in obtaining permission to visit the interior and make surveys in the general interest of navigation, but the incident found a ready adjustment in harmony with the close relations of amity which this Government has always sedulously sought to cultivate with the commonwealths of the Western Continent.

The claim growing out of the seizure of the American-owned newspaper, The Panama Star and Herald, by the authorities of Colombia has been settled after a controversy of several years by an agreement assessing at $30,000 the indemnity to be paid by the Colombian Government, in three installments of $10,000 each.

The good-will of Colombia toward our country has been testified anew by the cordial extension of facilities to the Nicaraguan Canal Commission in their approaching investigation of the Panama Canal and other projected routes across the Isthmus of Darien.

Toward the end of October an insurrectionary disturbance developed in the Colombian Republic. This movement has thus far not attained any decisive result, and is still in progress.

Discussion of the questions raised by the action of Denmark in imposing restrictions on the importation of American meats has continued without substantial result in our favor.

The neighboring island republic of Santo Domingo has lately been the scene of revolution, following a long period of tranquility. It began with the killing of President Heureaux in July last, and culminated in the relinquishment by the succeeding Vice President of the reins of the Government to the insurgents. The first act of the provisional Government was the calling of a Presidential and constituent election. Juan Isidro Jimenes, having been elected President, was inaugurated on the 14th of November. Relations have been entered into with the newly established Government.

The experimental association of Nicaragua, Honduras, and Salvador, under the title of the Greater Republic of Central America, when apparently on the threshold of a complete federal organization by the adoption of a Constitution and the formation of a national Legislature, was disrupted in the last days of November, 1898, by the withdrawal of Salvador. Thereupon Nicaragua and Honduras abandoned the joint compact, each resuming its former independent sovereignty. This was followed by the reception of Minister Merry by the Republics of Nicaragua and Salvador, while Minister Hunter in turn presented his credentials to the Government of Honduras, thus reverting to the old distribution of the diplomatic agencies of the United States in Central America, for which our existing statutes provide. A Nicaraguan Envoy has been accredited to the United States.

An insurrectionary movement under Gen. Reyes broke out at Bluefields in Feoruary last and for a time exercised actual control in the Mosquito territory. The Detroit was promptly sent thither for the protection of American interests. After few weeks the Reyes Government renounced the conflict, giving place to the restored supremacy of Nicaragua. During the interregnum certain public dues accruing under Nicaraguan law were collected from American merchants by the authorities for the time being in effective administration. Upon the titular Government regaining power a second payment of these dues was demanded. Controversy arose touching the validity of the original payment of the debt to the de facto regent of the territory. An arrangement was effected in April last by the United States Minister and the Foreign Secretary of Nicaragua whereby the amounts of the duplicate payments were deposited with the British Consul pending an adjustment of the matter by direct agreement between the Governments of the United States and Nicaragua. The controversy is still unsettled.

ISTHMIAN CANAL RECOMMENDED

The contract of the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua was declared forfeited by the Nicaraguan Government on the 10th of October, on the ground of non-fulfillment within the 10 years' term stipulated in the contract. The Maritime Canal Company has lodged a protest against this action, alleging rights in the premises which appear worthy of consideration. This Government expects that Nicaragua will afford the protestants a full and fair hearing upon the merits of the case.

The Nicaragua Canal Commission, which had been engaged upon the work of examination and survey for a ship canal route across Nicaragua, having completed its labors and made its report, was dissolved on May 31, and on June 10 a new commission, known as the Isthmian Canal Commission, was organized under the terms of the act approved March 3, 1899, for the purpose of examining the American isthmus with a view to determining the most practicable and feasible route for a ship canal across that isthmus, with its probable cost and other essential details.

This commission, under the Presidency of Rear Admiral John G. Walker, United States Navy, (retired,) entered promptly upon the work intrusted to it, and is now carrying on examinations in Nicaragua, along the route of the Panama Canal, and in Darien from the Atlantic, in the neighborhood of the Atrato River, to the Bay of Panama, on the Pacific side. Good progress has been made, but under the law a comprehensive and complete investigation is called for, which will require much labor and considerable time for its accomplishment. The work will be prosecuted as expeditiously as possible and a report made at the earliest practicable date.

The great importance of this work cannot be too often or too strongly pressed upon the attention of the Congress. In my message of a year ago I expressed my views of the necessity of a canal which would link the two great oceans, to which I again invite your consideration. The reasons then presented for early action are even stronger now.

FRIENDSHIP OF CHILE.

A pleasing incident in the relations of this Government with that of Chile occurred in the generous assistance given to the warship Newark when in distress in Chilean waters. Not alone in this way has the friendly disposition of Chile found expression. That country has acceded to the convention for the establishment of the Bureau of the American Republics, in which organization every independent State of the continent now shares.

The exchange of ratifications of a convention for the revival of the United States and Chilean Claims Commission and for the adjudication of claims heretofore presented but not determined during the life of the previous commission, has been delayed by reason of the necessity for fresh action by the Chilean Senate upon the amendments attached to the ratification of the treaty by the United States Senate. This formality is soon to be accomplished.

DISTURBANCES IN CHINA.

In view of disturbances in the populous provinces of Northern China, where are many of our citizens, and of the imminence of disorder near the capital and toward the seaboard, a guard of marines was landed from the Boston and stationed during last Winter in the legation compound at Peking. With the restoration of order this protection was withdrawn.

The interests of our citizens in that vast empire have not been neglected during the past year. Adequate protection has been secured for our missionaries and some injuries to their property have been redressed.

American capital has sought and found various opportunities of competing to carry out the internal improvements which the Imperial Government is wisely encouraging, and to develop the natural resources of the empire. Our trade with China has continued to grow, and our commercial rights under existing treaties have been everywhere maintained during the past year, as they will be in the future.

The extension of the area open to international and foreign settlement at Shanghai and the opening of the ports of Nanking, Tsing-Tao, (Kiao-Chau,) and Ta-Lien-Wan to foreign trade and settlement will doubtless afford American enterprise additional facilities and new fields, of which it will not be slow to take advantage.

In my message to Congress of Dec. 5, 1898, I urged that the recommendations which had been made to the Speaker of the House of Representatives by the Secretary of the Treasury on the 14th of June, 1898, for an appropriation for a commission to study the commercial and industrial conditions of the Chinese Empire and report as to the opportunities for, and obstacles to, the enlargement of markets in China for the raw products and manufactures of the United States, should receive at your hands the consideration which its importance and timeliness merited, but the Congress failed to take action.

I now renew this recommendation, as the importance of the subject has steadily grown since it was first submitted to you, and no time should be lost in studying for ourselves the resources of this great field for American trade and enterprise.

FRANCE AND THE EXPOSITION.

The death of President Faure in February last called forth those sincere expressions of sympathy which befit the relations of two republics as closely allied by unbroken historic ties as are the United States and France.

Preparations for the representation of the industries, arts, and products of the United States at the World's Exposition to be held in Paris next year continue on an elaborate and comprehensive scale, thanks to the generous appropriation provided by Congress, and to the friendly interest the French Government has shown in furthering a typical exhibit of American progress.

There has been allotted to the United States a considerable addition of space, which, while placing our country in the first rank among exhibitors, does not suffice to meet the increasingly urgent demands of our manufacturers. The efforts of the Commissioner General are ably directed toward a strictly representative display of all that most characteristically marks American achievement in the inventive arts and most adequately shows the excellence of our natural productions.

In this age of keen rivalry among nations for mastery in commerce, the doctrine of evolution and the survival of the fittest must be as inexorable in their operation as they are positive in the results they bring about. The place won in the struggle by an industrial people can only be held by unrelaxed endeavor and constant advance in achievement. The present extraordinary impetus in every line of American exportation and the astounding increase in the volume and value of our share in the world's markets may not be attributed to accidental conditions.

The reasons are not far to seek. They lie deep in our National character and find expression year by year in every branch of handicraft, in every new device whereby the materials we so abundantly produce are subdued to the artisan's will and made to yield the largest, most practical, and most beneficial return. The American exhibit at Paris should, I am confident will, be an open volume, whose lessons of skillfully directed endeavor, unfaltering energy, and consummate performance may be read by all on every page, thus spreading abroad a clearer knowledge of the worth of our productions and the justice of our claim to an important place in the marts of the world. To accomplish this by judicious selection, by recognition of paramount merit in whatever walk of trade or manufacture it may appear, and by orderly classification and attractive installation is the task of our commission.

The United States Government Building is approaching completion, and no effort will be spared to make it worthy, in beauty, in architectural plan, and in completeness of display, to represent our Nation. It has been suggested that a permanent building of similar or appropriate design be erected on a convenient site, already given by the municipality, near the exposition grounds, to serve in commemoration of the part taken by this country in this great enterprise, as an American National Institute, for our countrymen resorting to Paris for study.

I am informed by our Commissioner General that we shall have in the American sections at Paris over 7,000 exhibitors, from every State in our country, a number ten times as great as those which were represented at Vienna in 1873, six times as many as those in Paris in 1878, and four times as many as those who exhibited in Paris in 1889. This statement does not include the exhibits from either Cuba, Puerto Rico, or Hawaii, for which arrangements have been made.

A number of important international congresses on special topics affecting public interest are proposed to be held in Paris next Summer in connection with the exposition. Efforts will be made to have the several technical branches of our Administration efficiently represented at those conferences, each in its special line, and to procure the largest possible concourse of State representatives, particularly at the congresses of public charity and of medicine.

GERMANY'S FRIENDLY ATTITUDE

Our relations with Germany continue to be most cordial. The increasing intimacy of direct association has been marked during the year by the granting permission in April for the landing on our shores of a cable from Borkum Emden, on the North Sea, by way of the Azores, and also by the conclusion on Sept. 2 of a parcels post convention with the German Empire.

In all that promises closer relations of intercourse and commerce and a better understanding between two races having so many traits in common, Germany can be assured of the most cordial co-operation of this Government and people. We may be rivals in many material paths, but our rivalry should be generous and open, ever aiming toward the attainment of larger results and the mutually beneficial advancement of each in the line of its especial adaptabilities.

The several Governments of the empire seem reluctant to admit the natural excellence of our food products and to accept the evidence we constantly tender of the care with which their purity is guarded by rigid inspection from the farm, through the slaughter house and the packing establishments, to the port of shipment. Our system of control over exported food staples invites examination from any quarter and challenges respect by its efficient thoroughness.

It is to be hoped that in time the two Governments will act in common accord toward the realization of their common purpose to safeguard the public health and to insure the purity and wholesomeness of all food products imported by either country from the other. Were the Congress to authorize an invitation to Germany, in connection with the pending reciprocity negotiations, for the constitution of a joint commission of scientific experts and practical men of affairs to conduct a searching investigation of food production and exportation in both countries and report to their respective Legislatures for the adoption of such remedial measures as they might recommend for either, the way might be open for the desirable result indicated.

Efforts to obtain for American life insurance companies a full hearing as to their business operations in Prussia have, after several years of patient representation, happily succeeded, and one of the most important American companies has been granted a concession to continue business in that kingdom.

I am also glad to announce that the German insurance companies have been readmitted by the Superintendent of Insurance to do business in the State of New York.

Subsequent to the exchange of our peace treaty with Spain, Germany acquired the Caroline Islands by purchase, paying therefor $5,000,000. Assurances have been received from the German Government that the rights of American missionaries and traders there will be considerately observed.

ALASKAN BOUNDARY QUESTION.

In my last annual message I referred to the pending negotiations with Great Britain in respect to the Dominion of Canada. By means of an executive agreement a joint high commission had been created for the purpose of adjusting all unsettled questions between the United States and Canada, embracing twelve subjects, among which were the questions of the fur seals, the fisheries of the coast and contiguous inland waters, the Alaskan boundary, the transit of merchandise in bond, the alien labor laws, mining rights, reciprocity in trade, revision of the agreement respecting naval vessels in the great lakes, a more complete marking of parts of the boundary, provision for the conveyance of criminals, for wrecking and salvage.

Much progress had been made by the commission toward the adjustment of many of these questions, when it became apparent that an irreconcilable difference of views was entertained respecting the delimitation of the Alaskan boundary. In the failure of an agreement as to the meaning of Articles III. and IV. of the treaty of 1825 between Russia and Great Britain, which defined the boundary between Alaska and Canada, the American Commissioners proposed that the subject of the boundary be laid aside and that the remaining questions of difference be proceeded with, some of which were so far advanced as to assure the probability of a settlement. This being declined by the British Commissioners, an adjournment was taken until the boundary should be adjusted by the two Governments. The subject has been receiving the careful attention which its importance demands, with the result that a modus vivendi for provisional demarcations in the region about the head of Lynn Canal has been agreed upon, and it is hoped that the negotiations now in progress between the two Governments will end in an agreement for the establishment and delimitation of a permanent boundary.

Apart from these questions growing out of our relationship with our northern neighbor, the most friendly disposition and ready agreement have marked the discussion of numerous matters arising in the vast and intimate intercourse of the United States with Great Britain.

SOUTH AFRICAN WAR.

This Government has maintained an attitude of neutrality in the unfortunate contest between Great Britain and the Boer States of Africa. We have remained faithful to the precept of avoiding entangling alliances as to affairs not of a direct concern. Had circumstances suggested that the parties to the quarrel would have welcomed any kindly expression of the hope of the American people that war might be averted good offices would have been gladly tendered. The United States representative at Pretoria was early instructed to see that all neutral American interests be respected by the combatants. This has been an easy task in view of the positive declarations of both British and Boer authorities that the personal and property rights of our citizens should be observed.

Upon the withdrawal of the British agent from Pretoria, the United States Consul was authorized, upon the request of the British Government and with the assent of the South African and Orange Free State Governments, to exercise the customary good offices of a neutral for the care of the British interests. In the discharge of this function I am happy to say that abundant opportunity has been afforded to show the impartiality of this Government toward both the combatants.

LYNCHING OF ALIENS.

For the fourth time in the present decade question has arisen with the Government of Italy in regard to the lynching of Italian subjects. The latest of these deplorable events occurred at Tallulah, La., whereby five unfortunates of Italian origin were taken from jail and hanged.

The authorities of the State and a representative of the Italian Embassy have separately investigated the occurrence, with dissimilar results, particularly as to the alleged citizenship of the victims, and it not appearing that the State had been able to discover and punish the violators of the law, an independent investigation has been set on foot, through the agency of the Department of State, and is still in progress. The result will enable the Executive to treat the question with the Government of Italy in a spirit of fairness and justice. A satisfactory solution will doubtless be reached.

The recurrence of these distressing manifestations of blind mob fury directed at dependents or natives of a foreign country suggests that the contingency has arisen for action by Congress in the direction of conferring upon the Federal courts jurisdiction in this class of international cases where the ultimate responsibility of the Federal Government may be involved. The suggestion is not new. In his annual message of Dec. 9, 1891, my predecessor, President Harrison, said:

"It would, I believe, be entirely competent for Congress to make offenses against the treaty rights of foreigners domiciled in the United States cognizable in the Federal courts. This has never been done, and the Federal officers and courts have no power in such cases to intervene either for the protection of a foreign citizen or for the punishment of his slayers. It seems to me to follow, in this state of the law, that the officers of the State charged with police and judicial powers in such cases must, in the consideration of international suits growing out of such incidents be regarded in such sense as Federal agents as to make this Government answerable for their acts in cases where it would be answerable if the United States had used its Constitutional power to define and punish crimes against treaty rights."

A bill to provide for the punishment of violations of treaty rights of aliens was introduced in the Senate in March, 1892, and reported favorably March 30. Having doubtless in view the language of that part of Article III. of the treaty of Feb. 26, 1871, between the United States and Italy, which stipulates that "The citizens of each of the high contracting parties shall receive, in the States and Territories of the other, most constant protection and security for their persons and property, and shall enjoy in this respect the same rights and privileges as are or shall be granted to the natives, on their submitting themselves to the conditions imposed upon the natives," the bill so introduced and reported provided that any act committed in a State or Territory of the United States in violation of the rights of a citizen or subject of a foreign country secured to such citizen or subject by treaty between the United States and such foreign country and constituting a crime under the laws of the State or Territory shall constitute a like crime against the United States and be cognizable in the Federal courts. No action was taken by Congress in the matter.

I earnestly recommend that the subject be taken up anew and acted upon during the present session. The necessity for some such provision abundantly appears. Precedent for constituting a Federal jurisdiction in criminal cases, where aliens are sufferers, is rationally deducible from the existing statute, which gives to the District and Circuit Courts of the United States jurisdiction of civil suits brought by aliens where the amount involved exceeds a certain sum. If such jealous solicitude be shown for alien rights in cases of merely civil and pecuniary import, how much greater should be the public duty to take cognizance of matters affecting the life and the rights of aliens under the settled principles of international law, no less than under treaty stipulation, in cases of such transcendent wrong-doing as mob murder, especially when experience has shown that local justice is too often helpless to punish the offenders?

After many years of endeavor on the part of this Government to that end the Italian Government has consented to enter into negotiations for a naturalization convention, having for one of its objects the regulation of the status of Italians, (except those of an age for active military service,) who, having been naturalized in the United States, may revisit Italy. It is hoped that with the mutually conciliatory spirit displayed a successful conclusion will be reached.

COMMERCE WITH JAPAN.

The treaty of commerce and navigation between the United States and Japan on Nov. 22, 1894, took effect in accordance with the terms of its Nineteenth Article, on the 17th of July last, simultaneously with the enforcement of like treaties with the other powers, except France, whose convention did not go into operation until Aug. 4, the United States being, however, granted up to that date all the privileges and rights accorded to French citizens under the old French treaty. By this notable conventional reform, Japan's position as a fully independent sovereign power is assured, control being gained of taxation, customs revenues, judicial administration, coasting trade, and all other domestic functions of government, and foreign extra-territorial rights being renounced.

Comprehensive codes of civil and criminal procedure, according to Western methods, public instruction, patents and copyrights, municipal administration, including jurisdiction over the former foreign settlements, customs tariffs and procedure, public health and other administrative measures have been proclaimed. The working of the new system has given rise to no material complaints on the part of American citizens or interests, a circumstance which attests the ripe consideration with which the change has been prepared.

Valuable assistance was rendered by the Japanese authorities to the United States transport ship Morgan City, while stranded at Kobe. Permission has been granted to land and pasture army horses at Japanese ports of call on the way to the Philippine Islands. These kindly evidences of goodwill are highly appreciated.

NEED OF A PACIFIC CABLE.

The Japanese Government has shown a lively interest in the proposition of the Pacific Cable Company to add to its projected cable lines to Hawaii, Guam, and the Philippines, a branch connection with the coast of Japan. It would be a gratifying consummation were the utility of the contemplated scheme enhanced by bringing Japan and the United States into direct telegraphic relation.

Without repeating the observations of my special message of Feb. 10, 1899, concerning the necessity of a cable to Manila, I respectfully invite attention to it.

I recommend that in case the Congress should not take measures to bring about this result by direct action of the Government, the Postmaster General be authorized to invite competitive bids for the establishment of a cable; the company making the best responsible bid to be awarded the contract; the successful company to give ample bonds to insure the completion of the work within a reasonable time.

INTIMACY WITH MEXICO.

The year has been marked by constant increase in the intimacy of our relations with Mexico and in the magnitude of mutually advantageous interchanges. This Government has omitted no opportunity to show its strong desire to develop and perpetuate the ties of cordiality now so long happily unbroken.

Following the termination on Jan. 20, 1899, by Mexico of the convention of extradition of Dec. 11, 1861, a new treaty, more in accordance with the ascertained needs of both countries, was signed Feb. 22, 1899, and exchanged in the City of Mexico on the 22d of April last. Its operation thus far has been effective and satisfactory. A recent case has served to test the application of its Fourth Article, which provides that neither party shall be bound to deliver up its own citizens, but that the executive authority of each shall have the power to deliver them up if in its discretion it be deemed proper to do so.

The extradition of Mrs. Mattie Rich, a citizen of the United States, charged with homicide committed in Mexico, was, after mature consideration, granted by me in the conviction that the ends of justice would be thereby subserved. Similar action, on appropriate occasion, by the Mexican Executive will not only tend to accomplish the desire of both Governments that grave crimes go not unpunished, but also to repress lawlessness along the border of the two countries. The new treaty stipulates that neither Government shall assume jurisdiction in the punishment of crimes committed exclusively within the territory of the other. This will obviate in future the embarrassing controversies which have heretofore arisen through Mexico's assertion of a claim to try and punish an American citizen for an offense committed within the jurisdiction of the United States.

The International Water Boundary Commission, organized by the convention of March 1, 1889, for the adjustment of questions affecting the Rio Grande frontier, has not yet completed its labors. A further extension of its term for one year, until Dec. 24, 1899, was effected by a convention signed Dec. 2, 1898, and exchanged and proclaimed in February last.

An invitation extended to the President of Mexico to visit Chicago in October, on the occasion of laying the cornerstone of the United States Government Building in that city, was cordially accepted by him, with the necessary consent of the Mexican Congress, but the illness of a member of his family prevented his attendance. The Minister of Foreign Relations, however, came as the personal representative of President Diaz, and in that high character was duly honored.

RELATIONS WITH RUSSIA.

Claims growing out of the seizure of American sealing vessels in Bering Sea have been under discussion with the Government of Russia for several years, with the recent happy result of an agreement to submit them to the decision of a single arbitrator. By this act Russia affords proof of her adherence to the beneficent principle of arbitration which her Plenipotentiary conspicuously favored at The Hague disarmament conference, when it was advocated by the representatives of the United States.

A suggestion for a permanent exposition of our products and manufactures in Russia, although not yet fully shaped, has been so cordially welcomed by the Imperial Government that it may not inaptly take a fitting place in whatever legislation the Congress may adopt looking to the enlargement of our commercial opportunities abroad.

AGREEMENT ON SAMOA.

Important events have occurred in the Samoan Islands. The election, according to the laws and customs of Samoa, of a successor to the late King, Malietoa Laupepa, developed a contest as to the validity of the result, which issue, by the terms of the general act, was to be decided by the Chief Justice. Upon his rendering a judgment in favor of Malietoa Tanu, the rival Chief, Mataafa, took up arms. The active intervention of American and British warships became imperative to restore order, at the cost of sanguinary encounters. In this emergency a joint commission of representatives of the United States, Germany, and Great Britain was sent to Samoa to investigate the situation and provide a temporary remedy. By its active efforts a peaceful solution was reached for the time being the kingship being abolished and a provisional Government established. Recommendations unanimously made by the commission for a permanent adjustment of the Samoan question were taken under consideration by the three powers parties to the general act. But the more they were examined the more evident it became that a radical change was necess in this resolution is of the highest honorable obligation and must be sacredly kept.

I believe that substantial progress has been made in this direction. All the administrative measures adopted in Cuba have aimed to fit it for a regenerated existence by enforcing the supremacy of law and justice, by placing wherever practicable the machinery of administration in the hands of the inhabitants, by instituting needed sanitary reforms, by spreading education, by fostering industry and trade, by inculcating public morality, and, in short, by taking every rational step to aid the Cuban people to attain to that place of self-conscious respect and self-reliant unity which fits an enlightened community for self-government within its own sphere, while enabling it to fulfill all outward obligations.

This Nation has assumed before the world a grave responsibility for the future good government of Cuba. We have accepted a trust the fulfillment of which calls for the sternest integrity of purpose and the exercise of the highest wisdom. The new Cuba yet to arise from the ashes of the past must needs be bound to us by ties of singular intimacy and strength if its enduring welfare is to be assured. Whether those ties shall be organic or conventional, the destinies of Cuba are in some rightful form and manner irrevocably linked with our own, but how and how far is for the future to determine in the ripeness of events. Whatever be the outcome we must see to it that free Cuba be a reality, not a name, a perfect entity, not a hasty experiment bearing within itself the elements of failure. Our mission, to accomplish which we took up the wager of battle, is not to be fulfilled by turning adrift any loosely framed commonwealth to face the vicissitudes which too often attend weaker States whose natural wealth and abundant resources are offset by the incongruities of their political organization and the recurring occasions for internal rivalries to sap their strength and dissipate their energies. The greatest blessing which can come to Cuba is the restoration of her agricultural and industrial prosperity, which will give employment to idle men and re-establish the pursuits of peace. This is her chief and immediate need.

On the 10th of August last an order was made for the taking of the census in the island, to be completed on the 30th of November. By the treaty of peace the Spanish people on the island have until April 11, 1900, to elect whether they will remain citizens of Spain or become citizens of Cuba. Until then it cannot be definitely ascertained who shall be entitled to participate in the formation of the Government of Cuba. By that time the results of the census will have been tabulated, and we shall proceed to provide for elections which will commit the municipal governments of the island to the officers elected by the people. The experience thus acquired will prove of great value in the formation of a representative convention of the people to draft a constitution and establish a general system of independent government for the island. In the meantime, and so long as we exercise control over the island, the products of Cuba should have a market in the United States on as good terms and with as favorable rates of duty as are given to the West India islands under treaties of reciprocity which shall be made.

For the relief of the distressed in the Island of Cuba the War Department has issued supplies to destitute persons through the offices of the army, which have amounted to 5,493,000 rations, at a cost of $1,417,354.07.

To promote the disarmament of the Cuban volunteer army, and in the interest of public peace and the welfare of the people, the sum of $75 was paid to each Cuban soldier borne upon the authenticated rolls, on condition that he should deposit his arms with the authorities designated by the United States. The sum thus disbursed aggregated $2,547,750, which was paid from the emergency fund provided by the act of Jan. 5, 1899, for that purpose.

Out of the Cuban island revenues during the six months ending June 30, 1899, $1,712,014.20 was expended for sanitation, $293,881.70 for charities and hospitals, and $88,944.03 for aid to the destitute.

AT PEACE WITH SPAIN.

Following the exchange of ratifications of the treaty of peace, the two Governments accredited Ministers to each other, Spain sending to Washington the Duke of Arcos, an eminent diplomatist, previously stationed in Mexico, while the United States transferred to Madrid the Hon. Bellamy Storer, its Minister at Brussels. This was followed by the respective appointment of Consuls, thereby fully resuming the relations interrupted by the war. In addition to its Consular representation in the United States, the Spanish Government has appointed Consuls for Cuba, who have been provisionally recognized during the military administration of the affairs of that island.

Judicial intercourse between the courts of Cuba and Puerto Rico and of Spain has been established, as provided by the treaty of peace. The Cuban political prisoners in Spanish penal stations have been and are being released and returned to their homes, in accordance with Article VI. of the treaty. Negotiations are about to be had for defining the conventional relations between the two countries, which fell into abeyance by reason of the war. I trust that these will include a favorable arrangement for commercial reciprocity under the terms of Sections 3 and 4 of the current tariff act. In these, as in all matters of international concern, no effort will be spared to respond to the good disposition of Spain, and to cultivate in all practicable ways the intimacy which should prevail between two nations whose past history has so often and in so many ways been marked by sincere friendship and by community of interests.

I would recommend appropriate legislation in order to carry into execution Article VII. of the treaty of peace with Spain by which the United States assured the payment of certain claims for indemnity of its citizens against Spain.

CLAIMS AGAINST TURKEY.

The United States Minister to Turkey continues, under instructions, to press for a money payment in satisfaction of the just claims for injuries suffered by American citizens in the disorders of several years past and for wrongs done to them by the Ottoman authorities. Some of these claims are of many years' standing. This Government is hopeful of a general agreement in this regard.

In the Turkish Empire the situation of our citizens remains unsatisfactory. Our efforts during nearly forty years to bring about a convention of naturalization seem to be on the brink of final failure through the announced policy of the Ottoman Porte to refuse recognition of the alien status of native Turkish subjects naturalized abroad since 1869. Our statutes do not allow this Government to admit any distinction between the treatment of native and naturalized Americans abroad, so that ceaseless controversy arises in cases where persons owing in the eye of international law a dual allegiance are prevented from entering Turkey or are expelled after entrance. Our law in this regard contrasts with that of the European States. The British act, for instance, does not claim effect for the naturalization of an alien in the event of his return to his native country, unless the condition be realized by the law of that country or stipulated by treaty by it and the naturalizing State.

The arbitrary treatment in some instances of American productions in Turkey has attracted attention of late, notably in regard to our flour. Large shipments by the recently opened direct steamship line to Turkish ports have been denied entrance on the score that, although of standard composition and unquestioned purity, the flour was pernicious to health because of the deficient "elasticity," as indicated by antiquated and untrustworthy tests. Upon due protest by the American Minister, and it appearing that the act was a virtual discrimination against our product, the shipments in question were admitted. In these, as in all instances, wherever occurring, when American products may be subjected in a foreign country, upon specious pretexts, to discrimination compared with the like products of another country, this Government will use its earnest efforts to secure fair and equal treatment for its citizens and their goods. Failing this, it will not hesitate to apply whatever corrective may be provided by the statutes.

ANGLO-VENEZUELAN TREATY.

The international commission of arbitration, appointed under the Anglo-Venezuelan treaty of 1897, rendered an award on Oct. 3 last, whereby the boundary line between Venezuela and British Guiana is determined, thus ending a controversy which has existed for the greater part of the century. The award, as to which the arbitrators were unanimous, while it does not meet the extreme contention of either party, gives to Great Britain a large share of the interior territory in dispute and to Venezuela the entire mouth of the Orinoco, including Barima Point, and the Caribbean littoral for some distance to the eastward. The decision appears to be equally satisfactory to both parties.

Venezuela has once more undergone a revolution. The insurgents under Gen. Castro, after a sanguinary engagement in which they suffered much loss, rallied in the mountainous interior and advanced toward the capital. The bulk of the army having sided with the movement, President Andrade quitted Caracas, where Gen. Castro set up a provisional Government, with which our Minister and the representatives of other powers entered into diplomatic relations on the 20th of November, 1899.

RECIPROCITY AGREEMENTS.

The fourth section of the Tariff act approved July 24, 1897, appears to provide only for commercial treaties which should be entered into by the President, and also ratified by the Senate within two years from its passage. Owing to delays inevitable in negotiations of this nature, none of the treaties initiated under that section could be concluded in time for ratification by the Senate prior to its adjournment on the 4th of March last. Some of the pending negotiations, however, were near conclusion at that time, and the resulting conventions have since been signed by the plenipotentiary. Others, within both the third and fourth sections of the act, are still under consideration. Acting under the executive power of the Executive in respect to treaties, I have deemed it my duty, while observing the limitations of concession provided by the fourth section, to bring to a conclusion all pending negotiations, and submit them to the Senate for its advice and consent.

Conventions of reciprocity have been signed during the Congressional recess with Great Britain for the respective colonies of British Guiana, Barbados, Bermuda, Jamaica, and Turk's and Caicos Islands, and with the Republic of Nicaragua.

Important reciprocal conventions have also been concluded with France and with the Argentine Republic.

WORK OF CONSULAR OFFICERS.

In my last annual message the progress noted in the work of the diplomatic and Consular officers in collecting information as to the industries and commerce of other countries, and in the care and promptitude with which their reports are printed and distributed, has continued during the past year, with increasingly valuable results in suggesting new sources of demand for American products and in pointing out the obstacles still to be overcome in facilitating the remarkable expansion of our foreign trade. It will doubtless be gratifying to Congress to learn that the various agencies of the Department of State are co-operating in these endeavors with a zeal and effectiveness which are not only receiving the cordial recognition of our business interests, but are exciting the emulation of other Governments. In any rearrangement of the great and complicated work of obtaining official data of an economic character which Congress may undertake it is most important, in my judgment, that the results already secured by the efforts of the Department of State have been carefully considered with a view to a judicious development and increased utility to our export trade.

PAN-AMERICAN BUREAU.

The interest taken by the various States forming the international union of American republics in the work of its organic bureau is evidenced by the fact that for the first time since its creation in 1890 all the republics of South and Central America are now represented in it.

The unanimous recommendation of the international American conference, providing for the international union of American republics, stated that it should continue in force during a term of ten years from the date of its organization, and no country becoming a member of the union should cease to be a member until the end of said period of ten years, and unless twelve months before the expiration of said period a majority of the members of the union had given to the Secretary of State of the United States official notice of their wish to terminate the union at the end of its first period, that the union should continue to be maintained for another period of ten years, and thereafter, under the same conditions, for successive periods of ten years each.

The period for notification expired July 14, 1899, without any of the members having given the necessary notice of withdrawal.

Maintenance is therefore assured for the next ten years. In view of this fact and of the numerous questions of general interest and common benefit to all of the republics of America some of which were considered by the first international American conference, but not finally settled, and others which have since then grown to importance, it would seem expedient that the various republics constituting the union should be invited to hold at an early date another conference in the capital of one of the countries other than the United States, which has already enjoyed this honor.

The purely international character of the work being done by the bureau and the appreciation of its value are further emphasized by the active co-operation which the various Governments of the Latin-American republics and their diplomatic representatives in this capital are now exhibiting, and the zealous endeavors they are making to extend its field of usefulness, to promote through it commercial intercourse, and strengthen the bonds of amity and confidence between its various members and the nations of this continent.

EXPOSITION AT BUFFALO.

The act to encourage the holding of the Pan-American Exposition on the Niagara frontier, within the County of Erie or Niagara, in the State of New York, in the year 1901, was approved on March 3, 1899.

This exposition, which will be held in the City of Buffalo, in the near vicinity of the great Niagara cataract, and within a day's journey of which reside 40,000,000 of our people, will be confined entirely to the Western Hemisphere. Satisfactory assurances have already been given by the diplomatic representatives of Great Britain, Mexico, the Central and South American republics, and most of the States of the United States, that these countries and States will make a unique, interesting, and instructive exhibit, peculiarly illustrative of their material progress during the century which is about to close.

The law provides an appropriation of $500,000 for the purpose of making an exhibit at the exposition by the Government of the United States from its executive departments and from the Smithsonian Institution and National Museum, the United States Commission of Fish and Fisheries, the Department of Labor, and the Bureau of the American Republics. To secure a complete and harmonious arrangement of this Government exhibit, a Board of Management has already been created, and charged with the selection, purchase, preparation, transportation, arrangement, and safe keeping of the articles and materials to be exhibited. This board has been organized and has already entered upon the performance of its duties, as provided for by the law. I have every reason to hope and believe that this exposition will tend more firmly to cement the cordial relations between the nations of this continent.

PHILADELPHIA COMMERCIAL MUSEUMS.

In accordance with an act of Congress approved Dec. 21, 1898, and under the auspices of the Philadelphia Commercial Museum, a most interesting and valuable exposition of products and manufactures especially adapted to export trade was held in Philadelphia from the 14th of September to the 1st of December, 1899. The representative character of the exhibits and the widespread interest manifested in the special objects of the undertaking afford renewed encouragement to those who look confidently to the steady growth of our enlarged exportation of manufactured goods, which has been the most remarkable fact in the economic development of the United States in recent years. A feature of this exposition which is likely to become of permanent and increasing utility to our industries is the collection of samples of merchandise produced in various countries, with special reference to particular markets, providing practical object lessons to United States manufacturers as to qualities, styles, and prices of goods such as meet the special demands of consumers and may be exported with advantage.

In connection with the exposition, an international commercial congress was held, upon the invitation of the Philadelphia Commercial Museum, transmitted by the Department of State to the various foreign Governments, for an exchange of information and opinions with the view to the promotion of international trade. This invitation met with general and cordial acceptance, and the congress, which began its sessions at the exposition on the 13th of October, proved to be of great practical importance, from the fact that it developed a general recognition of the interdependence of nations in trade and a most gratifying spirit of accommodation with reference to the gradual removal of existing impediments to reciprocal relations, without injury to the industrial interest of either party.

HAGUE PEACE CONFERENCE.

In response to the invitation of his Majesty the Emperor of Russia, delegates from twenty-six countries were assembled at The Hague on the 18th of May as members of a conference in the interest of peace. The commission from the United States consisted of the Hon. Andrew D. White, the Hon. Seth Low, the Hon. Stanford Newel, Capt. Alfred T. Mahan, of the United States Navy, Capt. William Crozier of the United States Army, and the Hon. Frederick W. Holls, Secretary. The occasion seemed to be opportune for serious consideration of a plan for the pacific adjustment of international differences, a subject in which the American people have been deeply interested for many years, and a definite project for a permanent international tribunal was included in the instructions to the delegates of the United States.

The final act of the conference includes conventions upon the amelioration of the laws and customs of war on land, the adaptation to maritime warfare of the principles of the Geneva convention of 1864, and the extension of judicial methods to international cases. The convention for the pacific settlement of international conflicts embodies the leading features of the American plan, with such modifications as were rendered necessary by the great diversity of views and interests represented by the delegates. The four titles of the convention provide for the maintenance of general peace, the exercise of good offices and mediation, the formation of commissions of inquiry and international arbitration.

The mediation provided for by the convention is purely voluntary and advisory, and is intended to avoid any invasion or limitation of the sovereign rights of the adhering States. The commissions of inquiry proposed consist of delegations to be specifically constituted for particular purposes by means of conventions between the contesting parties, having for their object the clear understanding of international differences before resorting to the use of force. The provision for arbitration contemplates the formation of a permanent tribunal before which disputed cases may be brought for settlement by the mutual consent of the litigants in each separate case. The advantages of such a permanent tribunal and impromptu commissions of arbitration are conceived to be the actual existence of a competent court, prepared to administer justice, the greater economy resulting from a well-devised system, and the accumulated judicial skill and experience which such a tribunal would soon possess.

While earnestly promoting the idea of establishing a permanent international tribunal, the delegation of the United States was not unmindful of the inconveniences which might arise from an obtrusive exercise of mediation, and in signing the convention, carefully guarded the historic position of the United States by the following declaration:

"Nothing contained in this convention shall be so construed as to require the United States of America to depart from its traditional policy of not intruding upon, interfering with, or entangling itself in the political questions or policy or internal administration of any foreign State; nor shall anything contained in the said convention be construed to imply a relinquishment by the United States of America of its traditional attitude toward purely American questions."

Thus interpreted, the convention for the pacific settlement of international conflicts may be regarded as realizing the earnest desire of great numbers of American citizens, whose deep sense of justice, expressed in numerous resolutions and memorials, has urged them to labor for this noble achievement. The general character of this convention, already signed by the delegates of more than twenty sovereign States, further commends it to the favorable action of the Senate of the United States, whose ratification it still awaits.

WORK OF THE ARMY.

Since my last annual message, and in obedience to the acts of the Congress of April 22 and 26, 1898, the remaining volunteer force enlisted for the Spanish war, consisting of 34,834 regulars and 110,202 volunteers, with over 5,000 volunteer officers, has been discharged from the military service. Of the volunteers, 667 officers and 14,831 men were serving in the Philippines, and 1,050 of the regulars, who were entitled to be mustered out after the ratification of the treaty of peace. They voluntarily remained at the front until their places could be filled by new troops. They were returned home in the order in which they went to Manila, and are now all of them out of the service and in the ranks of citizenship. I recommend that the Congress provide a special medal of honor for the volunteers, regulars, sailors, and marines on duty in the Philippines who voluntarily remained in the service after their terms of enlistment had expired.

By the act of March 2, 1899, Congress gave authority to increase the regular army to a maximum not exceeding 65,000 enlisted men, and to enlist a force of 35,000 volunteers to be recruited from the country at large. By virtue of this authority the regular army has been increased to the number of 61,999 enlisted men and 2,248 officers, and new volunteer regiments have been organized aggregating 33,030 enlisted men and 1,524 officers. Two of these volunteer regiments are made up of colored men, with colored line officers. The new troops to take the places of those returning from the Philippines have been transported to Manila to the number of 581 officers and 26,322 enlisted men of the regular army and 594 officers and 15,388 enlisted men of the new volunteer force, while 504 officers and 14,119 men of the volunteer force are on the ocean en route to Manila.

The force now in Manila consists of 905 officers and 30,578 regulars and 594 officers and 15,388 of the volunteers, making an aggregate of 1,499 officers and 45,966 men. When the troops now under orders shall reach Manila the force in the archipelago will comprise 2,051 officers and 63,483 men. The muster out of the great volunteer army organized for the Spanish war and the creation of a new army, the transportation from Manila to San Francisco of those entitled to discharge, and the transportation of the new troops to take their places have been a work of great magnitude well and ably done, for which too much credit cannot be given the War Department.

During the past year we have reduced our force in Cuba and Puerto Rico. In Cuba we now have 334 officers and 10,796 enlisted men; in Puerto Rico, 87 officers and 2,855 enlisted men and a battalion of 400 men composed of native Puerto Ricans, while stationed throughout the United States are 910 officers and 17,317 men, and in Hawaii 12 officers and 453 enlisted men.

The operations of the army are fully presented in the report of the Secretary of War. I cannot withhold from officers and men the highest commendation for their soldierly conduct in giving proof of their willing sacrifices for their country, and the integrity and ability with which they have performed unusual and difficult duties in our island possessions.

In the organization of the volunteer regiments, authorized by the act of March 2, 1899, it was found that no provision had been made for Chaplains. This omission was doubtless from inadvertence. I recommended the early authorization for the appointment of one Chaplain for each of said regiments. These regiments are now in the Philippines, and it is important that immediate action be had.

MAILS FOR NEW POSSESSIONS.

In restoring peaceful conditions, orderly rule, and civic progress in Cuba, Puerto Rico, and, so far as practicable, in the Philippines, the rehabilitation of the Postal Service has been an essential and important part of the work. It became necessary to provide mail facilities both for our forces of occupation and for the native population. To meet this requirement has involved a substantial reconstruction. The existing systems were so fragmentary, defective, and inadequate that a new and comprehensive organization had to be created. American trained officials have been assigned to the directing and executive positions, while natives have been chiefly employed in making up the body of the force. In working out this plan the merit rule has been rigorously and faithfully applied.

The appointment of Director General of Posts of Cuba was given to an expert who had been Chief Post Office Inspector and Assistant Postmaster General, and who united large experience with administrative capacity. For the Postmastership at Havana the range of skilled and available men was scanned, and the choice fell upon one who had been twenty years in the service as Deputy Postmaster and Postmaster of a large city. This principle governed and determined the selection of the American officials sent not only to Cuba, but to Puerto Rico and the Philippines, and they were instructed to apply it so far as practicable in the employment of the natives as minor Postmasters and clerks. The postal system in Cuba, though remaining under the general guidance of the Postmaster General, was made essentially independent. It was felt that it should not be a burden upon the Postal Service of the United States, and provision was made that any deficit in the postal revenue should be a charge upon the general revenues of the island. Though Puerto Rico and the Philippines hold a different relation to the United States, yet, for convenience of administration, the same principle of an autonomous system has been extended by them. The development of the service in all of the islands has been rapid and successful. It has moved forward on American lines with free delivery, money order, and registry systems, and has given the people mail facilities far greater and more reliable than any they have ever before enjoyed. It is thus not only a vital agency of industrial, social, and business progress, but an important influence in diffusing a just understanding of the true spirit and character of American administration.

DOMESTIC POSTAL SERVICE.

The domestic Postal Service continues to grow with extraordinary rapidity. The expenditures and the revenues will each exceed $100,000,000 during the current year. Fortunately since the revival of prosperous times the revenues have grown much faster than the expenditures, and there is every indication that a short period will witness the obliteration of the annual deficit. In this connection the report of the Postmaster General embodies a statement of some evils which have grown up outside of the contemplation of law in the treatment of some classes of mail matter which wrongly exercise the privilege of the pound rate, and shows that if the matter had been properly classified and had paid the rate which it should have paid, instead of a postal deficit for the last fiscal year of $6,610,000 there would have been on one basis a surplus of $17,637,570, and on another of $5,733,838.

The reform thus suggested, in the opinion of the Postmaster General, would not only put the Postal Service at once on a self-sustaining basis, but would permit great and valuable improvements, and I commend the subject to the consideration of the Congress.

NEEDS OF THE NAVY.

The navy has maintained the spirit and high efficiency which have always characterized that service, and has lost none of the gallantry in heroic action which has signalized its brilliant and glorious past. The Nation has equal pride in its early and later achievements. Its habitual readiness for every emergency has won the confidence and admiration of the country. The people are interested in the continued preparation and prestige of the navy, and will justify liberal appropriations for its maintenance and improvement. The officers have shown peculiar adaptation for the performance of new and delicate duties which our recent war has imposed.

It cannot be doubted that Congress will at once make necessary provision for the armor plate for the vessels now under contract and building. Its attention is respectfully called to the report of the Secretary of the Navy, in which the subject is fully presented. I unite in his recommendation that the Congress enact such special legislation as may be necessary to enable the department to make contracts early in the coming year for armor of the best quality that can be obtained in this country for the Maine, Ohio, and Missouri, and that the provision of the act of March 3, 1899, limiting the price of armor to $300 per ton be removed. In the matter of naval construction Italy and Japan, of the great powers, laid down less tonnage in the year 1899 than this country, and Italy alone has less tonnage under construction. I heartily concur in the recommendations for the increase of the navy as suggested by the Secretary.

REPORT ON PATENTS.

Our future progress and prosperity depend upon our ability to equal, if not surpass, other nations in the enlargement and advance of science, industry, and commerce. To invention we must turn as one of the most powerful aids to the accomplishment of such a result. The attention of the Congress is directed to the report of the Commissioner of Patents, in which will be found valuable suggestions and recommendations.

PENSIONS AND PENSIONERS.

On the 30th of June, 1899, the pension roll of the United States numbered 991,519. These include the pensioners of the army and navy in all our wars. The number added to the rolls during the year was 40,991. The number dropped by reason of death, remarriage, minors by legal limitation, failure to claim within three years, and other causes was 43,186, and the number of claims disallowed was 107,919. During the year 89,054 pension certificates were issued, of which 37,077 were for new or original pensions. The amount disbursed for army and navy pensions during the year was $138,355,052.95, which was $1,651,461.61 less than the sum of the appropriations.

The Grand Army of the Republic at its recent National Encampment held in Philadelphia has brought to my attention and to that of the Congress the wisdom and justice of a modification of the third section of the act of June 27, 1890, which provides pensions for the widows of officers and enlisted men who served ninety days or more during the war of the rebellion and were honorably discharged; provided that such widows are without other means of support than their daily labor and were married to the soldier, sailor, or marine on account of whose service they claim pension prior to the date of the act.

The present holding of the department is that if the widow's income aside from her daily labor does not exceed in amount what her pension would be, to wit, $96 per annum, she would be deemed to be without other means of support than her daily labor, and would be entitled to a pension under this act; while if the widow's income independent of the amount received by her as the result of her daily labor exceeds $96, she would not be pensionable under the act. I am advised by the Commissioner of Pensions that the amount of the income allowed before title to pension would be barred has varied widely under different administrations of the Pension Office, as well as during different periods of the same administration, and has been the cause of just complaint and criticism.

With the approval of the Secretary of the Interior the Commissioner of Pensions recommends that, in order make the practice at all times uniform and to do justice to the dependent widow, the amount of income allowed independent of the proceeds of her daily labor should be not less than $250 per annum, and he urges that the Congress shall so amend the act as to permit the Pension Office to grant pensionable status to widows under the terms of the third section of the Act of June 27, 1890, whose income aside from the proceeds of daily labor is not in excess of $250 per annum. I believe this to be a simple act of justice, and heartily recommend it.

EDUCATION OF INDIANS.

The Dawes Commission reports that gratifying progress has been made in its work during the preceding year. The field work of enrollment of four of the nations has been completed. I recommend that Congress at an early day make liberal appropriation for educational purposes in the Indian Territory.

PREPARING FOR THE CENSUS.

In accordance with the act of Congress approved March 3, 1899, the preliminary work in connection with the Twelfth Census is now fully under way. The officers required for the proper administration of the duties imposed have been selected. The provision for securing a proper enumeration of the population, as well as to secure evidence of the industrial growth of the Nation, is broader and more comprehensive than any similar legislation in the past. The Director advises that every needful effort is being made to push this great work to completion in the time limited by the statute. It is believed that the Twelfth Census will emphasize our remarkable advance in all that pertains to National progress.

SALE OF PACIFIC ROADS.

Under the authority of the act of Congress approved July 7, 1898, the commission consisting of the Secretary of the Treasury, the Attorney General, and the Secretary of the Interior, has made an agreement of settlement, which has had my approval, of the indebtedness to the Government growing out of the issue of bonds to aid in the construction of the Central Pacific and Western Pacific Railroads. The agreement secures to the Government the principal and interest of said bonds, amounting to $58,812,715.48. There has been paid thereon $11,762,543.12, which has been covered into the Treasury, and the remainder, payable within ten years, with interest at the rate of 3 per cent. per annum, payable semi-annually, is secured by the deposit of an equal amount of first mortgage bonds of the Pacific Railway Companies. The amounts paid and secured to be paid to the Government on account of the Pacific Railroad subsidy claims are:

Union Pacific, cash	$58,448,223.75
Kansas Pacific, cash	6,303,000.00
Central and Western Pacific cash	11,798,314.14
Notes, secured	47,059,172.36
Kansas Pacific, dividends for deficiency due United States, cash	821,897.70
Making a total of $124,421,607.95.

The whole indebtedness was about $130,000,000, more than half of which consisted of accrued interest, for which sum the Government has realized the entire amount, less about $6,000,000, within a period of two years.

FOREST RESERVATIONS.

On June 30, 1898, there were thirty forest reservations, (exclusive of the Afognak Forest and Fish Culture Reserve in Alaska,) embracing an estimated area of 40,719,474 acres. During the past year two of the existing forest reserves, the Trabuco Canyon (California) and Black Hills, (South Dakota and Wyoming,) have been considerably enlarged, the area of the Mount Ranier Reserve, in the State of Washington, has been somewhat reduced, and six additional reserves have been established, namely, the San Francisco Mountains, (Arizona,) the Black Mesa, (Arizona,) Lake Tahoe, (California,) Gallatin, (Montana,) Gila River, (New Mexico,) and Fish Lake, (Utah,) the total estimated area of which is 5,205,775 acres. This makes at the present time a total of thirty-six forest reservations, embracing an estimated area of 46,021,899 acres. This estimated area is the aggregate acreage within the boundaries of the reserves. The lands actually reserved are, however, only the vacant public lands therein, and these have been set aside and reserved for sale or settlement in order that they may be of the greatest use to the people.

Protection of the National forests, inaugurated by the Department of the Interior in 1897, has been continued during the past year, and much has been accomplished in the way of preventing forest fires and the protection of the timber. There are now large tracts covered by forests which will eventually be reserved and set apart for forest use. Until that can be done, Congress should increase the appropriations for the work of protecting the forests.

AGRICULTURAL EDUCATION.

The Department of Agriculture is constantly consulting the needs of producers in all the States and Territories. It is introducing seeds and plants of great value and promoting fuller diversification of crops. Grains, grasses, fruits, legumes, and vegetables are imported for all parts of the United States. Under this encouragement the beet sugar factories multiply in the North and far West, semi-tropical plants are sent to the South, and congenial climates are sought for the choice productions of the Far East. The hybridizing of fruit trees and grains is conducted in the search for varieties adapted to exacting conditions. The introduction of tea gardens into the Southern States promises to provide employment for idle hands, as well as to supply the home market with tea. The subject of irrigation where it is of vital importance to the people is being carefully studied, steps are being taken to reclaim injured or abandoned lands, and information for the people along these lines is being printed and distributed.

Markets are being sought and opened up for surplus farm and factory products in Europe and in Asia. The outlook for the education of the young farmer through agricultural colleges and experiment stations, with opportunity given to specialize, in the Department of Agriculture, is very promising. The people of Hawaii, Puerto Rico, and the Philippine Islands should be helped by the establishment of experiment stations to a more scientific knowledge of the production of coffee, India rubber, and other tropical products, for which there is demand in the United States.

There is widespread interest in the improvement of our public highways at the present time, and the Department of Agriculture is co-operating with the people in each locality in making the best possible roads from local material and in experimenting with steel tracks. A more intelligent system of managing the forests of the country is being put in operation, and a careful study of the whole forestry problem is being conducted throughout the United States. A very extensive and complete exhibit of the agricultural and horticultural products of the United States is being prepared for the Paris Exposition.

ACQUISITION OF PHILIPPINES.

On the 10th of December, 1898, the treaty of peace between the United States and Spain was signed. It provided, among other things, that Spain should cede to the United States the archipelago known as the Philippine Islands, that the United States should pay to Spain the sum of $20,000,000, and that the civil rights and political status of the native inhabitants of the territories thus ceded to the United States should be determined by the Congress. The treaty was ratified by the Senate on the 6th of February, 1899, and by the Government of Spain on the 19th of March following. The ratifications were exchanged on the 11th of April and the treaty publicly proclaimed. On the 2d of March the Congress voted the sum contemplated by the treaty, and the amount was paid over to the Spanish Government on the 1st of May.

In this manner the Philippines came to the United States. The islands were ceded by the Government of Spain, which had been in undisputed possession of them for centuries. They were accepted not merely by our authorized Commissioners in Paris, under the direction of the Executive, but by the Constitutional and well-considered action of the representatives of the people of the United States in both houses of Congress. I had every reason to believe, and I still believe, that this transfer of sovereignty was in accordance with the wishes and the aspirations of the great mass of the Filipino people.

From the earliest moment no opportunity was lost of assuring the people of the islands of our ardent desire for their welfare and of the intention of this Government to do everything possible to advance their interests. In my order of the 19th of May, 1898, the commander of the military expedition dispatched to the Philippines was instructed to declare that we came not to make war upon the people of that country "nor upon any party or faction among them, but to protect them in their homes, in their employments, and in their personal and religious rights." That there should be no doubt as to the paramount authority there, on the 17th of August it was directed that "there must be no joint occupation with the insurgents"; that the United States must preserve the peace and protect persons and property within the territory occupied by their military and naval forces; that the insurgents and all others must recognize the military occupation and authority of the United States. As early as Dec. 4, before the cession and in anticipation of that event, the commander in Manila was urged to restore peace and tranquillity and to undertake the establishment of a benefit cent government which should afford the fullest security for life and property.

On the 21st of December, after the treaty was signed, the commander of the forces of occupation was instructed "to announce and proclaim in the most public manner that we come, not as invaders and conquerors, but as friends to protect the natives in their homes, in their employments and in their personal and religious rights." On the same day, while ordering Gen. Otis to see that the peace should be preserved in Iloilo, he was admonished that "It is most important that there should be no conflict with the insurgents." On the 1st of January, 1899, urgent orders were reiterated that the kindly intentions of this Government should be in every possible way communicated to the insurgents.

On the 21st of January I announced my intention of dispatching to Manila a commission, composed of three gentlemen of the highest character and distinction, thoroughly acquainted with the Orient, who, in association with Admiral Dewey and Gen. Otis, were instructed to "facilitate the most humane and effective extension of authority throughout the islands, and to secure, with the least possible delay, the benefits of a wise and generous protection of life and property to the inhabitants." These gentlemen were Dr. Jacob Gould Schurman, President of Cornell University; the Hon. Charles Denby, for many years Minister to China, and Prof. Dean C. Worcester of the University of Michigan, who had made a most careful study of life in the Philippines. While the treaty of peace was under consideration in the Senate, these Commissioners set out on their mission of goodwill and liberation. Their character was a sufficient guaranty of the beneficent purposes with which they went, even if they had not borne the positive instructions of this Government, which made their errand preeminently one of peace and friendship.

REVOLT AT MANILA.

But before their arrival at Manila the sinister ambition of a few leaders of the Filipinos had created a situation full of embarrassment for us and most grievous in its consequences to themselves. The clear and impartial preliminary report of the Commissioners, which I transmit herewith, gives so lucid and comprehensive a history of the present insurrectionary movement that the story need not be here repeated. It is enough to say that the claim of the rebel leader that he was promised independence by any officer of the United States in return for his assistance has no foundation in fact, and is categorically denied by the very witnesses who were called to prove it. The most the insurgent leader hoped for when he came back to Manila was the liberation of the islands from the Spanish control, which they had been laboring for years without success to throw off.

The prompt accomplishment of this work by the American Army and Navy gave him other ideas and ambitions, and insidious suggestions from various quarters have served the purposes and intentions with which he had taken up arms. No sooner had our army captured Manila than the Filipino forces began to assume an attitude of suspicion and hostility which the utmost efforts of our officers and troops were unable to disarm or modify. Their kindness and forbearance were taken as a proof of cowardice. The aggressions of the Filipinos continually increased until, finally, just before the time set by the Senate of the United States for a vote upon the treaty, an attack, evidently prepared in advance, was made all along the American lines, which resulted in a terribly destructive and sanguinary repulse of the insurgents.

Ten days later an order of the insurgent government was issued to its adherents who had remained in Manila, of which Gen. Otis justly observes that "for barbarous intent it is unequaled in modern times." It directs that at 8 o'clock on the night of the 15th of February the territorial militia shall come together in the streets of San Pedro, armed with their bolos, with guns and ammunition, where convenient; that Filipino families only shall be respected; but that all other individuals, of whatever race they may be, shall be exterminated without any compassion, after the extermination of the army of occupation, and adds: "Brothers, we must avenge ourselves on the Americans and exterminate them, that we may take our revenge for the infamies and treacheries which they have committed upon us. Have no compassion upon them; attack with vigor."

A copy of this fell by good fortune into the hands of our officers, and they were able to take measures to control the rising, which was actually attempted on the night of Feb. 22, a week later than was originally contemplated. Considerable numbers of armed insurgents entered the city by waterways and swamps, and, in concert with confederates inside, attempted to destroy Manila by fire. They were kept in check during the night, and the next day driven out of the city with heavy loss. This was the unhappy condition of affairs which confronted our Commissioners on their arrival in Manila. They had come with the hope and intention of co-operating with Admiral Dewey and Major Gen. Otis in establishing peace and order in the archipelago and the largest measure of self-government compatible with the true welfare of the people. What they actually found can best be set forth in their own words:

"Deplorable as war is, the one in which we are now engaged was unavoidable by us. We were attacked by a bold, adventurous, and enthusiastic army. No alternative was left to us except ignominious retreat.

"It is not to be conceived of that any American would have sanctioned the surrender of Manila to the insurgents. Our obligations to other nations and to the friendly Filipinos and to ourselves and our flag demanded that force should be met by force. Whatever the future of the Philippines may be, there is no course open to us now except the prosecution of the war until the insurgents are reduced to submission. The commission is of the opinion that there has been no time since the destruction of the Spanish squadron by Admiral Dewey when it was possible to withdraw our forces from the islands either with honor to ourselves or with safety to the inhabitants."

REBELLION TO BE CRUSHED.

The course thus clearly indicated has been unflinchingly pursued. The rebellion must be put down. Civil government cannot be thoroughly established until order is restored. With a devotion and gallantry worthy of its most brilliant history, the army, ably and loyally assisted by the navy, has carried on this unwelcome but most righteous campaign with richly deserved success. The noble self-sacrifice with which our soldiers and sailors whose terms of service had expired refused to avail themselves of their right to return home as long as they were needed at the front forms one of the brightest pages in our annals. Although their operations have been somewhat interrupted and checked by a rainy season of unusual violence and duration, they have gained ground steadily in every direction and now look forward confidently to a speedy completion of their task.

The unfavorable circumstances connected with an active campaign have not been permitted to interfere with the equally important work of reconstruction. Again I invite your attention to the report of the Commissioners for the interesting and encouraging details of the work already accomplished in the establishment of peace and order and the inauguration of self-governing municipal life in many portions of the archipelago. A notable beginning has been made in the establishment of a government in the Island of Negros, which is deserving of special consideration. This was the first island to accept American sovereignty. Its people unreservedly proclaimed allegiance to the United States and adopted a constitution looking to the establishment of a popular government. It was impossible to guarantee to the people of Negros that the constitution so adopted should be the ultimate form of government. Such a question, under the treaty with Spain and in accordance with our own Constitution and laws, came exclusively within the jurisdiction of the Congress. The government actually set up by the inhabitants of Negros eventually proved unsatisfactory to the natives themselves. A new system was put into force by order of the Major General commanding the department, of which the following are the most important elements:

It was ordered that the government of the Island of Negros should consist of a Military Governor appointed by the United States Military Governor of the Philippines, and a Civil Governor and an Advisory Council elected by the people. The Military Governor was authorized to appoint Secretaries of the Treasury, Interior, Agriculture, Public Instruction, an Attorney General, and an Auditor. The seat of the government was fixed at Bacolod. The Military Governor exercises the supreme executive power. He is to see that the laws are executed, appoint to office, and fill all vacancies in office not otherwise provided for, and may, with the approval of the Military Governor of the Philippines, remove any officer from office. The Civil Governor advises the Military Governor on all public civil questions and presides over the Advisory Council. He, in general, performs the duties which are performed by Secretaries of State in our own system of government.

The Advisory Council consists of eight members elected by the people within territorial limits which are defined in the order of the Commanding General.

The times and places of holding elections are to be fixed by the Military Governor of the Island of Negros. The qualifications of voters are as follows:

(1) A voter must be a male citizen of the Island of Negros.

(2) Of the age of twenty-one years.

(3) He shall

the commission and the Admiral and Major General commanding the Department of the Pacific to assure the people of the beneficent intentions of this Government have had their legitimate effect in convincing the great mass of them that peace and safety and prosperity and stable Government can only be found in a loyal acceptance of the authority of the United States.

The future Government of the Philippines rests with the Congress of the United States. Few graver responsibilities have ever been confided to us. If we accept them in a spirit worthy of our race and our traditions, a great opportunity comes with them. The islands lie under the shelter of our flag. They are ours by every title of law and equity. They cannot be abandoned. If we desert them we leave them at once to anarchy, and finally to barbarism. We fling them, a golden apple of discord, among the rival powers, no one of which could permit another to seize them unquestioned. Their rich plains and valleys would be the scene of endless strife and bloodshed. The advent of Dewey's fleet in Manila Bay, instead of being, as we hope, the dawn of a new day of freedom and progress, will have been the beginning of an era of misery and violence worse than any which has darkened their unhappy past.

The suggestion has been made that we could renounce our authority over the islands and, giving them independence, could retain a protectorate over them. This proposition will not be found, I am sure, worthy of your serious attention. Such an arrangement would involve at the outset a cruel breach of faith. It would place the peaceable and loyal majority, who ask nothing better than to accept our authority, at the mercy of the minority of armed insurgents. It would make us responsible for the acts of the insurgent leaders and give us no power to control them. It would charge us with the task of protecting them against each other and defending them against any foreign power with which they chose to quarrel. In short, it would take from the Congress of the United States the power of declaring war and vest that tremendous prerogative in the Tagal leader of the hour.

It does not seem desirable that I should recommend at this time a specific and final form of government for these islands. When peace shall be restored, it will be the duty of Congress to construct a plan of government which shall establish and maintain freedom and order and peace in the Philippines. The insurrection is still existing, and when it terminates, further information will be required as to the actual condition of affairs before inaugurating a permanent scheme of civil government. The full report of the commission, now in preparation, will contain information and suggestions which will be of value to Congress and which I will transmit as soon as it is completed. As long as the insurrection continues, the military arm must necessarily be supreme.

But there is no reason why steps should not be taken from time to time to inaugurate governments essentially popular in their form as fast as territory is held and controlled by our troops. To this end I am considering the advisability of the return of the commission, or such of the members thereof as can be secured, to aid the existing authorities and facilitate this work throughout the islands. I have believed that reconstruction should not begin by the establishment of one central civil government for all the islands, with its seat at Manila, but rather that the work should be commenced by building up from the bottom, first establishing municipal governments and then provincial governments, a central government at last to follow.

Until Congress shall have made known the formal expression of its will, I shall use the authority vested in me by the Constitution and the statutes to uphold the sovereignty of the United States in those distant islands as in all other places where our flag rightfully floats. I shall put at the disposal of the army and navy all the means which the liberality of Congress and the people have provided to cause this unprovoked and wasteful insurrection to cease. If any orders of mine were required to insure the merciful conduct of military and naval operations they would not be lacking; but every step of the progress of our troops has been marked by a humanity which has surprised even the misguided insurgents. The truest kindness to them will be a swift and effective defeat of their present leader. The hour of victory will be the hour of clemency and reconstruction.

No effort will be spared to build up the waste places desolated by war and by long years of misgovernment. We shall not wait for the end of strife to begin the beneficent work. We shall continue, as we have begun, to open the schools and the churches, to set the courts in operation, to foster industry and trade and agriculture, and in every way in our power to make these people whom Providence has brought within our jurisdiction feel that it is their liberty and not our power, their welfare and not our gain, we are seeking to enhance. Our flag has never waved over any community but in blessing. I believe the Filipinos will soon recognize the fact that it has not lost its gift of benediction in its world-wide journey to their shores.

FUTURE OF HAWAII.

Some embarrassment in administration has occurred by reason of the peculiar status which the Hawaiian Islands at present occupy under the joint resolution of annexation approved July 7, 1898. While by that resolution the Republic of Hawaii as an independent nation was extinguished, its separate sovereignty destroyed, and its property and possessions vested in the United States, yet a complete establishment for its Government under our system was not effected. While the municipal laws of the islands not enacted for the fulfillment of treaties and not inconsistent with the joint resolution or contrary to the Constitution of the United States or any of its treaties remain in force, yet these laws relate only to the social and internal affairs of the islands and do not touch many subjects of importance which are of a broader National character.

For example, the Hawaiian Republic was divested of all title to the public lands in the islands, and is not only unable to dispose of lands to settlers desiring to take up homestead sites, but is without power to give complete title in cases where lands have been entered upon under lease or other conditions which carry with them the right to the purchaser, lessee, or settler to have a full title granted to him upon compliance with the conditions prescribed by law or by his particular agreement of entry. Questions of doubt and difficulty have also risen with reference to the collection of tonnage tax on vessels coming from Hawaiian ports, with reference to the status of Chinese in the islands, their entrance and exit therefrom, as to patents and copyrights, as to the register of vessels under the navigation laws, as to the necessity of holding elections in accordance with the provisions of the Hawaiian statutes for the choice of various officers, and as to several other matters of detail touching the interests both of the Island and of the Federal Government.

By the resolution of annexation the President was directed to appoint five Commissioners to recommend to Congress such legislation concerning the islands as they should deem necessary or proper. These Commissioners were duly appointed, and, after a careful investigation and study of the system of laws and government prevailing in the islands and of the conditions existing there, they prepared a bill to provide a government under the title of the "Territory of Hawaii." The report of the commission, with the bill which they prepared, was transmitted by me to Congress on Dec. 6, 1898, but the bill still awaits final action.

The people of these islands are entitled to the benefits and privileges of our Constitution, but in the absence of any act of Congress providing for Federal courts in the island and for a procedure by which appeals, writs of error and other judicial proceedings necessary for the enforcement of civil rights may be prosecuted, they are powerless to secure their enforcement by the judgment of the courts of the United States. It is manifestly important, therefore, that an act shall be passed as speedily as possible, erecting these islands into a judicial district, providing for the appointment of a Judge and other proper officers and methods of procedure in appellate proceedings, and that the government of this newly acquired territory under the Federal Constitution shall be fully defined and provided for.

LEGISLATION FOR ALASKA.

A necessity for immediate legislative relief exists in the Territory of Alaska. Substantially the only law providing a civil government for this Territory is the act of May 17, 1884. This is meagre in its provisions, and is fitted only for the administration of affairs in a country sparsely inhabited by civilized people and unimportant in trade and production, as was Alaska at the time this act was passed. The increase in population by immigration during the past few years, consequent upon the discovery of gold, has produced such a condition as calls for more ample facilities for local self-government and more numerous conveniences of civil and judicial administration. Settlements have grown up in various places, constituting in point of population and business cities of thousands of inhabitants, yet there is no provision of law under which a municipality can be organized or maintained.

In some localities the inhabitants have met together and voluntarily formed a municipal organization for the purposes of local government, adopting the form of a municipal constitution and charter, under which said officials have been appointed, and ordinances creating and regulating a police force, a fire department, a department of health, and making provision for the care of the insane and indigent poor and sick and for public schools, have been passed. These proceedings and the ordinances passed by such municipalities are without statutory authority and have no sanction, except as they are maintained by the popular sentiment of the community. There is an entire absence of authority to provide the ordinary instruments of local police control and administration, the population consisting of the usual percentage of lawless adventurers of the class that always flock to new fields of enterprise or discovery, and under circumstances which require more than ordinary provision for the maintenance of peace, good order, and lawful conduct.

The whole vast area of Alaska comprises but one judicial district, with one Judge, one Marshal, and one District Attorney, yet the civil and criminal business was more than doubled within the past year, and is many times greater, both in volume and importance, than it was in 1884. The duties of the Judge require him to travel thousands of miles to discharge his judicial duties at the various places designated for that purpose. The territory should be divided into at least two districts, and an additional Judge, District Attorney, Marshal, and other appropriate officers be provided.

There is practically no organized form of government in the Territory. There is no authority, except in Congress, to pass any law, no matter how local or trivial, and the difficulty of conveying to the Congress an adequate conception and understanding of the various needs of the people in the different communities is easily understood. I see no reason why a more complete form of Territorial organization should not be provided. Following the precedent established in the year of 1805, when a temporary government was provided for the recently acquired territory then known under the name of Louisiana, it seems to me that it would be advantageous to confer greater executive power upon the Governor and to establish, as was done in the case of the Territory of Louisiana, a legislative council having power to adopt ordinances which shall extend to all the rightful subjects of local legislation, such ordinances not to take effect until reported to and approved by the Congress if in session, and, if that body is not in session, then by the President.

In this manner a system of laws providing for the incorporation and Government of the towns and cities having a certain population, giving them the power to establish and maintain a system of education to be locally supported, and ordinances providing for sanitary, and other such purposes could be speedily provided. I believe a provision of this kind would be satisfactory to the people of the Territory. It is probable that the area is too vast and the population too scattered and transitory to make it wise at the present time to provide for an elective legislative body, but the conditions calling for local self-government will undoubtedly very soon exist, and will be facilitated by the measures which I have recommended.

GOVERNMENT FOR PUERTO RICO.

I recommend that legislation to the same end be had with reference to the Government of Puerto Rico. The time is ripe for the adoption of a temporary form of government for this island, and many suggestions made with reference to Alaska are applicable also to Puerto Rico.

The system of civil jurisprudence now adopted by the people of this island is described by competent lawyers who are familiar with it, as thoroughly modern and scientific, so far as it relates to matters of internal business, trade, production, and social and private right in general. The cities of the island are governed under charters which probably require very little or no change. So that with relation to matters of local concern and private right, it is not probable that much if any legislation is desirable; but with reference to public administration and the relations of the island to the Federal Government, there are many matters which are of pressing urgency. The same necessity exists for legislation on the part of Congress to establish Federal courts and Federal jurisdiction in the island as has been previously pointed out by me with reference to Hawaii.

Besides the administration of justice there are the subjects of the public lands, the control and improvement of rivers and harbors, the control of the waters or streams not navigable, which under the Spanish law belonged to the Crown of Spain, and have by the treaty of cession passed to the United States; the immigration of people from foreign countries, the importation of contract labor, the imposition and collection of internal revenue, the application of the navigation laws, the regulation of the current money, the establishment of Post Offices and post roads, the regulation of tariff rates on merchandise imported from the island into the United States, the establishment of ports of entry and delivery, the regulation of patents and copyrights—these, with various other subjects which rest entirely within the power of the Congress, call for careful consideration and immediate action.

It must be borne in mind that since the cession of Puerto Rico she has been denied the principal markets she had long enjoyed, and our tariffs have been continued against her products as when she was under Spanish sovereignty. The markets of Spain are closed to her products, except upon terms to which the commerce of all nations is subjected. The Island of Cuba, which used to buy her cattle and tobacco without customs duties, now imposes the same duties upon these products as from any other country entering her ports. She has therefore lost her free intercourse with Spain and Cuba, without any compensating benefits in this market. Her coffee was little known and not in use by our people, and therefore there was no demand here for this one of her chief products. The markets of the United States should be opened up to her products. Our plain duty is to abolish all customs tariffs between the United States and Puerto Rico and give her products free access to our markets.

As a result of the hurricane which swept over Puerto Rico on the 8th of August, 1899, over 100,000 persons were reduced to absolute destitution without homes, and deprived of the necessaries of life. To the appeal of the War Department the people of the United States made prompt and generous response. In addition to the private charity of our people, the War Department has expended for the relief of the distressed $392,342.63, which does not include the cost of transportation.

It is desirable that the Government of the island under the law of belligerent right, now maintained through the Executive Department, should be superseded by an administration entirely civil in its nature. For present purposes I recommend that Congress pass a law for the organization of a temporary Government, which shall provide for the appointment by the President, subject to confirmation by the Senate, of a Governor and such other officers as the general administration of the island may require, and that for legislative purposes upon subjects of a local nature not partaking of a Federal character a legislative council, composed partly of Puerto Ricans and partly of citizens of the United States, shall be nominated and appointed by the President, subject to confirmation by the Senate, their acts to be subject to the approval of the Congress or the President, prior to going into effect.

In the municipalities and other local subdivisions I recommend that the principle of local self-government be applied at once, so as to enable the intelligent citizens of the island to participate in their own Government and to learn by practical experience the duties and requirements of a self-contained and self-governing people. I have not thought it wise to commit the entire government of the island to officers selected by the people because I doubt whether in habits, training, and experience they are such as to fit them to exercise at once so large a degree of self-government, but it is my judgment and expectation that they will soon arrive at an attainment of experience and wisdom and self-control that will justify conferring upon them a much larger participation in the choice of their insular officers.

The fundamental requirement for these people, as for all people, is education. The free schoolhouse is the best preceptor for citizenship. In the introduction of modern educational methods care, however, must be exercised that changes be not made too abruptly and that the history and racial peculiarities of the inhabitants shall be given due weight. Systems of education in these new possessions founded upon common sense methods, adapted to existing conditions and looking to the future moral and industrial advancement of the people, will commend to them in a peculiarly effective manner the blessings of free government.

LYNCHINGS IN THE SOUTH.

The love of law and the sense of obedience and submission to the lawfully constituted judicial tribunals are embedded in the hearts of our people, and any violation of these sentiments and disregard of their obligations justly arouses public condemnation. The guarantees of life, liberty, and of civil rights should be faithfully upheld; the right of trial by jury respected and defended. The rule of the courts should assure the public of the prompt trial of those charged with criminal offenses, and upon conviction the punishment should be commensurate with the enormity of the crime.

Those who, in disregard of law and the public peace, unwilling to await the judgment of court and jury, constitute themselves judges and executioners, should not escape the severest penalties for their crimes.

What I said in my inaugural address of March 4, 1897, I now repeat:

"The constituted authorities must be cheerfully and vigorously upheld. Lynchings must not be tolerated in a great and civilized country like the United States. Courts, not mobs, must execute the penalties of the laws. The preservation of the public order, the right of discussion, the integrity of courts, and the orderly administration of justice must continue forever the rock of safety upon which our Government securely rests."

CENTENARY OF WASHINGTON.

In accordance with the act of Congress providing for an appropriate National celebration in the year 1900 of the establishment of the seat of Government in the District of Columbia, I have appointed a committee, consisting of the Governors of all the States and Territories of the United States, who have been invited to assemble in the City of Washington on the 21st of December, 1899, which, with the committees of the Congress and the District of Columbia, are charged with the proper conduct of this celebration.

Congress at its last session appropriated $5,000 "to enable the Chief of Engineers of the army to continue the examination of the subject and to make or secure designs, calculations, and estimates for a memorial bridge from the most convenient point of the Naval Observatory grounds or adjacent thereto, across the Potomac River to the most convenient point of the Arlington estate property." In accordance with the provision of this act, the Chief of Engineers has selected four eminent architects to submit designs for a bridge combining the elements of strength and durability and such architectural embellishment and ornamentation as will fitly apply to the dedication, "a memorial to American patriotism." The designs are now being prepared, and as soon as completed will be submitted to the Congress by the Secretary of War. The proposed bridge would be a convenience to all the people from every part of the country who visit the National Cemetery, an ornament to the capital of the Nation, and forever stand as a monument to American patriotism. I do not doubt that Congress will give to the enterprise still further proof of its favor and approval.

CIVIL SERVICE LAW.

The Executive order of May 6, 1896, extending the limits of the classified service, brought within the operation of the civil service law and rules nearly all of the executive civil service not previously classified.

Some of the inclusions were found wholly illogical and unsuited to the work of the several departments. The applications of the rules to many of the places so included was found to result in friction and embarrassment. After long and very careful consideration it became evident to the heads of the departments responsible for their efficiency, that in order to remove these difficulties and promote an efficient and harmonious administration certain amendments were necessary. These amendments were promulgated by me in an Executive order dated May 29, 1899.

The principal purpose of the order was to except from competitive examination certain places involving fiduciary responsibilities or duties of a strictly confidential, scientific, or executive character, which it was thought might be better filled were there a non-competitive examination in the discretion of the appointing officer than by open competition. These places were comparatively few in number. The order provides for the filling of a much larger number of places, mainly in the outside service of the War Department, by what is known as the registration system, under regulations to be approved by the President, similar to those which have produced such admirable results in the navy yard service.

All of the amendments had for their main object a more efficient and satisfactory administration of the system, and experiments established by the civil service law. The results obtained show that under their operation the public service has improved, and that the civil service system is relieved of many objectionable features which heretofore subjected it to just criticism, and the administrative officers to the charge of unbusinesslike methods in the conduct of public affairs. It is believed that the merit system has been greatly strengthened, and its permanence assured. It will be my constant aim in the administration of government in our new possessions to make fitness, character, and merit essential to appointment to office, and to give to the capable and deserving inhabitants preference in appointments.

TO HONOR WASHINGTON.

The 14th of December will be the one hundredth anniversary of the death of Washington. For a hundred years the Republic has had the priceless advantage of the lofty standard of character and conduct which he bequeathed to the American people. It is an inheritance which time, instead of wasting, continually increases and enriches. We may justly hope that in the years to come the benignant influence of the Father of His Country may be even more potent for good than in the century which is drawing to a close. I have been glad to learn that in many parts of the country the people will fittingly observe this historic anniversary.

Presented to this Congress are great opportunities. With them come great responsibilities. The power confided to us increases the weight of our obligations to the people, and we must be profoundly sensible of them, as we contemplate the new and grave problems which confront us. Aiming only at the public good, we cannot err. A right interpretation of the people's will and of duty cannot fail to insure wise measures for the welfare of the islands which have come under authority of the United States and insure to the common interest and lasting honor of our country. Never has this Nation had more abundant cause than during the past year for thankfulness to God for manifold blessings and mercies, for which we make reverent acknowledgment.

WILLIAM McKINLEY.

Executive Mansion, Dec. 5, 1899.

COMMENTS ON THE MESSAGE.

LONDON, Dec. 6.—All the morning papers have editorials upon President McKinley's message to Congress. The Daily Telegraph says:

"What differentiates the present from preceding messages is its all but formal admission that the United States has been drawn into the outer eddies of Eastern politics. It is the Far East which is the real reason for this partial abandonment of Monroeism. So far as Great Britain is concerned, there is no apprehension, but rather unqualified satisfaction, at the new departure. Great Britain, the United States, and Germany are the powers most concerned in maintaining the 'open door,' and that is all which is implied in the use of the word 'alliance,' about which so much unnecessary fuss has been made."

The Daily Mail says:

"Commercial expansion is the dominant note of the message. The utmost cordiality is expressed toward Germany, and the President's tone toward England is distinctly friendly, but, although the political aspect of the message contains for England no disturbing features, its commercial pronouncements cannot be read with the same degree of satisfaction. Shipping subsidies are plainly hinted at. If Congress carries these into effect, British shipowners and shipping firms will have to break through all rings and enter upon a new epoch of enterprise."

The Daily News says:

"It is quite evident that the United States are to become one of the great naval powers of the world. Mr. Chamberlain will find but cold comfort if he reads between the lines of the message. While it urges a good understanding with all countries, it is not effusive toward our own. If it sins anywhere in that way, it is for the benefit of Germany, and Americans will do all in their power to make the two countries the best of friends. Had Mr. Chamberlain postponed his indiscretion a few days he might have given England a better chance."

The Morning Post, after noting that President McKinley's language regarding Great Britain is "cordial but cautious," says:

"We are surprised to find his statements in relation to the new possessions of the United States much less emphatic than those which he used during the Summer and Autumn in the speeches he delivered in various parts of the Republic."

The Standard says:

"The message is comprehensive, but not exciting, especially so far as external relations are concerned. President McKinley's language is carefully guarded on Anglo-American relations. He is friendly, but does not mean to be fervid. Toward Germany, on the other hand, he is very cordial.

"The reference to 'entangling alliances' would probably have been omitted if a certain speech at Leicester had not been delivered. Probably Mr. McKinley's party and most Americans who are connected with industrial interests are anxious to promote close relations with Great Britain, but the Irish voters and the anti-expansionists have to be considered."

The Daily Chronicle says:

"Toward Germany Mr. McKinley's friendly expressions have quite a noteworthy emphasis; and, if his tone is a shade cooler with reference to this country, we owe it to the unlucky exaggerations of Mr. Chamberlain.

"President McKinley refrains from a specific allusion to Chinese affairs. Here we have an explanation of the unusual warmth with which he dwells on American friendship for Germany. This is not prompted solely by a desire to vindicate the character of canned meats. He justly appreciates the co-operation of England, Germany, and America in preserving those conditions of commercial rivalry which, as he says, make it generous and open.

"We wish the message had laid stress upon that principle, instead of rejecting an alliance which nobody, except Mr. Chamberlain perhaps, really seeks, and rejecting it in a way to make it appear to the section of American opinion that is not well disposed toward us that we have received a rebuff."

The Times says:

"The President shows the best spirit in touching upon the relations between the United States and the United Kingdom. The delicate nature of the negotiations pending with Canada regarding the Alaskan boundary does not allow him to go beyond the expression of a hope that these will end in an agreement for the establishment and delimitation of a permanent boundary. Apart from this, however, a most friendly disposition marks the discussion of the numerous matters of intercourse between the United States and Great Britain.

"The benevolent neutrality which has been observed by the United States during our conflict with the Boers is only what might be expected from a Nation in which international law has always been a favorite study.

"The President is looking in the right direction when he contends for the gradual creation of a constitutional system for the Philippines. To insist on a cut-and-dried Constitution at this stage in the history of the Philippines would be no less absurd than to demand, before the war with the Boers had been fought out, that we should settle the future of the Transvaal in accordance with the views of some political theorists at home."

GOV. ROOSEVELT ON THE MESSAGE.

ALBANY, Dec. 5.—Gov. Roosevelt had this to say to-night of the President's message:

"It is a very able document. The extraordinary prosperity of the country in the face of the fact that we are still stamping out the last embers of the war which was the aftermath of our struggle with Spain speaks sufficiently for the Administration, and, therefore, for the wisdom of the country in placing it in power and in holding up the hands of President McKinley.

"The presentation of the Philippine question in particular is admirable, and I am delighted with what is said about Alaska."

ATTORNEY GENERAL'S REPORT.

Work of the National Department of Justice for the Past Year Reviewed.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 5.—Attorney General Griggs, in his annual report to Congress, reviews the work of the Department of Justice during the year, and then says that application is occasionally made to the department to have legal proceedings brought in the name of the United States against corporations or combinations of companies that are alleged to be engaged in forming or maintaining monopolies or agreements in restraint of trade or competition.

"Such actions," the Attorney General says, "can be maintained only when the offense comes within the scope of the Federal statute. The only Federal legislation against combinations in restraint of trade is contained in the so-called Sherman act of July 2, 1890.

"It will be observed that this statute is directed only at combinations or monopolies in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States or with foreign nations. It does not pretend to go into other branches of business or commerce, or attempt in any way to interfere with those transactions which are carried on exclusively within the confines of a State, or which do not amount to what, under the decisions of the United States Supreme Court, is understood by the term 'inter-State commerce.' The Federal Government has no Constitutional right to supervise, direct, or interfere with the transaction of ordinary business by the people of the several States unless such business relates directly, and not incidentally, to inter-State commerce, and such has been the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States."

The Attorney General discusses this subject at some length, quoting freely from the decisions of the courts sustaining his position, and in conclusion says:

"In all cases where the facts presented to the Attorney General, capable of legal proof, have established satisfactorily such an agreement or combination in restraint of inter-State commerce as is contemplated by the Sherman act, legal proceedings have been taken by him in the name of the United States either to dissolve the combination or to punish the offenders by indictment."

The Attorney General also refers to the many important questions which have arisen in the administration of the government and affairs of our new insular possessions, and appends copies of opinions rendered by him on the same.

Referring to the work of the Court of Private Land Claims, the Attorney General says:

"It will doubtless be necessary for Congress to provide for some tribunal similar to this court to hear and dispose of, upon such principles as Congress may specify, claims of an incomplete character to public lands in the recently acquired territory of the United States in Puerto Rico and the Philippine Islands. As to Puerto Rico especially, early provision for the determination of questions of this kind ought to be made, and legislation ought to be passed to provide methods and restrictions under which rights in public lands and waters in that island can be acquired. The rivers and streams, as well as the water front on the seaboard, in Peurto Rico, were formerly vested in the Crown of Spain, and the ownership of them has now passed to the United States, and can only be disposed of in accordance with the will of Congress. No structure or improvement for the benefit of the towns or cities which requires the use of the waters of the streams or the shores of the island can now be made, as there is at present no law which authorizes any person to grant the necessary license or permission for even the temporary diversion of the waters, whether navigable or not."

On the subject of judicial salaries the Attorney General says:

"It is not an uncommon thing to find a lawyer appearing before the United States court in a case where his fee for one argument exceeds the annual salary of the Judge.

"The Judges of the United States Supreme Court and the Circuit and District Courts are inadequately compensated. The same is true of those of the Court of Claims.

"The courts of the United States are everywhere in the civilized world held in the very highest repute; yet their Judges are paid smaller salaries than are allowed by the States to State Judges in very many jurisdictions. I believe that an increase of the salary of the Chief Justice and Associate Justices of the Supreme Court to $20,000 a year, of the Circuit Court Judges to $10,000, and of the District Judges to $7,500 a year would be a simple measure of justice and approved by every just-minded citizen."

On the subject of Alaska the Attorney General says:

"The administration of affairs in Alaska, and especially the administration of justice through the courts and court officers, is not satisfactory. The criminal business of Alaska has doubled within the year, and the civil business has multiplied four times over. Complaints of the inadequacy of the provisions established for maintaining law and order and enforcing the criminal statutes are universal. At present there is only one United States Judge, one Marshal, and one District Attorney for this whole vast extent of territory, who are not able to dispose of one-tenth of the business presented." He urged upon Congress the necessity of providing for the appointment of an additional District Judge, an additional United States District Attorney and Marshal, and the territory divided into two districts. He recommends that the salary of the District Attorney or of the District Attorneys, if two are provided, be fixed at $5,000 a year.

HARPERS' TEXTBOOKS SOLD.

Works of This Class Transferred to the American Book Company.

All the college and high school textbooks hitherto published by Harper & Brothers have been transferred to the American Book Company of Chicago and New York, which intends at once to begin printing the works from its own presses. The list includes about 500 different works, and the sale includes the books in stock, the electrotype plates of all the works, and contracts for books which have not yet been written.

At the offices of Harper & Brothers yesterday it was said that the corporation had sold all its common school publications to the American Book Company five or six years ago, and that this sale really completed the transaction begun before the corporation was in financial difficulty. Harper & Brothers intended to abandon the school book business entirely, as it formed but a small portion of the entire business of the concern.

FIRE ENGINE CRASHES INTO CAR.

One of the Horses So Badly Hurt It Has to be Killed.

Fire Engine No. 1 of Twenty-ninth Street, near Seventh Avenue, on its way to a fire at 240 West Nineteenth Street at 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon, was in collision with an east-bound electric car at Seventh Avenue and Twenty-third Street. One of the horses drawing the engine was so badly injured that it had to be shot. Four windows of the car were broken, the car's side was smashed in, and ten passengers were so badly frightened that they made a rush to get out.

A west-bound car was letting some passengers off on the west side of the avenue when the east-bound car came along. Driver William Chalmers of the engine had only one hope to avoid a collision, and that was to drive between the two cars. He thought the east-bound car would go ahead and leave a sufficient gap for him to get through. Motorman Joseph Nelson of 244 East Thirty-second Street, however, stopped directly in front of the engine. He was arrested, but later released on bail.

Negro Shoots Woman; Kills Himself.

KINGSTON, N. Y., Dec. 5.—William Brown shot Rachel Kiersted, colored, early this morning because she refused to marry him. After shooting the woman, Brown turned the revolver upon himself. He died at noon to-day. The woman probably will live.

DIES IN WHIST CLUB ROOMS.

Mrs. Louisa Loomis Expires Suddenly of Heart Disease.

Mrs. Louisa Loomis, wife of Charles H. Loomis of 61 West One Hundred and Fourteenth Street, died suddenly yesterday afternoon of heart disease, in the rooms of the Cavendish Whist Club, 53 East Fifty-sixth Street. Dr. Mary B. Jewett, who has an office in the building, was summoned, but was unable to do anything. A number of women were present at the club when the death occurred. They refused at first to give any information.

Detective Cassidy of the East Fifty-first Street Station was sent to look into the matter, and found nothing to demand an investigation. Dr. Jewett notified the Coroner, and a permit was issued for the removal of the body.

Exhibit of Episcopal Missions.

A mission exhibit was opened yesterday in the basement of the Protestant Episcopal Church of the Heavenly Rest, and will be continued until Friday night. Around the hall are a series of courts representing mission work in Africa, China, Japan, Brazil, Mexico, Assyria, Alaska, Cuba, and other parts of the world. The courts are decked with the flags of the respective nations they represent, and the exhibits consist of Bibles and prayer books printed in various languages and tribal dialects, weapons, lace, finery of various descriptions, photographs, and other objects. Missionary rallies are being held in the church itself, among those taking part being Bishops Hare of South Dakota, Moreland of Sacramento, Whitaker of Pennsylvania, and Talbot of Central Pennsylvania.

THE GOVERNOR AND TRUSTS.

Is Seeking Knowledge in Order to Make Recommendations.

ALBANY, Dec. 5.—Gov Roosevelt is considering the subject of trusts. He has been in conference with experts for the past two days, and will continue to glean advice from sources of this character. He is considering four propositions: Whether the subject is one for National legislation, whether it is one for State legislation, whether there should be legislation from both sources, or whether it is impossible to reach them with legislation.

The Governor has already conferred with Prof. Jenks of Cornell and Prof. Seligman of Columbia, and will next week confer with Prof. Burdick of Columbia, who has made taxation and trusts a subject of careful study. This inquiry is for the purpose of reaching a basis on which recommendation may be made to the Legislature along this line.

The Governor views the question as one which has really never been determined, but one which should be before any attempt is made to pass legislation to meet the condition.

IN THE HANDS OF CONGRESS.

The President turns the Philippine problem over to Congress very much as President CLEVELAND turned the Hawaiian tangle over to that body after its opposition to his policy of strict justice at Honolulu had created a situation with which it was beyond the power of the Executive to deal satisfactorily. Mr. MCKINLEY fails to recommend or suggest the final plan for the government of the Philippines. He leaves everything to Congress, to which the determination of the political status of the islands was committed by the treaty—as well as by the Constitution.

At the same time it is not difficult to see what is in the President's mind, or to forecast with reasonable confidence the various steps to be taken in our work of organizing a government for our dependent possessions in the East. Peace must be first secured, and that is at hand. After civil order has been restored and sufficient safeguards against fresh insurrections have been provided, we shall be at liberty to proceed to the building of the framework of a civil government, local and general.

Local government should be our first care. We think there will be very general assent given to the opinion expressed by the President that we ought to begin at the bottom, "first establishing municipal governments, and then provincial government, a central government at last to follow." It is plainly our duty and our wisest course to become acquainted with the people we have undertaken to protect, and to make them better acquainted with us. The poorest and slowest way to go about this would be to set up a central government at Manila and then send our provincial Governors to exhibit their symbols of authority among a local population of strangers.

The shortest and surest way is to "build from the bottom." The city or the group of neighboring villages offers the natural unit of civil government. In the work of establishing the local executive power, in setting up courts and schools, and providing for the protection of the people in their daily pursuits, the agents of the United States Government would have the most favorable opportunity possible to gain the confidence of the Filipinos and to disabuse their minds of any unfavorable impressions as to us or our purposes which scheming Tagalos may have there implanted. It is near contact, not remote relation, that gives acquaintance and engenders trust. From the municipality to the province is the natural step. Is it not altogether probable that in the course of this building up of civil institutions the President's representatives, if they are wisely chosen, will be able to make it unmistakably manifest that our procedures have that sanction which home critics of our Philippine policy hold to be essential, the "consent of the governed"? The peaceful progress of our constructive work and the willing co-operation of the natives in organizing the government they are to live under, and in a large measure to administer, would leave no doubt about their consent.

The instruments through which this work of setting up the machinery of government in the Philippines may be best accomplished are already on the ground and subject to the orders of the President. We need only point to the brilliant examples of Gen. HENRY in Puerto Rico and of Gen. LEONARD WOOD in Cuba to justify the opinion that the men who have commanded our troops in the war against the now fleeing insurgents are likely to prove the most efficient and the wisest organizers the President can choose for his purpose. With the death, capture, or disappearance of AGUINALDO many of the army officers will no longer be engaged in active military duty. Probably within a few months several of the experienced general officers and a large number of regimental officers could without detriment to the service be assigned to civil duties under the President's direction.

It is of the highest importance that our work in the islands be kept altogether free from the plague of politics. If the duty were assigned to army officers, that would be assured. Their capacity in organization and administration would unquestionably be much higher than that of any corresponding number of civilians whom the President could persuade to undertake the task. Abuses would not be likely to grow up under them and they would be little exposed to the danger of mistakes due to mere rawness. Add to these qualifications the fact that they are already acquainted with the peculiarities and customs of the Filipinos, and it will be apparent that among the one thousand regular officers now in the Philippines we have a body of men from whom a corps of specially equipped organizers can be chosen who would be sure to give a good account of themselves.

The President has the power to begin this work without the action of Congress. It is likely, however, that at the present session legislation dealing with the future political status of the islands will be enacted or attempted. It would be unwise and prejudicial to the interests of the Filipinos and to our own to attempt to create in one act a complete plan of government for the islands. Something may be left to be learned by experience, something to the intelligent suggestions of the men who make the beginnings. Much may be safely left to the discretion and the wisdom of the President.

We hope President MCKINLEY'S clear and candid review of the causes that led to the conflict with the insurgents and his statement of the faithful efforts made to prevent it will not be entirely overlooked in anti-imperialist circles in Boston and Chicago. It should convince any fair-minded American that the President is not the swaggering tyrant that his enemies have represented him to be. Indeed, for all that class of Americans who deserve to be described as fair-minded and who are free from the trammels of party, the message goes far to destroy the issue of imperialism which BRYAN, AGUINALDO, and the league in Boston have earnestly striven to boost into prominence for next year. Only the unreasoning vote can now be influenced by the appeals of anti-imperialism.

MR. M'KINLEY ON "TRUSTS."

It is presumably shrewd politics for Mr. MCKINLEY, in his last message before the Presidential election, to take the wind out of the sails of Mr. BRYAN in any way that he reasonably can. We have not the slightest desire to attribute unworthy motives to the President in his official recommendations, and it is evident that in what he has to say about the only issue that Mr. BRYAN has discovered since 1896, that of "trusts," Mr. MCKINLEY speaks with entire sincerity. Mr. BRYAN himself could hardly adopt a different tone. The message, however, leaves the two candidates on substantially the same platform, and makes a serious contest between them a little ridiculous so far as this question is concerned.

For that matter, it is not easy to see how either of them could expect any one to differ seriously with a platform so entirely vague and formless. Take Mr. MCKINLEY'S. He starts out with the assertion that "combinations of capital organized into trusts to control the conditions of trade among our citizens, to stifle competition, limit production, and determine the prices of products used and consumed by the people, are justly provoking public discussion, and should early claim the attention of Congress." He then proceeds to recount that an industrial commission created by Congress has been at work preparing this subject for the "attention of Congress" for the past eighteen months without reaching any conclusions. He recites what President HARRISON had to say in 1889 and the provisions of the law that was passed in 1890, which were apparently as severe as they could be made. He then quotes President CLEVELAND in 1896 to the effect that the law had been of no practical value. Finally he points to the decisions in the cases of the Trans-Missouri and the Joint Traffic Association as the only successes attained under this law. These cases, in the opinion of many good judges, were not those of attempts to suppress reasonable competition, but to carry out the provision of the Inter-State Commerce act requiring uniform rates. At any rate, they do not touch the combinations referred to by Mr. MCKINLEY.

And what is his recommendation? Simply and solely that Congress shall give the subject "studied deliberation" "resulting in wise and judicious action." It is a lame and impotent conclusion. It would be gross flattery to call it a statement of policy or of principle. It is in effect a confession of mental vacuity as to a matter of political discussion. In that regard neither Mr. BRYAN nor any one else can hope to rival it.

THE MESSAGE ON THE CURRENCY.

The expressions of the President referring to the currency are on the whole extremely satisfactory. It is to be assumed that they are in harmony with the views of the Secretary of the Treasury, which will be submitted to-day, and they are in entire harmony with the bill of the House caucus committee. The prospect of legislation in accordance with these views is, therefore, bright.

As to the "existing gold standard," the President is explicit. He holds that the Secretary of the Treasury "should be given additional power and charged with the duty to sell United States bonds and to employ such other effective means as may be necessary" to support that standard, and to maintain the parity of gold and silver and "the equal power of every dollar at all times in the market and in the payment of debts." This authority should include long or short bonds, as the occasion may require. The President refers temperately and candidly to the difficulties of the Treasury in times not long past, and to the means used to meet them. He points out that the transactions of the Government have been conducted on a gold basis, that bonds have been sold for gold and paid in gold, that the parity of all money issued or coined by the Government has been maintained, that to do this it has been necessary to issue bonds, under disadvantageous conditions, and it may be necessary to do so again. Now is the time, therefore, to change the disadvantageous conditions and give the Secretary of the Treasury all the authority required. Considering the unfair use made of the fact that money was borrowed under President CLEVELAND for precisely these purposes, this statement by the President is creditable to his sense of justice as well as to his judgment. This Nation should not forget, and if it is decently grateful it will not forget, that it was the firm will and dauntless courage and uncompromising honesty of President CLEVELAND in the stormy and perilous period from 1893 to 1896 that preserved the honor of the Government, the integrity of the standard of value, and the rights of all who have or who can earn money. When the legislation now proposed is secured, the Nation will but enjoy ample provision for the easy and constant performance of the task that he performed so faithfully and well with scant and uncertain means and against bitter opposition.

The President recognizes the need of a bank currency more adapted to the growing and changing conditions of commerce. He refers only to the need of a greater volume of money supply, and this he contemplates obtaining by increasing the percentage of bank issues, the reduction of the tax on circulation, and the authority to establish banks of smaller capital. These are excellent measures in their way and as far as they go. Their advocacy by the President is doubtless due to his confidence in his Secretary of the Treasury. The same influence can be relied on to bring the President in due time to recognize that the real need of the country is a bank currency that will not only be large enough at times of the greatest activity, but will contract automatically at times when the activity diminishes. The whole subject of bank currency, however, though it is of much intrinsic importance, is not nearly so important now as the fixing of the standard of value beyond all cavil or uncertainty, and the provision for its absolute maintenance. On this the President is entirely clear and sound.

A CORN KITCHEN AT PARIS.

Mr. PECK, our Commissioner to the Paris Exposition, could not have made a wiser disposition of $10,000 than he has made in devoting that sum to the maintenance of a "corn kitchen" at Paris during the exposition. As we have had occasion to remind our readers, this is by no means the first venture in this direction. When Mr. HEWITT was in Congress he made a persistent effort to have a suitable "exposition" made of the possibilities of Indian corn for the feeding of the nations. And an American citizen, Mr. MURPHY, made the tour of Europe for the purpose of familiarizing the populations with the uses of the most prolific of all the cereals. This gentleman, animated by personal enthusiasm, and furnished with official credentials, though with very insufficient funds for his patriotic purpose, did a great deal toward introducing American corn into Europe, and the bread made with a mixture of it is still known in Germany as "Murphybrod."

This present attempt is made under better auspices than any of its predecessors. It is not only more distinctly official, but, as a citizen and leading business man of Chicago, the centre of the "corn belt," Mr. PECK is aware of the enormous National importance to us of cultivating and diffusing a knowledge of the principal product of the prairies. At present it is only the Italians, among European peoples, who have any adequate knowledge of the nutritive capabilities of Indian corn, and they only in the limited form of what they call polenta and we call mush. The demand in the British Islands is mainly for the food of cattle. But the statistics of our export when compared with the statistics of our production suffice to show that we have by no means made the most of one of our chief products and the most characteristic and exclusive of our cereals.

It seems really absurd that, with a corn crop valued last year at over $500,000,000 we should have exported only $68,060,000 worth of corn and the "relatively derisory" amount of less than $2,000,000 worth of cornmeal, when, out of a wheat crop of $70,000,000 less in value, we exported $144,000,000 and of wheat flour $73,000,000 worth, against the beggarly two millions' worth of cornmeal. It is a reproach against our commercial shrewdness and enterprise that we have not given Europe more authentically to understand the uses of our corn crop. That reproach we may hope that Mr. PECK'S official action will do more than official action has done heretofore to remove. If an adequate "exposition" is made of this product at Paris it ought to be rendered impossible hereafter for the corngrower of the Northwest to use his surplus crop for fuel as the most profitable disposition he can make of it.

THE BATTLE OF THE MODDER.

The military advantage that commercial control gives has been as strongly illustrated in the campaign in South Africa as in our own civil war or in our war with Spain. What advantage the British in the field propose to themselves from keeping secret from Europe the details, even of battles already fought and operations already completed, may not be clear. But it is evident that the officers in the field and the officials in London do see an advantage in it; and it is not deniable that they have completely succeeded in their purpose. They have complete control of all the means of communication between the scene of action and the outside world. They have made such use of this control that not only are we not in possession of the Boer version of any of the recent fighting, but the details, from unofficial British sources, of the battle of the Modder, which was fought on the 27th of November, were not allowed to see the light in London until yesterday.

While there is no reason at all to distrust Lord METHUEN'S official accounts of that desperate fight, there is also reason to believe that the Boer reports would put a different face upon it in several respects. The British guess that the Boer loss was "tremendous" in comparison with the British does not seem to be very well founded. The Boers fought under cover, while the British were compelled to expose themselves in the open and to cross a "fire zone" more dangerous than any to which anybody who occupied it had ever been exposed. Moreover, the retreat of the Boers was conducted apparently in perfect order and without a sign of the panic that might have been expected to follow great losses. The British carried their immediate point, the command of the river and of the crossing, but at a fearful cost. The Boers are in a position to "fight another day." There is no reason to suppose that the passage of the Modder leaves an open road to Kimberley. Neither is that the view taken of the result in Great Britain. In fact, the tone of the British press implies a consciousness that Mr. CHAMBERLAIN'S diplomacy has had a graver issue than its author or any one else expected. Of the ultimate result there can be no doubt. But in the meanwhile it appears that Great Britain needs more troops in South Africa than she has there, and, with the very "household regiments" ordered to the scene of war, it is by no means clear where the additional troops needed are to come from or how they can be soon got ready.

Meanwhile Gen. SHERMAN'S famous remark that "war is hell" is receiving its exemplification. While the British are so much more highly civilized than the Boers, it does not appear that the actual combatants of the rank and file on the British side have any advantage over their enemies in that respect. The accounts of the battle leave very little to choose in point of primitive savagery. While it is charged that one side fired upon field hospitals and ambulances, upon the other it is admitted that Boers were shot and bayoneted after they had surrendered. It is appalling to think what a legacy of race hatred such a war will leave behind it, and it is a reproach to civilization that the questions at issue should not have been found susceptible of some more humane settlement.

THE HOMELY FORTH BRIDGE.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Anent your recent illuminating editorials on bridge designing "as she is" practiced from an editorial chair, and, with the aid of a kodak, taking in the scope of European as well as American practice, may I ask if you have not neglected to consider the Hogarthian lines of beauty of the Forth Bridge, near the braw toon o' Edinburgh?

If there ever was a more homely, ungainly, clumsy, and stupidly appearing structure erected by the hand of man than this, then it has never been my ill-fortune to see it. And yet it perfectly fulfills its function; thus realizing the highest, the very highest, attainment of any manual production—efficiency of purpose. If it ever fails, 'twill only be from its own weight. Whether or not landscape gardeners and editorial experts could have hung it with drapery to produce a finer scenic effect without reducing the factor of safety, is a question you can answer as well as any other. But if my advice were called for, I would suggest experimenting on the pyramids of Ghizeh, where you will find benchmarks ready to start from, truly located and set by Col. Prout. If this experiment should fail, the reputation of the founders is so well established as not to be affected thereby.

And yet your moving motive, however far from the mark your intentions have landed, is worthy of commendation. There are yet two other phases of the subject you might consider, possibly with more certainty of logic, namely: the cost of aesthetic construction and the artistic qualifications of the political Bridge Commissions, the Controllers, and the Mayors, who, in fact, limit and determine, largely, the character of structure which the engineer must design within the limits of practicability. And there's the rub, and thereby hangs many a tale.

JOHN THOMSON,
President of the Engineers' Club.
374 Fifth Avenue, New York, Dec. 4, 1899.

Is This the Ugliest?

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Reading in your esteemed editorial of this morning on the looks of our new bridges:

And in no European country, we believe, not even in England, would it be possible to erect such important and conspicuous structures as the new bridges are to be without taking more safeguards than we have taken that they shall not be eyesores.

I am forced to the conclusion that you never nourished your mind by observing the Forth Bridge. EDWARD C. NORTH.

WHEN YOU ASK THE LORD TO SMITE.

Call on God to give His blessing
To your cause if you will;
Let the faith that was with Moses
Be your own in trouble still,

But remember, in the hour
When you ask the Lord to smite,
That your foe may be addressing

ORGANIZATION OF THE SENATE.

Republicans Will Insist Upon a Majority Upon All Committees—To Provide for New Possessions.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 5.—Three caucuses were held in the Senate end of the Capitol to-day. They were under the auspices respectively of the Republican, the Democratic, and the Independent Senators, the last named including the Silver Republicans and the Populists. Each meeting discussed reorganization of the committees and referred details to special committees.

Senator Allison presided at the Republican caucus, and was empowered to select a committee of nine to confer with the opposition and make the apportionment of members.

Senator Penrose made an inquiry as to what was to be done in the matter of filling the offices of the Secretary and the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate, but was informed that that subject was not embraced in the call.

There was a suggestion that the Republican representation on committees should be in proportion to the Republican membership of the Senate, and in reply to a question Senator Allison said that the Republicans numbered about five-eighths of the entire Senate.

After some discussion the suggestion was abandoned because of the effect that such a demand in the Senate would have upon the House, where the Republicans have proportionately a much smaller majority. There was, however, a general understanding that the Republicans should have a clear majority on all committees.

Senator Hale moved a committee on the insular possessions of the United States, and upon the suggestion of Senator Lodge agreed to amend his motion so as to provide for the two new committees, one to cover Cuba and the other to include the affairs of Puerto Rico and the Philippines. The motion was referred to the proposed Committee on Committees, but no disposition was made of a suggestion made sotto voce by Senator Mason that he, Senator Hoar, and Senator Hale should be given places on the proposed Philippine Committee.

The conference really delegated the whole subject to the Committee on Committees, which Senator Allison promised to appoint promptly.

The Democrats transacted no business beyond the unanimous selection of Senator Jones of Arkansas as Chairman of the caucus to succeed Senator Turpie, and the authorization of the Chairman to appoint a committee to confer with the Republican committee on the reorganization of the standing committees.

The Independents agreed to act with the Democrats in the organization of the Senate, and Senator Pettigrew was appointed to act as a member of the Minority Committee on Committees. This conference was attended by all the Silver Republicans and Populist Senators, of whom there are eight.

BILLS INTRODUCED IN THE HOUSE.

Representatives Offer 861, Together with 30 Resolutions.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 5.—The rush of bills in the House of Representatives yesterday was the greatest in the memory of House officials, the total being 861 bills, public and private, and thirty resolutions.

Among the bills introduced are those of Mr. Bingham (Penn.) authorizing the construction of the League Island Navy Yard dry dock, Philadelphia, of stone instead of wood, with a limit of cost of $1,100,000; by Mr. Sulzer (N. Y.) extending the time for building the East River Bridge to Jan. 1, 1905; by Mr. Elliott, for an investigation of the cause of yellow fever.

Representative Corliss (Mich.) introduced a bill for a Pacific cable to be built by the Government, to Hawaii, the Philippines, Japan, and China at a limit of cost of $8,000,000, of which $500,000 is to be immediately available. The route and general control are placed under a Pacific cable commission, including the Postmaster General and Chief Signal Service officer of the army.

Representative Tawney (Minn.) introduced in the House a resolution for the creation of a committee of seventeen members to be known as the Committee on Insular Affairs," to have jurisdiction over "affairs concerning insular territory, acquired or occupied under treaty with Spain of Dec. 10, 1898, including the Island of Tutuila, Samoa."

The resolution also provides that the committee shall be privileged.

Representative Gillett (Mass.) introduced a joint resolution for a Constitutional amendment for uniform divorce laws; Mr. Grout (Mass.) a Constitutional amendment against polygamy; Mr. Bartholdt (Mo.) a bill for postal savings banks; Mr. Graham (Penn.) for service pensions, and Mr. Mahon (Penn.) for establishing a bureau of public health.

Among the joint resolutions introduced in the House were those of W. Alden Smith (Mich.) for a pan-American conference to consider arbitration; inquiring of the Secretary of State as to German adulteration of wines and German discrimination against American beef, fruit, and horses; providing for a reciprocity commission, and calling for information as to the non-building of naval vessels on the great lakes.

Mr. Burton (Ohio) introduced a joint resolution for the abrogation of the treaty of 1817 with Great Britain, so far as it restricted the building of warships on the great lakes. Others were introduced by Mr. Ketchum, (N. Y.,) for a Constitutional amendment against church or ecclesiastical appropriations by States; by Mr. Stephens, (Texas,) for a Constitutional amendment authorizing an income tax; by Mr. Corliss, (Mich.,) for the election of Representatives for four years; by Mr. Roberts, (Mass.,) for a Constitutional amendment authorizing Congress to limit the hours of labor in States.

PLANNING HOUSE COMMITTEES.

Speaker Henderson May Name Them Before Christmas.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 5.—Speaker Henderson has not yet definitely determined when the committees of the House will be announced, whether before or after the holidays, but the expectation is that it will be just before the adjournment for Christmas. The time is required for conferring with new members and learning their capabilities for different lines of work. In the main it is expected that old members will retain their former places, and if this is observed there will be the following important vacancies:

Ways and Means, three Republicans; Appropriations, one Republican and one Democrat; Judiciary, four Republicans and one Democrat; Banking and Currency, four Republicans and two Democrats; Commerce, one Republican and one Democrat; Rivers and Harbors, two Republicans; Foreign Affairs, two Republicans and one Democrat; Military Affairs, five Republicans and two Democrats.

The three vacancies on Ways and Means are attracting special attention, among those mentioned for the places being Moody and McCall of Massachusetts, Littlefield of Maine, who succeeded Dingley, and William Alden Smith of Michigan.

Brief Session of the Senate.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 5.—To-day's session of the Senate lasted two hours and forty minutes, practically the entire time being consumed in the reading of the President's message. Little attention was paid to the reading by a majority of the Senators. Many of them did not remain in the Chamber; some quietly discussed matters of interest with their colleagues, and a few followed the reading from the pamphlet copies which had been placed on their desks.

At the conclusion of the reading the death of Senator-elect Hayward was announced, and the Senate adjourned.

CENSUS EXPERTS APPOINTED.

Men Named to Take Charge of Various Groups of Inquiries.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 5.—The Director of the Census to-day made the following appointments of special agents in charge of designated groups of inquiries:

Franklin Allen of New York City, Secretary of the American Silk Association, expert special agent in charge of silk manufacture statistics; William J. Battison of Boston, connected with the National Association of Wool Manufacturers, special agent in charge of wool manufactures statistics; Edward W. Parker of the Geological Survey, in charge of statistics of coke, petroleum, lead, copper, and other metals; George C. Houghton of Lynn, Mass., Secretary of the New England Shoe and Leather Association, in charge of statistics of leather and its products, and F. H. Newell of the Geological Survey, in charge of statistics on irrigation.

SIR HENRY TATE DEAD.

LONDON, Dec. 5.—Sir Henry Tate, formerly head of the firm of Henry Tate & Sons, sugar refiners, and donor of the Tate Collection and Picture Gallery, Westminster, is dead.

Sir Henry Tate was the greatest patron of art possessed by England in the latter half of this century. After he had made an immense fortune he set one aim before himself. That was the recognition in their own country of the merits of the modern English schools of painting. With this idea Sir Henry acquired a collection of masterpieces of English painters, and, when the terms of his offer to present them to the nation were not agreed to, built the Tate Gallery to house them, and gave both the building and its contents to the people.

Henry Tate was the founder of his own fortunes. He was born at Chorley, Lancashire, eighty years ago. His father was a poor country clergyman, and the poverty of the family made it necessary for the boy to earn his living at an early age. He was apprenticed to a grocer, and at the end of his apprenticeship started in business on his own account. He might have been a country grocer to the end of his days had he not become possessed by the idea that the methods of handling and refining sugar were antiquated and that a fortune awaited any one who could improve them.

Young Tate therefore went into the refining business in London, and it chanced one day that the inventor of a process for producing dry granulated sugar offered the patent to him. It had been refused by most of the other refiners in London, but Mr. Tate gave it a trial, with the result that before long the old damp sugar was completely driven out of the market and that the market belonged to Tate. The latter afterward secured another patent, for cutting sugar into cubes, and thereafter became one of the great millionaires of the British metropolis.

Until Mr. Tate made his offer of one of the most important collections of English pictures to the nation he was almost utterly unknown outside of business circles and the suburban society of Streatham. The letter in which he made the offer made him for a time one of the most-talked-of men in London. After the gift had been refused, because of the proviso that the nation was to build a home for the pictures, and Mr. Tate had thereupon bought the site of the old Milbank Prison and erected a gallery upon it, he was in 1898 made a Baronet. The title descends to his son, William Henry Tate of Liverpool.

Sir Henry made many other benefactions. It was said to be his rule to give half his income for the public good. The Hahnemann Hospital and Homeopathic Dispensary, in London, were built entirely by him, and so was the library of University College, Liverpool, which cost £16,000. To the same college he also gave £7,000 for scholarships.

GERMANY'S POLITICAL CLUB LAW

The Measure Prohibiting Coalition Will Be Repealed.

BERLIN, Dec. 5.—The prospective repeal of the Prussian law forbidding the affiliation and coalition of political clubs and societies has caused a great sensation to-day throughout Germany. Following Prince von Hohenlohe' successful appeal to the Emperor yesterday, the Cabinet to-day formally agreed to the repeal. It is also certain that the Bundesrath at to-morrow's special session, will agree to the repealing resolution, which the Reichstag passed some time ago, but which had not been considered by the Bundesrath.

Emperor William's objections, it appears, were due to his fear that repeal would increase Socialist agitation and the political power of the Socialist Party. He had expressed to the Imperial Chancellor a hope that the Cabinet would devise some means of preventing this.

The Cabinet, however, declined, feeling sure that the Reichstag would defeat any such attempt. Prince von Hohenlohe intends to-morrow solemnly to announce that repeal is an accomplished fact, thus nipping in the bud the intention of the Reichstag to rake him and the Government over the coals for not keeping a definite promise.

FRENCH CONSPIRACY CASES.

Court Suspends a Counsel for Making Insulting Remarks.

PARIS, Dec. 5.—In the Senate, sitting as a high court, to-day, Chief of Detectives Henion, on whose report the prosecution of the conspiracy cases is mainly based, testified in support of his allegations. He was frequently interrupted by counsel for the prisoners, who asked questions, to come to which M. Hennion refused to answer, which evoked protests.

Counsel Evain demanded that the court refuse to admit police reports as evidence, whereupon the court deliberated secretly and rejected the demand, at the same time sentencing one of the counsel to three months' suspension for remarks insulting to the court.

MARCONI INTERESTS THE KAISER

BERLIN, Dec. 5.—Emperor William's well-known interest in technical investigations, especially those relating to the navy, kept him for nearly five hours to-day at the High School of Technology, where the most interesting feature of the proceedings was a long lecture, illustrated with experiments, by Prof. Slaby on Signor Marconi's system of wireless telegraphy as applied in naval movements.

The lecture was based upon a series of experiments on board the Friedrich Karl, near Kiel, when the operator succeeded in communicating over distances of from 45 to 48 kilometers with a thirty-meter wire.

After the lecture the Emperor engaged the professor in a lively discussion, in which Baron von Senden-Bibran, Vice Admiral and chief of the Marine Cabinet, and Privy Councilor von Busley joined. His Majesty inquired particularly regarding the interference of opposing currents.

DISCUSS SUBMARINE BOATS.

BERLIN, Dec. 5.—The Society of Naval Architects met at Charlottenburg to-day. Emperor William, the Secretaries of State, the Prussian Ministers, and many high military and naval officers were present. The Grand Duke of Oldenburg presided.

Geheimrath Busley read a paper on "Submarine Boats," in which he said they offered no good prospects for the future, and congratulated the German Admiralty on abstaining from "costly and protracted experiments" and confining themselves to the construction of battleships, cruisers, and torpedo boats, adding that there was no reason to expect that the creation of a strong navy, as initiated by the Emperor, would be disturbed by fear of submarine boats. The paper was much applauded.

Austrian Legislative Committee Acts.

VIENNA, Dec. 5.—The committee appointed to deal with Paragraph 14, which conferred on the Government power to carry on the affairs of the nation by administrative decree in the event of parliamentary obstruction, has decided by a vote of 20 to 12 in favor of the elimination of the paragraph from the Constitution.

Prize for Physicians and Surgeons.

PARIS, Dec. 5.—M. Osiris, a wealthy Parisian, noted for his charities and public spirit, has presented to the Institute of France a sum representing an annual income of 32,000f., for a triennial prize of 100,000f. for the most remarkable work, or discovery of general interest, especially in the fields of surgery and medicine in exhibition years. The prize is open to all countries.

Criticise the Columbia's Sails.

GLASGOW, Dec. 5.—Members of the Shamrock's crew declare the Columbia is a far better designed boat. But, they claim, her sails set badly, and, they add, had the two yachts exchanged sails the Columbia would have won by an hour.

Three Hundred Armenians Massacred.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Dec. 5.—Private advices received here report that the Kurds have avenged the recent incursion of Russian Armenians into the Alashgerd district, in Turkish Armenia, by pillaging the Armenian village of Kostur and massacring 300 of the inhabitants.

San Salvador Revolt Suppressed.

BERLIN, Dec. 5.—A dispatch from Guatemala, received here under yesterday's date, says the revolt on the frontier of San Salvador has been suppressed.

MUSICAL AND DRAMATIC.

JOSEPH WEISS'S RECITAL.

A Programme of Piano Music at Knabe Hall.

Joseph Weiss, a pianist, whose performances arouse curiosity if nothing else, gave the third of his current series of recitals at Knabe Hall last night. His programme consisted of the following numbers: An organ piece by Bach arranged for piano by Mr. Weiss, Schumann's "Toccata," Chopin's fantasia in F minor, two rhapsodies, the A major intermezzo, Opus 118, B minor capriccio, Opus 76, and F major romance, Opus 11, of Brahms; Rubinstein's barcarole in G and "Es blinkt der Thau," Liszt's Sixth and Fourteenth Hungarian Rhapsodies, "Loreley" and "Gnomenreigen," the Strauss-Tausig "Nachtfalter," and Schubert-Tausig "Marche Militaire."

Mr. Weiss is a pianist of singular personality. He plainly has a strong feeling for all the music which he plays, especially that of Brahms, and at times he plays beautifully. He did so in the cantabile of the Bach piece, which was sung tenderly and with lovely tone color, and in the little passage of recitative near the end of the Chopin fantasia, which he declaimed with his right hand in a dramatic manner. But he appears much of the time to be in search of effects not to be found by any rational process of analyzing the music, and the result is an exaggeration of subsidiary details, to the detriment of the leading melodic ideas. This finds further issue in the obliteration of the rhythms of some compositions and a general destruction of the formal outline.

This unfortunate, for Mr. Weiss has temperament and a fine command of tone color. The former is not wisely guided, and that leads to a sad misuse of the latter. Yet there are points of interest in his playing, as there must always be in those of really earnest players. Last night he indulged the eccentricity of running Schumann's "Toccata" and the Chopin fantasia together without a break between them, thus uniting two widely different styles. But as he played the Schumann piece in a very muddled manner, perhaps the difference in styles was not so marked as it might have been to the general hearer. He also treated Brahms's A major intermezzo as an introduction to the B minor capriccio, which showed a shocking lack of respect for the family rights of keys.

TO RETURN TO THE STAGE SOON.

Mrs. E. L. Fernandez to Play Again After a Long Retirement.

Mrs. J. L. Fernandez, who is probably one of the most widely known members of the theatrical profession, has decided to return to the stage, after an absence of twelve years. She has made arrangements to make her appearance some time during the month of January. She will play a low-comedy part—that of a ballet mistress—in a new musical comedy, as yet unnamed, which is to follow the engagement of Edward E. Rice's extravaganza, called "Little Red Riding Hood," which will be the attraction to succeed Miss Alice Nielsen when her season terminates at the Casino.

The production will be made under the direction of George W. Lederer. Mrs. Fernandez' last appearance with a professional company was with Mme. Modjeska when the Polish actress produced "Odette" at the Standard Theatre under the management of Daniel Frohman in 1887.

IN AUSTRIAN POET'S MEMORY.

Anzengruber's Play Presented at the Irving Place Theatre.

Manager Conried's performance at the Irving Place Theatre last evening of Anzengruber's play, "Der Pfarrer von Kirchfeld," (The Parson of Kirchfeld,) in commemoration of the tenth anniversary of the death of the Austrian poet, a part of the receipts being devoted to a fund for erecting a monument over his grave, proved very successful. The presentation both in acting and mounting was creditable, and it was thoroughly appreciated by the large audience.

JAPANESE PLAYS IN BOSTON.

Actors and Dramatic Students from Tokio Present Two of Them.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Dec. 5.—An exposition of Japanese dramatic art was given at the Tremont Theatre yesterday afternoon by Otto Kawakami, Sada Yacco, and a company of dramatic students from Tokio. Two plays were given—a farce, called "Zingoro," (a story of a statuemaker, which proved to be a Japanese version of "Pygmalion and Galatea,") and "The Geisha and the Knight," a three-act tragedy, by Mr. Kawakami.

The actors spoke in their native tongue, and they were accompanied by weird and monotonous instrumental music and strident chanting or singing. The chief characteristics of their art were its action and its vividness. There was apparently little or no attempt to appeal to the imagination, but the emotions were portrayed with bluntness and fruity.

"The Geisha and the Knight" with us would be classed somewhere between a spectacle and a pantomime. The dialogue was limited, but the action was constant and vehement. The play opened with a fierce pitched battle. The next scene of the first act showed a second fight, in which the hero killed half a dozen of his foes with dexterity and dispatch. The second act brought forth an exciting duel, and the final curtain fell on another combat, with nearly every one on the stage in a more or less dilapidated condition. Yet, in the midst of all this extravagance, there was at times unquestioned power. Mr. Kawakami was ever dignified and impressive, and Mme. Yacco's death scene at the end of the play revealed tragic force.

LIGHTING PLANT FOR YONKERS.

Mayor Sutherland in His Annual Message Urges City to Buy One.

YONKERS, N. Y., Dec. 5.—The Common Council met this evening and organized by electing Alderman M. J. Walsh to succeed himself as Chairman. There was a big crowd present to hear the annual message of Mayor Sutherland, who began his second term in office to-day. Mr. Sutherland has shown indications of a socialistic leaning, and during the campaign this was used against him.

He advocated the municipal ownership of the lighting plant and called attention to the fact that Yonkers, which uses more than twice as many lights as Mount Vernon and is supplied by the same company, pays considerably more than Mount Vernon. In regard to the other things the city should acquire the title to he did not say much, holding that the lighting plant was of so great importance that the city's whole effort should be devoted to obtaining one of its own. He urged the establishment of a public market and other improvements.

He then gave warning to all city officials that hereafter they must be civil in their treatment of citizens having dealings with them. He said his reason for touching upon this matter was that he had received many complaints from citizens relative to the treatment they received from public officers. He reminded the officials that they were the servants, not the masters, of the citizens.

REMOVAL OF THE MAINE DEAD.

Contracts Made at Havana—Texas Now Near Hampton Roads.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 5.—Assistant Secretary Allen has received a letter from Capt. J. G. Greene, commandant of the naval station at Havana, saying that contracts have been executed for exhuming the remains of the dead of the battleship Maine buried in Colon Cemetery, and saying also that they can be removed to the United States at any time after the 15th instant.

The battleship Texas, which will be used for the transportation of these remains, is now on her way from Brunswick, Ga., to Hampton Roads, where she will coal and provision and then start for Havana.

The remains are to be brought to Washington and reinterred in the National Cemetery at Arlington with full military honors.

Atlantic Gales Predicted.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 5.—The Naval Hydrographic Office has made the following forecast for the North Atlantic Ocean for the month of December: "Frequent gales north of the thirty-fifth parallel; occasional gales latitude 25 degrees to 35 degrees north. Frequent storm areas along the transatlantic routes, moving northeasterly, followed by strong west and northwest gales; areas often extending south of Bermuda and the Azores. Occasional northers in the Gulf of Mexico. Fogs east of Newfoundland. Ice not probable south of the fiftieth parallel."

TELEPHONE FIGHT RUMORS

Plans of Independent Concerns to Bring About Competition.

WIRES NOT LAID OR STRUNG

Metropolitan and Manhattan Railway Officials Deny the Reports Affecting Those Companies.

Stories that set forth, in substance, that W. J. Latta's Telephone, Telegraph and Cable Company of America, the Knickerbocker Telephone and Telegraph Company, of which W. H. Eckert, brother of Gen. Thomas T. Eckert, President of the Western Union Telegraph Company, is President, and the Board of Trade and Transportation's People's Telephone Corporation, of which Darwin R. James is President, are consolidated, and that they have stolen a march on the American Bell Telephone Company, or, rather, the New York Telephone Company, by stringing the city with wires and cables in the Metropolitan Street Railway conduits and along the routes of the Manhattan Railway Company, were not confirmed yesterday. In the financial district many well-informed men characterized the stories as tentative and put forth to excite public attention and bring forth comment. A story that to insure a merger of the three companies named two-thirds of the stock of the People's had been deposited with Dill, Bomeisler & Baldwin was denied by all interests.

It was, however, fairly well established that negotiations toward a working agreement between the three companies are well advanced, that the Knickerbocker and the People's Companies will be the construction companies of the Latta Company, and that there should no longer be any doubt that a fight between the Bell Telephone Company and the independent companies is "on," the latter having the support of the Metropolitan Street Railway Company, or Traction Company, which is spoken of as the "Whitney syndicate."

President Latta said last evening: "I have nothing to say on the subject except that we have been, are, and will be working to an end. I may add that we desire the newspapers and the public to let us alone. We have nothing to say. Let all have a little patience. We will show something tangible and important shortly."

President James said he did not care to discuss the situation "too finely." "We may," he added, "operate as construction companies under Latta's Company. The People's aim is to bring about lower telephone rates, and we're going to have lower rates. Our temporary offices are at 27 and 29 Pine Street. As to whether we have strung wires or not, I have nothing to say. Ask President Vreeland of the Metropolitan. But it will not be much trouble to discover that the Metropolitan Street Railway Company, in laying its plans for an underground trolley, had this in view. It will take some time to give the public cheaper telephone, but it won't be over a year before it gets them. As to the Bell people, we're in for a fight and shall win."

Hopkins J. Hanford, a Director and General Manager of the People's, said: "So far all that can be said is that we, the People's, Knickerbocker, and Latta's company, have agreed not to fight one another. We are to be distinct and yet work in harmony. We have done no stringing. The system in this city has not been charted. This would take months. Work on the plan of the People's is progressing, some contracts have been let, draughtsmen and engineers are busy, and no time is being lost."

President Eckert said that the headquarters of the Knickerbocker would be at Elm and Broome Streets, in the Astor Building. Of the reports current, he said: "The stories are so twisted that I shall not submit to an interview on the subject."

President Charles F. Cutler of the New York Tephone Company said: "All that I know of opposition is from the newspapers. We have no defense and nothing to offer. I have no comment to make on the stories that are current."

The stories that wires had already been laid in the ducts of the Metropolitan Street Railway Company were denied last evening by President Vreeland. "The report is absolutely false," said he. "I know nothing of the so-called plans of the new telephone companies as published in the newspapers. There are no negotiations leading to any such arrangement in the near future or at any time that I know of."

This denial was supplemented by Thomas F. Ryan, a Director of the Metropolitan Company, who said: "It is not true that wires have been strung. There is nothing in these stories. As to these telephone plans, I know nothing."

William C. Whitney professed ignorance of the reported telephone combination and refused to make further comment.

A denial that the People's Company had strung telephone cables on the structure of the Manhattan Railway Company, as a part of its plans, was made by Alfred Skitt, Vice President of the company. Mr. Skitt said he had heard of no such arrangement.

In connection with the impending war with the Bell Telephone Company, considerable comment was made because of the extraordinary rise on Monday of General Carriage and that the further advance yesterday from 135 to 180 without sales, but the Street refused to be unduly surprised at these advances. To all appearances the stock could be put to 500 as easily as it has been advanced to 180, for no stock is offered and it is said that there is no stock that can come upon the market. Report has it that the stock is all pooled and cannot be freed until after Jan. 1. Some stock was offered, but it was in the form of a seller's sixty-day option and was not taken. One hundred shares were offered in this way at 150, while at the time 175 regular was bid.

It was reported in the afternoon that the remarkable advance was due to the fact that efforts were being made to obtain the rights of the company in order to construct electrical subways in this city for the use of the People's Company to compete with the Bell Telephone Company, this right, it was said, being granted by the charter of the General Carriage Company. This report later was said to be unfounded. An officer of the company said that no such power as that to construct subways was granted by the General Carriage Company's charter. This and other similar intimations have been heard since the stock attracted attention by its phenomenal advance, but the rise in General Carriage still remains unexplained.

SANTOS COFFEE VESSEL SUNK.

The Lassell Rammed by the Red Star Liner Friesland and Beached on the Staten Island Shore.

The Red Star Line steamship Friesland ran yesterday morning into the steamer Lassell, which, laden with her cargo of coffee from Santos, was at anchor off Quarantine. The Friesland's prow made a hole large enough to sink the other steamer, but quick action on the part of tugs that went to the Lassell's assistance enabled her to be beached and saved a portion of her cargo.

The Lassell arrived from Santos with 23,000 bags of coffee on Saturday, and was prevented from landing her cargo by the Board of Health, which feared the introduction of bubonic plague. The Friesland arrived early yesterday morning and lay at anchor at Quarantine for a couple of hours. The flood tide swung her round with her nose pointing outward, and when she started for her berth in the North River at 8:10 A. M. she attempted to go about so as to head up the bay. As the boat begun making headway the pilot saw that the flood tide would carry him against the Lassell, which was lying at anchor before him. The engines were stopped and the bells were rung to reverse, but somehow the machinery did not obey, and the Friesland glided along toward the Lassell.

The Captain of the Friesland shouted to let go the starboard anchor, but before the momentum of the steamer could be checked her jibboom passed across the deck of the Lassell and her bow cut deep into the steamer on the port side and abaft the foremast, and carried away the derricks. A sailor of the Lassell leaped over the side of the steamer and tried to force canvas into the hole, but without success. Several men hurried into the hold, and on returning reported that the water was pouring in at a perilous rate. When the Friesland drifted astern she swept away davits and stanchions from the Lassell, and a clean, narrow cut was seen in the wounded vessel's side.

In the meantime, the sailors of the Lassell were ordered to shift the coffee to starboard, and succeeded in moving about 2,000 bags. The water gained so rapidly that it was seen the steamer would soon sink. Towboats hurried to assist, and soon the tugs Ceres, W. J. McCaldin, J. A. Garfield, and Charles W. Russell and the Quarantine boats Governor Flower and Charles F. Allen succeeded in fastening lines to the Lassell. They towed her toward the Staten Island shore and beached her on a soft mud bottom near Clifton. The water was then over the furnaces.

Deputy Health Officer Sanborn and his aides remained in charge of the vessel and kept outsiders off. The inhabitants of Clifton were afraid that the rats would escape from the Lassell and swim to shore and spread the bubonic plague. Sixteen men were sent from the Health Office of Richmond Borough to kill the rats, should any of them reach the shore. The men remained on duty all last night. The Merritt wreckers patched up the hole in the Lassell last night, and expect to float her to-day. As soon as possible after the collision lighters were sent to take off the coffee that was still undamaged by the water, and half of the cargo was thus saved. The coffee was insured.

The Friesland escaped with very little damage and reached her pier, No. 15 North River, at 9:45 o'clock. Policemen refused all admittance to the ship, and Capt. Shackford, Superintendent of the pier, declined to talk about the accident. The pilot who had brought the boat in hastened to make his report to the Pilot Commissioners. He said he was on the bridge and gave the signal to start at slow speed. The flood tide was carrying the Friesland against the Lassell, and so he rang the bell to stop and gave the full speed astern signal. This was not answered, and he had to repeat the signal twice. By that time the Friesland was close to the Lassell, and it was too late to avoid the collision. The officers of the International Navigation Company, which owns the Red Star Line, declined to make a statement as to the cause of the accident.

Santos Coffee Not Landed Here.

The masters of the steamers Roman Prince and Ragusa, which arrived last week with coffee from Santos, entered their vessels at the Custom House yesterday, as officers of the J. W. Taylor and Lassell had done the day before. Busk & Jevons, agents of the J. W. Taylor, obtained from Collector Bidwell general orders to place the coffee brought by that vessel in warehouse at the Erie Basin, but President Murphy of the Board of Health, who was in touch with the customs authorities, prohibited the landing of the cargo anywhere in the city. Busk & Jevons said yesterday that they had abandoned hope of landing the coffee here, and that the J. W. Taylor would proceed to sea as soon as clearance papers could be obtained, but they did not know for what port she would sail.

SENATOR HAYWARD DEAD.

Succumbed in Nebraska City Yesterday —His Long and Honorable Career in Law and Politics.

NEBRASKA CITY, Neb., Dec. 5.—United States Senator Hayward died this morning. Soon after he was elected to the Senate he was stricken with paralysis while addressing a political meeting, and since then his death has been almost daily expected.

Monroe Leland Hayward was born at Willsborough, Essex County, N. Y., on Dec. 22, 1840. He spent his youth there, and when the war of the rebellion began he enlisted in the Twenty-second New York Infantry. Later he was transferred to the Fifth Cavalry, serving until December, 1862, when he was discharged for disability resulting from sickness. Returning home, he entered the Fort Edward Collegiate Institute, from which he was graduated in 1866.

Soon thereafter he went to Whitewater, Wis., whither his father had removed. There he read law, and was soon admitted to the bar.

Then he went to Nebraska City, Neb., and engaged in the practice of his profession, and soon took front rank at the bar. He prospered financially, and by fortunate investments accumulated a competence, the bulk of which he invested in farming lands.

He was a member of the Nebraska State Constitutional Convention in 1875, and in 1880 he was appointed to fill out an unexpired term on the District Court bench. He was a leading member of the State Board of Agriculture and also of the State Agricultural Society.

He achieved his principal prominence before the people in 1898, when he was the Republican candidate for Governor. Although defeated, he reduced the fusion majority from 18,000 to 3,000.

As soon as it was learned that the Legislature was Republican ex-Judge Hayward announced his candidacy for the United States Senate, and on March 8 of the current year he was elected over William Vincent Allen, the fusion candidate, by a vote of 74 to 58.

Senator Hayward leaves a wife, one daughter, and two sons. One son, Edwin P. Hayward, is a Surgeon in the army. The other, William H. Hayward, was a Captain in the Second Nebraska Regiment in the war with Spain. Mrs. Hayward was Miss Jennie Pelton of Putnam County, N. Y.

CONTEST FOR THE SENATORSHIP.

No Doubt that ex-Senator Allen Can Name Mr. Hayward's Successor.

Special to The New York Times.

LINCOLN, Neb., Dec. 5.—Ex-Senator Allen, now a District Judge, can name the successor of Senator Monroe L. Hayward, who died at his home in Nebraska City, this morning. This is the sentiment of the Fusionists in Nebraska to-day, and there is no doubt that Gov. Poynter will regard their wishes. Allen will be tendered the position, and should he not accept it, he will suggest to the Governor who should be appointed. That his wishes will be followed is not questioned. It is not believed that he will accept the appointment, because he is a candidate for the position to be vacated one year hence by Senator Thurston, and the acceptance of the office now to run for one year only would not strengthen his chances in the next campaign.

The death of Senator Hayward makes it necessary that the Legislature which is to be chosen next November shall elect two United States Senators for Nebraska. This means that a battle royal will occur in this State next year. With a Presidential campaign on in which a Nebraskan will be the candidate for President, an entire State ticket to elect, and a Legislature that will choose Senators, it will be decidedly interesting, and Gov. Poynter, a Populist, will act with great caution in making any move that may have a bearing on the political situation. The Democrats are demanding that a Democrat be appointed. Populists are opposing such an appointment and clamoring for Allen, who was the candidate of the Fusionists in the last Legislature.

Rumors indicating that Bryan will be appointed can be denied on the best of authority. Speaking to a friend recently Gov. Poynter expressed the hope that he would not be called on to appoint a Senator, but intimated that in no event would Mr. Bryan's name be considered for the position. Should Bryan be defeated for President and Nebraska elect a Populist Senator next year, Bryan could then be made a United States Senator. Mr. Thompson, National Committeeman for Nebraska, and Gilbert M. Hitchcock, editor of The Omaha World-Herald, are prominent Democratic candidates for the place.

Gov. Poynter to-day gave assurance that he would act promptly when the time came. Should Allen conclude to accept the appointment the matter would be ended there; if he does not, one of the greatest political fights ever seen in the State will occur, and it may prevent fusion in Nebraska next year. Mr. Bryan may be able to prevent such a fight, but this is doubted.

ACTION IN THE SENATE.

Resolutions of Regret Proposed by Senator Thurston Adopted.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 5.—The announcement of the death of Senator Monroe L. Hayward of Nebraska was received by the Senate with sincere regret. Although he was not officially a member of the body, he was well known to many of the Senators and by them was held in high regard. At the conclusion of the reading of the President's message the Senate adopted the following resolutions of regret presented by Senator Thurston of Nebraska:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with deep regret and profound sorrow of the death of the Hon. Monroe L. Hayward, lately elected Senator from the State of Nebraska.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate a copy of these resolutions to the House of Representatives.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the Senate do now adjourn.

Upon the adoption of the resolutions President Frye declared the Senate adjourned.

CHILD LABOR IN BROOKLYN.

State Factory Inspector Williams Takes the Matter Up.

ALBANY, Dec. 5.—State Factory Inspector Williams has sent a letter to Mrs. Ruth Huntington Sessions of Brooklyn, who has been quoted as criticising the employment of working children in Brooklyn and the enforcement of the child labor law by the Deputy Factory Inspectors to the effect that "the conditions are such that I believe some of the Deputy Inspectors must be either taking bribes or neglecting their duty."

Inspector Williams in his letter adds: "If you have any specific information that would justify the making of such a charge, you could perform no greater public service than by communicating such information to me."

WHAT IS DOING IN SOCIETY.

A touch of Winter in the air yesterday made a very noticeable change in the appearance of the avenue and the uptown fashionable streets. Dark Winter gowns and furs made their appearance almost as if by magic, and people moved along briskly, while the closed automobile cabs were substituted for the open ones in which the lovers of the new craze who do not own automobiles of their own have been disporting themselves for some time past. As very often happens on the first really cold day of Winter, when furnaces and fireplaces hitherto unused are called into play, there were a number of fires during the day up town—one of which, that at the Marlborough, threatened to be serious and gave the crowd of promenaders unwonted excitement and amusement. One of these fires, slight in itself and soon put out, but which brought the engines and thronging crowds, occurred at the Calumet Club, at Fifth Avenue and Twenty-ninth Street.

A year ago to-day the late Earl of Strafford and Mrs. Samuel J. Colgate were married at noon in Grace Church chantry. It is difficult to realize that a year has elapsed since this wedding, which produced so much excitement in society, and that for over half that short space of time the bride of a year ago has been for the second time a widow. The Earl had succeeded to the Earldom only on the death of his brother, early in 1898. Little has been heard here of late of the Countess of Strafford, who has naturally been in deep mourning and living in seclusion since the Earl's death. It is, however, expected that she will come over in the Winter or the early Spring to visit her relatives here.

As was announced yesterday, the curious suit between the two sisters, Mrs. Edward Lyman Short and Mrs. Robert Ralston Crosby, which came up for trial Monday morning, was settled out of court, and it is understood that Mrs. Short and Mrs. Crosby will meet at an early day at Mrs. Short's house, at 20 West Thirty-seventh Street, and make an amicable division of the family heirlooms there, in which they have a joint interest. Thus ends one of the most remarkable family contentions that has ever been made public in New York, and both families are being congratulated on having adjusted their difficulties without further publicity. Mr. Short's curious and mysterious but clever letter to Mrs. Crosby, in which he called her "The Veiled Prophetess of Khorassan," was part of the evidence that would have been produced had the suit been proceeded with on Monday.

Aymar Sands will give a dinner on Monday, Dec. 18. The report that she was to give one last evening was erroneous. This dinner will be for Miss Sands and her young friends.

Some two hundred young men and women met last night in the Dowager's suite of the Astoria Hotel at the first of the fortnightly dances. The list of subscribers to these dances, which will now take place every fortnight until the end of the season, has already been published in this column. The members of the organization are drawn chiefly from the younger element in society not included in the junior cotillion list.

The first Wednesday cotillion took place last night at Delmonico's. The Board of Governors especially requested an early attendance, setting the opening hour at 9 o'clock, having in mind that most of the men are in business, and a few hours of sleep are to them almost a necessity. The patronesses met their wishes half way, and at some slight inconvenience, such as a hasty or an early dinner, were on hand to receive the guests as they assembled. These patronesses were Mrs. John Burling Lawrence, Mrs. William L. Trenholm, Mrs. Oliver Livingston Jones, Mrs. Samuel Spencer, Mrs. Algernon S. Sullivan, Mrs. Robert Nicol, Mrs. John W. Boothby, and Mrs. Philip A. H. Brown, Mr. Arthur Skelton Wily of Virginia led a spirited cotillion, dancing with Miss Mary Newbold Lawrence of this city.

The annual dinner which marks the anniversary of the St. Nicholas Society will be held at Delmonico's up-town building this evening. There promises to be an unusually large attendance of members, for the Christmas festival anniversary dinner of this old organization is always more largely attended than the Easter dinner or Pasch festival. The new President, Mr. F. de Peyster Foster, will preside, and the new Stewards, who are William Pierson Hamilton and Paul Gibert Thebaud, will also be present with their fellows to provide for the comfort of the guests. The Christmas favors, always given out at this dinner, are not the least of its attractive features.

Society is very gay just now in Albany. The first of the official dinners was given there this week. Chief Judge and Mrs. Alton B. Parker entertained on this occasion on Monday, and Gov. and Mrs. Roosevelt were of course among the guests. Judge Parker and Mrs. Parker will be at home on Wednesdays at the Ten Eck. Last evening Gov. Roosevelt and Mrs. Roosevelt were the guests of honor at a dinner given by Col. William Graham and Mrs. Graham. On Saturday the Governor and his wife celebrated the thirteenth anniversary of their marriage at the Executive Mansion. There is still much gossip in Brooklyn over the discontinuance of the Ihpetonga Balls, which were as much an institution on that side of the bridge as were the Patriarchs' in New York, or, as it is always called in Brooklyn, "Manhattan." The causes for discontinuance were the same as those which affected the life of the Patriarchs. The day of the semi-public ball is over, and Brooklyn as much as New York is cut up into small sets and cliques. Many New Yorkers were in the habit of attending the Ihpetonga Balls, and many New York society people only knew the City of Churches at these annual balls and at the weddings and funerals.

The only "function" of note, if one excepts the many benefits for the fitting out of hospital ships and for the relief of families left behind by the British Army, in London, these times, will be the carnival at Niagara, which takes place on Friday. Here in New York the craze for skating on Monday mornings has waned a little, and one does not see the same set at the rink as one did two Winters ago. In London, however, society supports handsomely two rinks, and it is the proper thing to drop in to tea in the afternoon, and, if one does not skate, become a spectator of the most graceful of Winter pastimes. Miss Ogden Goelet is one of the most enthusiastic skaters in London. She is described frequently as being at either Prince's or Niagara, her favorite costume being a red skirt lined with the palest blue and a shirt to match.

In a long article about New York and London and the link which binds them, Vanity Fair declares that "everything American is smart just now," and the detailed accounts of the famous chantant arranged by Mrs. Brown Potter at Claridge's certainly illustrated the fact that American women are among the best dressed if not the best dressed in London. Miss May Goelet wore on that occasion a charming frock of blue, with a toque of the same shade. Mrs. Arthur Paget was in cream color, embroidered in black, with a shaded pink toque and a pearl necklace and earrings. The Duchess of Marlborough wore crimson and black, elaborately embroidered, and her famous black fox furs and pearls. Mrs. Ogden Goelet was in black, with a black toque and enormous black pearls.

A DAY'S WEDDINGS.

Luyster—Thomas.

Miss Rhoda Cary Thomas, daughter of Surrogate-elect Abner C. and Mrs. Thomas and granddaughter of the late Abel C. Thomas of Philadelphia, and, on her mother's side, of the late Isaac Van Zandt Carnahan of Cincinnati, and grandniece of Alice and Phoebe Cary, was married at 9 o'clock last evening to Mr. Cornelius Wesley Luyster, Jr. The ceremony was performed at All Angels' Church, Eighty-first Street and West End Avenue, by the Rev. W. W. Bellinger of Utica, N. Y., assisted by the Rev. S. Delancey Townsend, rector of All Angels'. The service was a choral one. The decorations were palms scattered about the church and white chrysanthemums and other white blossoms. Miss Ethel Thomas, a sister of the bride, was the maid of honor, and Miss Lucy Thomas, the bride's sister; the Misses Caroline F. and E. Ella Luyster, sister of the bridegroom, and Miss Gertrude O'Brien, Miss Frieda Frasch of Cleveland, Ohio; Miss Helen Hale of Philadelphia, Miss Alice Cary Kimball of Buffalo, N. She wore a tulle veil, and carried a bouquet of lilies of the valley and orchids. The maid of honor was in white organdie, with a white sash, and the bridesmaids also wore white organdie, but with wide green sashes. Two thousand invitations were sent out for the ceremony at the church. A number of pews were reserved for Company D of the Seventh Regiment, of which Mr. Luyster is a member. There was no reception following the ceremony, but a seated supper for the bridal party only was served at the residence of the bride's parents, 315 West Eighty-fourth Street, and after this there was a dance for the members of the bridal party.

Stockwell—MacCracken.

The interior of the old stone mansion at University Heights, the residence of Chancellor MacCracken, was beautifully decorated yesterday for the quiet home wedding of Miss Fay MacCracken and the Rev. Frederick Emerson Stockwell, pastor-elect of the Beverly Presbyterian Church, near Philadelphia. The walls of the large music room, in which the ceremony took place, were completely covered with wild Virginia smilax, while a chancel effect was created by an arrangement of great palms and cut palms with white roses and white chrysanthemums. The library, drawing room, and dining room were decorated with roses and chrysanthemums. The hall was festooned with holly and palms, and the stairway wreathed with Southern smilax and holly. The entrance to the music room, opposite the stairs, was an arch of green. The best man was President John Henry MacCracken of Westminster College, Fulton, Mo. The ushers were Messrs. Arthur and Edward Stockwell of Providence, J. Linn Ulmer of Philadelphia, the Rev. Willard Richardson, and Messrs. George and Henry Noble MacCracken of New York. The ceremony was performed by the father of the bride and his father, the Rev. Dr. W. Humpstone. The bride is a graduate of Vassar, and the guests outside of the family and immediate friends were graduates of Vassar and Yale. Following the ceremony in the church a reception was held at the home of the bride's parents, 291 Ryerson Street.

Miss Emma L. Mertens, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Mertens, and Mr. Charles E. CROKER'S QUICK RUN TO A FIRE.

Fire Chief Rattles Along in His Gasoline Automobile.

Fire Chief Croker tried going to a fire again last night in his gasoline automobile. A one-alarm call was turned in from the box at Church and Murray Streets at 10:07 P. M. The alarm was for a small fire at 13 Park Place, half way around the block.

Chief Croker was in the Great Jones Street engine house when the alarm was rung. He got into the little runabout locomobile, went down Broadway to Murray Street, and through that thoroughfare to the box at the Church Street corner. After a moment's delay there to find the exact location of the fire he swung around the block, and was in front of the burning building at 10:15.

The Chief seemed pleased with the performance of the automobile, and after seeing that the fire was only a small one started off up Broadway at a rattling pace.

MISS ANNA MILLAR A BANKRUPT

Manager of a Chicago Orchestra Has Liabilities of $7,504, Largely in This City.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Dec. 5.—The bankruptcy petition filed in the Federal Court by Miss Anna Millar, manager of the Chicago Orchestral Association, comes as a surprise to her creditors, who, it is hinted, will contest the proceedings on the ground that Miss Millar is drawing a good salary, and is not a bankrupt within the meaning of the law. In her petition in voluntary bankruptcy, Miss Millar estimates her liabilities at $7,504.54. Some of her creditors are:

H. W. Huttig, Muscatine, Iowa, $2,745; Musical Courier Company, New York, $2,400; Blumenberg Press, New York, $490; Richardson & Foos, New York, $121; Brentanos, New York, $84; Teresa Carreno, Berlin, (no account,) $350; Musical American, New York, $50; G. Schirmer & Co., New York, $15; Ed. Schuberth, New York, $4.

The failure is said to be due to several musical enterprises which Miss Millar backed, all of which proved financial failures.

PIANOLA RECITAL

TO-DAY,

Wednesday, December 6, at 3 P. M.

Admission Complimentary to All.

These Recitals are given for the purpose of demonstrating what we claim for the instruments—that they are musically artistic.

There has been a time-established prejudice against automatic musical instruments. This, naturally, emanated from the great artists whose knowledge of music and its possible effects has made them the most critical judges.

It is a significant fact, and one worthy of thoughtful consideration, that the Aeolian and Pianola have been indorsed by those who are recognized as the highest musical authorities throughout the world.

The complete reversion of opinion of these great critics has resulted from their investigation of the instruments. They testify to both surprise and admiration.

By attending these recitals you will have an opportunity of forming an opinion on exactly the same grounds—the direct evidence of the instruments' actual performance.

You are invited to examine the Aeolian and Pianola at the conclusion of the concert, and we shall be pleased to play for you any piece you may desire to hear.

While these instruments are capable of giving an artistic rendition of the most difficult selection, it must be borne in mind that they are so simple that any one can play them, whether he has or has not any musical knowledge whatever.

OUT TO-MORROW.

ENGEL ANGERED BY TAMMANY.

Councilman Has Quit the Executive Committee After a Dispute About Patronage.

Several hundred members of the Tammany Hall organization in the Eighth Assembly District who attended the regular monthly meeting of the organization last evening at Grand and Ludlow Streets received a surprise when their leader, Councilman Martin Engel, announced that he had resigned as a member of the Executive Committee of Tammany Hall.

Mr. Engel made a speech in which he said that he had gone to the Democratic Club Monday night and demanded that Henry J. Goldsmith, who had been appointed a Deputy Assistant District Attorney on Nov. 1 at a salary of $2,500, receive a five-thousand-dollar position, and that Assistant Corporation Counsel Rogers be transferred from the Bureau of Street Openings to the general office, and that his salary be increased from $2,700 to $4,000. He said that he had been told to wait until Richard Croker's return from Europe, but had refused to do this and had immediately handed in his resignation as a member of the Executive Committee. He said he did not believe that the district was receiving the recognition and patronage it should, and in concluding suggested the election of Secretary Lazarus Shapiro or ex-Alderman Philip B. Benjamin to the leadership.

As soon as Mr. Engel resumed his seat there was a clamor for recognition from the Chairman. Assistant Corporation Counsel Rogers was among the first to speak. He said that he was satisfied with his present salary, but would resign his position and leave the organization if Councilman Engel insisted upon resigning. Assemblyman-elect Cohen and Alderman-elect Forgers also said they would leave the organization and resign the offices to which they had been elected if their leader persisted in his intention to retire. Several other members of the organization announced that they would follow the leader. Councilman Engel reiterated his former statements and then disappeared from the hall.

After the meeting a telegram was sent to Senator Sullivan, who is at Hot Springs, Va., to return home and use his influence with Mr. Engel to withdraw his resignation. Before leaving the hall Mr. Engel asked that the preparations which were being made for a dinner in his honor on Dec. 11 be abandoned.

COFFEY COMES OUT UNHARMED.

Kings County Democratic Committee Meeting Peaceful.

The opponents of Senator Michael J. Coffey in the Kings County Democratic organization experienced a disappointment last night when the County Committee for 1900 met and organized. It had been expected by Mr. Coffey's foes in the organization that steps would be taken to discipline the Red Hook leader for his course in the recent campaign, but no such action was taken by the committee.

The only time the Coffey case figured in the proceedings of the committee was when a petition signed by 500 of the Senator's opponents in the Ninth Assembly District asking that he be brought to book for his attitude during the campaign was handed up to Chairman Moffett. This petition was promptly and without discussion referred to the Executive Committee for consideration when it meets and organizes next Tuesday night. The belief held among those present was that that was the last of the petition.

The studied avoidance of the Coffey matter by the committee was taken as an indication that Willoughby Street has decided not to force a fight with the Senator and that the auction room powers are disposed to placate the Ninth District leader.

Senator Coffey was not present at last night's meeting, but J. Morrissey Gray answered the roll call. James Moffett was re-elected Chairman of the committee. Michael Gru was elected Second Vice Chairman in place of Assemblyman John J. Cain, Senator Coffey's lieutenant. Cain was not present and was not a candidate for re-election.

ELECTION CASE INDICTMENTS.

Federal Grand Jury in Brooklyn Finds Some True Bills.

The Federal Grand Jury for November yesterday handed to Judge Edward B. Thomas in the United States District Court, Brooklyn, its presentment on the charges made by Superintendent of Elections McCullagh regarding fraudulent naturalizations. Superintendent McCullagh alleged that he had evidence to prove that hundreds of applicants had fraudulently obtained citizenship papers in Brooklyn and Manhattan.

Judge Thomas charged the Grand Jury to give especial attention to this matter. Superintendent McCullagh and certain of his deputies appeared before the Grand Jury at several of its hearings. A certain number of cases were selected for special investigation, and yesterday the Grand Jury handed to the Court indictments against the applicants in the cases in question.

The names of the persons against whom indictments have been found are withheld for the present. Judge Thomas issued bench warrants for the men.

ZANESVILLE, Ohio, Dec. 5.—J. A. Miller, a New York photographer who came here two years ago, was sentenced to-day by Mayor Jones of Shawnee to six months' imprisonment in jail and fined $100 for violation of the State law which prevents a married man masquerading as single.

Miller was engaged to marry Lena McClanahan, only daughter of U. H. McClanahan of Shawnee, and the wedding was fixed for last Sunday. On Saturday the young lady's father learned that Miller had a wife living in Jackson, Ohio, and the prosecution resulted.

PROBING THE CARTER FRAUDS.

Charges Against J. F. Gaynor and B. D. Green Before a Grand Jury.

SAVANNAH, Ga., Dec. 5.—The Grand Jury of the United States District Court, Judge Speer, spent most of the day investigating the charges against John F. Gaynor and B. D. Green of New York as copartners in the Atlantic Contracting Company for alleged complicity with O. M. Carter, late Captain of Engineers, United States Army, in defrauding the Government of certain large sums of money. It is believed now that the investigation will extend through the week, and that a report will not be made before Friday or Saturday.

Among those who have been examined are Edward I. Johnston of Washington, a special representative of the Department of Justice; Charles F. Graham, proprietor of the Pulaski House; James L. Gallagher, formerly an Inspector under Capt. Carter, and E. D. H. Gaynor, a brother of one of the parties to the case. Among the members of the Engineer Corps here to testify are Major John H. Truesdale, Major Frederick Babbott, and Major W. M. Black.

Abram J. Rose of New York of counsel for Capt. Carter is here watching the progress of the case. A number of witnesses are yet to be examined.

NEWS OF THE RAILROADS.

Report on the Income of Roads with 185,245 Miles of Line Shows Gross Earnings of $1,307,253,484.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 5.—A preliminary report on the income account of railways in the United States for the year ended June 30, 1899, has been compiled by the statistician to the Inter-State Commerce Commission from the returns of operating railway companies, representing 185,245 miles of line, received prior to Nov. 24. It shows that the gross earnings of the railway embraced in this advance report were $1,307,253,484 for the year ended June 30, 1899, or $7,057 per mile of line. Passenger earnings were $360,227,319; freight earnings, $913,358,488, and other earnings from operation, $33,667,677. The gross earnings shown in the final report for 1898 were nearly $60,000,000 less than this amount.

The operating expenses for the last fiscal year were $852,428,105, or $4,602 per mile of line. The net earnings, or income from operation, were $454,825,379, an increase of $31,073,304 being shown in this item for the year. Income from sources other than operation amounting to $49,176,168 was received by the railways included in the statement.

The report shows that the total income of the operating railways included therein was $504,001,547. The total deductions from income, embracing by the term interest on funded debt, rents for leased lines, taxes, ($44,165,714,) and various other charges against income, but not including dividends, were $371,018,518. This amount is $11,327,847 greater than the corresponding figures for 1898. The aggregate amount of dividends declared by the operating railways under consideration was $82,214,820. The comparative amount of dividends reported for the previous year was $66,039,465. The combination of the foregoing items results in showing a surplus of $50,768,209 from the operations of railways during the year, on about 98 per cent. of the mileage in the United States. The corresponding preliminary report for the previous year, covering 181,333 miles of line, showed a surplus of $42,604,999.

ELEVATED ROAD ENGINES WANTED.

Prospective Substitution of Electrical Motors Prompts Bids.

An important question involved in the changing of the motive power of the Manhattan Railway Company from steam to electricity is the disposition of the present engines which figure as an asset of about $1,600,000.

Russell Sage yesterday confirmed a report that many good offers had been made for this part of Manhattan's rolling stock. Some of them are from Europe, others from countries where railroads that do not need large lomocotives are in operation or building.

Some American contractors have asked for or have offered terms. A Manhattan engine costs new from $6,000 to $11,000, and it is believed that this part of the system's equipment can be disposed of at about 65 per cent. of the present value. All the engines are kept in good repair.

KILLED BY AN ELECTRIC WIRE.

New Jersey Man Cutting Down Trees Received a Fatal Shock.

RUTHERFORD, N. J., Dec. 5.—Charles Neurtier, thirty-three years of age, a resident of East Rutherford, was killed this morning by a live electric wire. He was removing trees on Paterson Avenue, in Wallington, and started to cut a telephone guy wire which was crossed with the electric light wire, the guy wire being connected with a tree he was to cut down.

Neuriter cut partly through the telephone wire and received the shock as he attempted to pull the ends apart. He leaves a wife and two children.

HURT IN AUTOMOBILE WRECK.

August Belmont's Conveyance Toppled Into Ditch with a Groom.

HEMPSTEAD, L. I., Dec. 5.—August Belmont purchased an automobile last week. In it to-day Charles Bartels, a groom, was taking James Smith, another groom, to the Belmont stock farm, at Babylon. At Farmingdale the machine went into a ditch. Bartels jumped in time. The automobile rolled over, with Smith under it.

He was badly bruised and burned by steam. Two ribs in his right side were broken. He was taken to a farmhouse. He was attended there, and later Mr. Belmont sent Dr. Finn of this place to look after him. The automobile was wrecked.

IRON COMPANIES TO COMBINE.

New Haven and Susquehanna Companies to be Consoljdated.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 5.—A majority of the stockholders and Directors in the New Haven and Susquehanna Iron Companies have agreed to consolidate in a new concern, to be called the Atlantic Iron and Steel Company, which will soon be incorporated with a capital of $10,000,000. The greater part of the stock will be absorbed by the stockholders of the New Haven and Susquehanna Companies, of whom a large number live in this city, and the consolidated concern will be controlled by the same persons who have been active in the direction of the old companies.

The first move of the Atlantic Company toward gaining a foothold in the iron market will be to erect a mammoth pipe mill at Columbia, Penn., which is designed to cost $800,000, and which it is expected will employ upward of a thousand men and distribute $40,000 a month in wages. The company will at once advertise for bids.

To avoid using the product of Western mills, the new company will use the "scalp" or output of mills in Columbia, Middletown, and York.

COUNTERFEITER ARRESTED.

TOLEDO, Ohio, Dec. 5.—Capt. E. A. Abbott of the United States secret service this morning identified in Cyrus Davis, arrested here Thanksgiving Day, Charles Johnson, one of the last of the Johnson family, who have been counterfeiters through three generations.

The grandfather of the Toledo prisoner was the first counterfeiter of Canadian currency, and died in a Dominion prison. John Johnson, father of Charles, was an expert engraver. Three sons became counterfeiters and produced the "Grant five," "Hancock two," and "Windom two."

Twelve years ago Johnson was arrested at Detroit for uttering "Grant Fives." He escaped, fled to Canada, was arrested, and served ten years for counterfeiting the "Commercial Tens," the finest work of counterfeiting on record in the Dominion.

Capt. Abbott found an outfit in Johnson's possession. The counterfeiter was to-day held for the Federal Jury.

Explosion in General Electric Works.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y., Dec. 5.—An explosion of combustibles occurred in Shop 55 of the General Electric Company at 8:40 o'clock to-night, and for a time fire menaced the entire building and the surrounding shops. Officials of the company declined to-night to give an estimate of the damage. They said, however, that the heaviest loss was the delay in work which the fire would cause.

CUT HER DAUGHTER'S THROAT.

Act of a Brooklyn Mother Recently Discharged as Cured from an Insane Asylum.

In a fit of insanity yesterday morning Mrs. Anna Glennan of 402 Douglass Street, Brooklyn, killed her five-year-old daughter, May, with a carving knife.

Mrs. Glennan, who is forty years old, lived with her husband, Thomas Glennan, a carpenter, her two young children, and her mother, Mrs. Ann Cusack. She had been confined in the Long Island State Hospital for eighteen months, and was discharged as cured on Sept. 1 last. She appeared to be rational up to yesterday.

Mrs. Glennan's mother left the house in the morning to attend mass at St. Augustine's Church. A few minutes later Glennan also went out, leaving his wife alone with the children. When Mrs. Glennan's mother returned she found little May lying lifeless on the kitchen floor with a big gash in her neck. Mrs. Glennan was near by, acting strangely and talking incoherently. Policeman Chamberlain was called in and he placed Mrs. Glennan under arrest. Ambulance Surgeon Bulkley of the Seney Hospital was called, but could do nothing but pronounce the child dead. The little girl had been stabbed on the right side of the neck.

There was no knife to be seen, but Mrs. Glennan, upon being questioned, went to a closet and took a large carving knife from a box. This she held up, indicating that it was the knife that had been used. There was no blood upon the knife, or any about the room, except where the child's head rested upon the floor. The police believe that Mrs. Glennan carefully cleaned the floor and the knife and washed her hands after the deed was committed.

Mrs. Glennan was taken before Magistrate Teale, in the Myrtle Avenue Police Court. While she was in court she kept muttering to herself. The case was adjourned until to-morrow.

CRUSHED UNDER A BIG WHEEL.

James Barrie, a machinist fifty-five years of age, of 194 Freeman Street, Brooklyn, was fatally hurt yesterday afternoon in the Chelsea Jute Mills in that borough, where he was employed. He was caught under an immense fly-wheel in the factory and nearly every bone in his body was crushed, but he lived for some time in agony while his shopmates chopped the floor away and extricated him.

The factory employs several hundred operatives, mosty women, and in the afternoon a piece of belting broke on a fly wheel on the second floor. The women were standing around waiting for the repairs to be made, when some one gave a wrong signal to the engineer in the basement, and he started the engines. Barrie was on top of the wheel and he was carried around and down to the floor, where he was crushed under the wheel. He was taken to the Eastern District Hospital, where he did.

SUDDEN DEATH IN A CLUB.

Heart Disease May Have Killed Knickerbocker Athletic Employe.

Joseph L. Moore, thirty years old, single, timekeeper and receiving clerk of the Knickerbocker Athletic Club, died there yesterday morning. It is thought death was due to heart disease. Coroner's Physician O'Hanlon will perform an autopsy to-day.

Moore lived at 203 East Forty-fourth Street, and had been employed in the club six months.

According to the story of the Superintendent, he went down to the bowling alleys at 10 o'clock to sleep. A few hours later some alley boys found him lying in the end of one of the alleys with a pair of boxing gloves for pillows.

Dr. J. Bentley Squier, Jr., a member of the club, was called in, but after looking at the man and refusing to express an opinion as to the cause of his death, said an ambulance ought to be summoned. The ambulance surgeon would give no opinion either of the cause of death. The man is of the same name as another man in the club some time ago, who was a witness in the Molineux case at the Coroner's inquest.

Dr. O'Hanlon, Coroner's physician, saw Moore, but when asked the cause of death he walked away. His questioner followed and asked him again the cause of death.

"Are you a member of the club?" asked Dr. O'Hanlon. The questioner informed him in the negative.

"I thought you were," he said. "Well, I can't tell the cause of death. I wouldn't dare say what it was before I perform an autopsy."

TEACHERS' SUITS ARE BEGUN.

Their Counsel Urges that the Cases Be Brought to Trial Speedily.

Lewis L. Delafield yesterday sent the following letter to Corporation Counsel Whalen:

"The New York School Teachers' Association, which is composed of a majority of the teaching staff in this county, and which may fairly be said to represent the entire body of teachers in our public schools, has retained me to institute such proceedings as will obtain a judicial decision as to the validity of the salary schedule adopted by the School Board on May 17. I have accordingly prepared, and send you herewith, the complaints in actions instituted by two teachers, which will, I think, enable the city to raise such an issue as will fairly present to the courts all questions which are now ripe for judicial action.

"It is my belief that if the city will promptly interpose answers to these complaints and will unite with me in an application to the court that the actions be preferred, they can readily be tried within a week. There can be no doubt that a prompt determination of the questions involved in these actions is important, not only in the interest of the city, but also as a matter of justice to the faithful class of its servants, in whose interest I have the honor to write. And I may add that I am fully persuaded that you will accord to these considerations the full weight to which they are entitled, and that you will unite with me in the effort to present the real questions at issue to the courts with the least possible delay."
